CHILTON COUNTY NEWS

VOLUMN XXIII — CLANTON, ALABAMA, THURSDAY, JULY 19, 1945 — NUMBER 29

Clanton Accepts Service of State Planning Board

In order that the city of Clanton might have the benefits of the State Planning Board, an organization set up under an act of the 1943 Legislature, the city council last week contracted with this board to furnish information, make surveys, and help in planning the future developments of Clanton.

A charge often brought against the average American city is that it was poorly planned, or in most cases, not planned at all.

Many of our people in Chilton County and in other parts of the state have the feeling that Clanton is to experience quite a building boom after the war. If considerable development is to take place then the city council is wise in ntaking steps to assist and direct this building in a constructive and a satisfactory manner.

To work with this state commission there had to be created a local commission representing the people of the community. The personnel of this commission is Leo Thompson, James Q. Wade, and H. G. Heflin, for the city council, for the citizens, J. Hance Alred, H. C. Arnold, Mrs. J. Lee Smith, George Jester, I. S. Levine and Patterson Hicks. A preliminary meeting was held in the Mayor's office July 13, at which time H. C. Arnold was elected chairman of the commission and Patterson Hicks secretary.

Mr. W. O. Dobbins, H. K. Francis, and Miss Mary Helen Crowley represented the state planning board. A contract was made and signed and plans were put into effect for the commission to start work immediately in collecting information regarding the future planning of Clanton as a city.

Truck Tires For Chilton County Very Critical

The truck tire panel is doing everything possible to try to keep the trucks of Chilton county on the go, but it is now impossible to take care of even one-third of the applications being turned in to the board.

We are receiving up to 15 applications per day from men stating they have had blow-outs and can't go and the allowance we have for the County for the month of July is only 6½ tires per day, which must be distributed not only to these men but to the 300 applications which we now have on file.

Anyone can readily see that it is now utterly impossible for the members of the board to okey any applications for those calling on them when they find themselves in need until we have received some help from the State or District boards.

You may rest assured that all is being done to help keep your trucks on the go and just as soon as conditions warrant, your needs will promptly be taken care of.—Member of Truck Panel.

Mrs. Charles Honeycutt and Miss Mary Nell Honeycutt from Siluria Ala., spent Monday in Clanton.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter F. Haywood and Mrs. Herbert Newell spent the week end in Montgomery with relatives and friends.

In closing, I urge all members of these churches to make a special effort to attend each service and also we invite everyone to come as much as possible.

We urge all Christians to pray for a lasting revival at these places, and especially that souls will be saved.

Yours in His services,
REV. R. E. WILKINS.

ISABELLA

The services at Mulberry were very well attended at both morning and evening. We all enjoyed a solo sung by O. F. Davenport, Jr., at Sunday School, and a piano duet was enjoyed and played by Dora Francis and Ruth Edna Grooms at B.T.U. Sunday night.

The W.M.U. Quarterly Meeting of Chilton Association was held at Mulberry Wednesday, July 11th, and was called to order at 10:30 a.m. by the President. Mrs. C. L. Wilkins opened by singing, "Footsteps of Jesus," followed by prayer, given by Bro. Homer Carroll.

A very inspiring devotional was given by Ruth Cummings, followed by a solo by Marcelee Davenport, both from Mulberry. A business session and roll call of churches, President in charge. Then a playlet was given by Liberty Hill Sunbeams, which was very good. Mrs. Bagget of Montgomery gave a fine talk on training of tomorrow's leaders. Song, "Praise Him," was sung after which a very inspiring message on, "Youth and Tomorrow's World," given by Rev. R. E. Wilkins. Lunch was served in the basement to over 100 by the hostess church.

The afternoon program was: A devotional, given by R.A.'s from Bethsalem, and a very impressive playlet put on by G. A.'s from Thorsby.

Business session and conferences for young people held in the basement with young peoples leader, Mrs. Akins Collins in charge. Dismissed with prayer.

Don't forget, teachers of D.V.S. will meet at the church Saturday at 11:00 a.m., and the daily Vacation Bible School at Mulberry will begin Monday morning, July 23. There will be classes from Beginners through Intermediates.

The revival will begin at Mulberry the second Sunday in August, with Bro. Frank Smith of Hartselle, doing the preaching.

The general assembly of the W.M.U. will meet at the church on Wednesday, July 25, at 2:30 p.m.

Mr. Emmett Conway and family of Birmingham were visiting relatives in this community Sunday.

Miss Dot Williams, who has been working in Dayton, Ohio, is at home with her mother, Mrs. C. C. Williams, for a few days.

Denson Conway has gone to Mobile to work again.

If any one of this community has any news for the papers, please get it to me before each Monday morning.

Be sure and give correct names or initials. The rating of the boys who spend their leave here, also correct address where each one is from, etc. I am always glad to send in any news that is handed to me.

Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Veasey announce the birth of a son whom they have named Kenneth Warren.

There was a large crowd from this community who attended the annual home-coming at Poplar Springs in Coosa County on the second of this month.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Speer of Birmingham spent a few days last week with relatives here.

Chief and Mrs. Madeline Evans of Memphis, Tenn., visited her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Roper, here for a few days last week.

Thomas Kelly of the U. S. Navy is spending his leave at home here with his mother, Mrs. Iry Kelly.

Misses Essie Lee Mizzle and Betty Ann Jones, who are attending college at Montevallo, spent the week end here with their parents.

Lamar Williams of the Navy arrived home last Wednesday to spend his leave here with his mother, Mrs. C. C. Williams.

Mrs. Ruth Doris Roper of Birmingham visited her mother-in-law, Mrs. Dessie Roper, here last week.

Over Use Threatens Gas Ration

Part of the recent gas increases given A and B motorists may have to be recalled because of a daily overconsumption of 3,318,000 gallons of gasoline, Irby A. Jones, OPA District Director in Montgomery said.

"This over-consumption, amounting to 100,000,000 gallons a month—enough for one and a half billion miles of driving—is a serious drain on our stillmeagre gasoline supplies. Our reserves can't stand such tremendous pressure much longer and if the over-use don't stop soon by the motorists themselves, we undoubtedly face a reduction in rations," he predicted.

"Many drivers have convinced themselves that gasoline is no longer critical," Jones commented. "The truth is, we're using more petroleum in our war against Japan now than we used against both the Japs and Nazis a few months ago.

"Every motorist, applying for supplemental gasoline should review his needs thoroughly. . .and not ask for a single gallon beyond his legitimate, essential need. To ask for more is to endanger the generous amount already being allocated for civilian drivers," he said.

LOCAL AAA OFFICE TO CLOSE EACH WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON

The AAA Office, located in Clanton, will be closed each Wednesday afternoon, effective July 18, 1945.

Instead of being closed on Saturday afternoons as usual, the office will remain open for the service of the farmers.

AN APOLOGY

We make sincere apology to the Guy family for the error appearing in the death notice last week of Mr. George T. Guy. A typographical error in the first line caused the notice to read "age 5" when it should have read, "age 75." For this we are truly sorry.

Mr. and Mrs. John Lawrence Hollis announce the engagement of their daughter, Betty, to Ensign Randall O'Connell Laffre, Jr., of Mobile and Miami, Fla. The wedding date to be announced later.

8,000 Families Benefit In New Welfare Appropriation

Although the 1945 legislature increased State and County welfare appropriations $3,000,000 annually, the [illegible] part of this increase [illegible] $1,750,000 [illegible] ratify the income tax amendment at the election to be held October 2. Miss Dunn, Director of Public Welfare, estimates that [illegible] of all new applications [illegible] and [illegible] approved [illegible] 8,000 needy families will receive financial assistance. Approximately 3,000 of this number will be families of the aged, she said, with grants to resipients of old age assistance to reach a State-wide average of about $20.00 a month, compared with the present figure of approximately $15.00, and with similar increases in proportion for other categories such as the blind, the handicapped and dependent children. Miss Dunn pointed out that none of the additional money becomes available until the 1945-46 fiscal year, which starts October 1.

Of the $3,000,000 increase in welfare appropriations, $500,000 is an absolute or unconditional appropriation and $750,000 conditioned upon the state of the treasury and approval of the governor. Both these sums are to be divided 60 per cent to the State Department of Public Welfare and 40 percent to county welfare departments. The third and largest item of increase is $1750,000, conditioned upon ratification of the income tax amendment, with $1,000,000 of this to go to the State Department and $750,000 to counties. With all three appropriations the counties' share will be divided as follows: One-half equally among the 67 counties, the other half on a population basis.

In addition to providing $3,000,000 in new State and local welfare appropriations, the 1945 Legislature continued all present appropriations to the State Department of Public Welfare, to the counties for welfare, and to the municipalities for welfare. As evidence of extent of services already being rendered, during May financial assistance was granted [illegible] county departments of public welfare to 41,008 needy families, of which 31,907 were recipients of old age assistance, 759 aid to the blind, 5,068 aid to dependent children, 272 aid to children in foster care, 2,995 aid to the handicapped, and 107 temporary emergency aid.

Expenditures for old age assistance, aid to dependent children, and aid to the needy blind are matched by Federal funds under the Federal Social Security Program.

Kathleen Norris Says:

Returning Husband Brings Tragedy

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

"She has loved Peter all her life. He is her ideal of a husband and father. He loves little Bob as if he were the child's own father and he idolizes Baby Mollie."

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

HERE is a real puzzler and a sad tragedy, too. I am at a loss what to advise Rosamond Kay, who writes me a charming letter from East St. Louis. Her's is one of those problems that can be solved only in her own heart—she must weigh the claims of the two men in her life, one against the other, and decide which is the real claim.

Rosamond was married seven years to Robert. She was then 20. She loved him very truly and when he was numbered officially among the dead in Tunisia, she grieved for many months. Then she married Peter.

By Robert she had a son, now five years old; by Peter she has a daughter, just one year old. Rosamond is 31. She writes me that her heart aches for Robert, coming home tired and sad after a long and agonizing imprisonment and illness. But she says she has loved Peter all her life. He is her ideal of a husband and father. He loves little Bob as if he were the child's own father and he idolizes Baby Mollie. Rosamond has to meet Robert in a week or two, and she doesn't know what to do, for Robert is living and coming home to rejoin his wife and child.

Pete's Finer in Every Way.

"He has my letter now explaining the situation," writes Rosamond. "It was a terrible letter to write. I was prostrated with the shock of knowing that the man who was actually a ghost to me was coming back. These years with Peter have been heaven—he is the more successful man, the more popular, the finer in every way.

"Robert is of a moody, jealous nature. He was always unhappy if I took Bob to visit my mother; he disliked my having guests in the house; he made enemies in his business. We had not been married long before I spent many hours in tears and doubt and realized the extreme difficulty of the path I had chosen. To emerge from all this into the security and joy of Peter's companionship, his enthusiasms and plans, was to come out into the sunlight after a time of shadows. I really had mourned Robert; I was genuinely shocked by his reported death, but after that I learned what true married felicity can be.

"Now as to the children—Bob is a shy, affectionate little fellow who clings to me. He has all but recovered physically from a bad session with infantile paralysis, but it has left him dependent and nervous. We dearly loves Mollie, who is a fat, riotous, laughing little tyrant already. I cannot bear to separate them and yet it is inconceivable that I should take Mollie to Robert's house. Robert, as a matter of fact, has no house, no job, and not a single living relative. Also I must say that he always was devoted to Bobby and Bobby to him, although naturally the small boy hardly remembers him now.

Still Robert's Wife.

"I know," the letter concludes, "that Peter and I are not legally married. I am still Robert's wife. Shall I return to him? Or shall I ask him for a divorce and turn him over to lonesomeness and perhaps heartbreak? In my letter I said, 'Come home and we will adjust all these matters. You will see your adorable boy and believe me, you are welcome despite these strange circumstances.' I hardly could say less. He has been fighting to protect these same babies from the hell that was Nazi Europe. His answering letter takes it for granted that I still love him—perhaps in a pitying, sorrowful way I do. Peter will only say to me, 'We must do what is right.' What, in your opinion, is right?"

Poor Rosamond! This is a heartbreaking situation. To return to Robert is more than can be expected of poor human flesh and blood. She might make the effort, but to be poor again, hard-working again, separated from her laughing baby, missing Peter—there is a daily, hourly immolation that would call for supernatural graces of an unusual kind.

Robert's jealousy and moodiness add one more difficult note to a difficult position. Robert is not apt to give up his place generously, when he sees Rosamond's happiness or suspects it. He will not subside into the amiable family friend, willing to accept the overflow from the completely felicitous household.

So I only can recommend prayer to Rosamond. God's ways are not our ways. There are unexpected twists and turns and changes in any domestic crisis that can remove from it all the bitterness and rancor. There is a certain mysterious rightness and smoothness about the curing of those ills that are taken to God in prayer. That is the one unfailing answer.

Have a Savings Plan

For the first time since World War I many farm families are receiving incomes sufficient to provide something above necessary living expenses. These larger incomes may not continue many years into the postwar period. Certainly we can expect lower farm prices and incomes within a few years after the close of the war. To save successfully for the inevitable "rainy day," we need to make definite but simple plans and goals for savings and investments for the future.

"Bob is shy, affectionate, clinging. . . ."

'ENOCH ARDEN' DILEMMA

Fortunately only a few wives ever have to make the decision that Rosamond must. It is the "Enoch Arden" plot—the supposedly dead husband returns to find his wife remarried, and happier than she had ever been with him.

Robert was reported dead by the war department during the Tunisian campaign. Many months later Rosamond married Peter, a fine man she had known all her life. She already had a son five years old. Now she has a baby daughter, Mollie, who resembles her father, Peter. This little family is quite happy together. Peter is successful, jolly and affectionate. Robert has a moody and jealous disposition.

Rosamond nevertheless realizes that Robert is really her husband, and that he has every right to her. The shock of losing her, after the bitter years of fighting, and the misery of life in a German prison camp, is almost unbearable to Robert. He is coming home soon, and Rosamond will have to face him. She doesn't know what to do. The thought of giving up the delightful life she is now leading to return to a war-weary, jobless man, who at best was inferior to her present husband, is almost maddening. Yet she knows her duty, and can see no decent way out.

HOUSEHOLD MEMOS... by Lynn Chambers

Preserves Bring Bright Cheer for Winter
(See Recipes Below)

Let's Preserve

Wise are the women who gather their fruits and vegetables and plan ahead for winter months when food is scarce. Imagine, if you can, the thrill of knowing that your canning cupboard holds within it the provision for several hundred meals, all the result of your own work.

Last winter the women who put up pickles and preserves blessed the providence that caused them to do it. For preserves often made up for the plainness of the meat dish, pickles gave a flavor touch when menu variety was at a low ebb, and chili sauce went into hundreds of meat dishes which otherwise might have lacked for flavor.

Preserves may be served with meats, fowl or plain bread. Try to gauge how much sugar you will have and allot only a portion of that for preserves this summer as you will want to use much of the canning sugar for whole fruit.

To be at their best, preserves must be cooked in small batches, anyway in fairly wide pans. There is no need for skimming preserves if they are left in the pans for five minutes after cooking time is finished.

In warm climates where storage is difficult, they are best when processed in a water bath at simmering temperature for 20 minutes. This will help prevent mold.

Tomato Preserves.

2 pounds tomatoes
4 cups sugar
1½ cups water
1 lemon
1 stick cinnamon
2 pieces ginger root, if desired

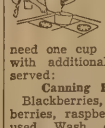
Use small, firm red, yellow or green tomatoes. Scald one minute. Dip into cold water. Skin but do not core. Combine sugar, water, lemon (sliced thin), cinnamon and ginger and simmer for 20 minutes. Add tomatoes and boil gently until they are bright and clear. Cover and let stand overnight. Pack cold tomatoes into sterile jars. Boil syrup as thick as honey and pour over tomatoes. Process in water bath for 15 minutes.

Apricot Preserves.

2 pounds apricots
3¼ cups sugar or corn syrup

Wash, peel and halve firm, ripe apricots. Combine fruit and sugar in alternate layers. Let stand several hours or overnight. Heat slowly until sugar dissolves, then boil rapidly until fruit is clear. Let stand several hours. Pack cold fruit into sterile jars. Reheat syrup, boiling it down if not thick enough. Pour hot syrup over fruit and seal at once.

Chili sauce does not require much sugar and is very good when made with the combination of spices given in the following directions:



Chili Sauce.

1 gallon tomatoes
2 cups onions
2 cups sweet red peppers
1 pod hot red pepper
1 cup sugar
3 tablespoons salt
1 tablespoon mustard seed
1 tablespoon celery seed
3 tablespoons mixed spices
2½ cups vinegar

Skin tomatoes before chopping. Chop all vegetables before measuring. Tie spices in a mixed bag. Mix all ingredients except spice bag and vinegar. Add spice bag after mixture has boiled for 30 minutes. Cook until very thick, then add vinegar and boil until there seems to be no more free liquid. Taste and add more seasoning if necessary. Pour while hot into hot, sterile jars and seal according to manufacturer's directions.

There are a number of other foods which you may not have preserved in other years that would now come in handy. First of all, you may want some lovely garden or orchard fresh fruit juices. For these you will need one cup sugar to the gallon with additional sweetening when served:

Canning Berry Juices.

Blackberries, blueberries, loganberries, raspberries, etc., may be used. Wash, crush and simmer juices until soft. Strain through several layers of cheesecloth. Add one cup sugar to each gallon of juice. Reheat to simmering and pour into hot, sterile jars. Process for 30 minutes in hot water bath at simmering temperature (180 degrees).

It's good to have tomato sauce handy for those meat and vegetable dishes throughout the winter. Canned? Of course:

Canned Tomato Sauce.

Mix 3 quarts chopped tomatoes, 1 quart sliced onions, 1 pint chopped green peppers, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, salt to taste and a pod of hot red pepper. Cook slowly until thick. Then pour into sterile jars and process in a pressure cooker at 10 pounds for 35 minutes or 2 hours in a boiling water bath.

Canned Vegetable Soup.

5 quarts chopped tomatoes
2 quarts chopped green lima beans or
2 quarts green beans
2 quarts carrots
1 pint celery
4 tablespoons salt

Cook tomatoes until soft, then press through sieve. Add other ingredients and simmer for 10 minutes. Pour into sterile jars and process in boiling water bath 60 minutes at 10 pounds pressure or 3 hours in a boiling water bath.

Lynn Says

Serve These Leftovers with Scrambled Eggs: For every six eggs used, blend in 1 cup diced, sauteed bread cubes with 1 teaspoon chopped chives.

If you prefer a meaty flavor, add 1 cup sauteed chicken liver and top with several slices of cooked bacon.

Fish is delicious with the egg combination. You might try ½ cup flaked fish, or ½ cup of any of the following: flaked lobster, shrimp, or crabmeat.

Vegetables add eye-appealing goodness to a golden fluffy mixture of scrambled eggs: 3 tablespoons minced parsley and chives; ½ cup chopped or cooked tomatoes, in which case omit the milk from the mixture; ¾ cup chopped, cooked mushrooms.

THE kid, Keecee, is bright all right. He sure gets Old Dave. After he's been in the service station there's always something missin', or the change is wrong. But never any proof. He's slick or has no nerves. Got away with things because he'd pull them right in your face. Dave won't accuse him because he wants to beat him at his own game. Things are pulled so often that Dave commences to feel like a fool. To tell Keecee to stay out would be no satisfaction. Dave's too contrary himself for half-justice. He wants to turn the tables.

Well, me an' Dave are playin' checkers on the side counter. Keecee is perched up on the end. Sittin' there lookin' innocent. He can't reach anythin' from there, so we don't pay too much attention to him. Dave, pretendin' he doesn't know the game, is takin' me over with his smooth moves.

Keecee's down. Glides back of Dave to the refrigerator for a bottle of chocolate milk. Dave keeps his face toward me an' the board, but moves his eyes watchin' Keecee. Keecee gets his bottle, comes back, opens the slide, takes a bag of peanuts from right under the checkerboard. He lays a coin at Dave's elbow. Dave glances at the money. But he doesn't say a word. Not to Keecee. To me he says, "It's yore move."

I think, Is he gonna let him get away with that? He can easy enough see it's a cent and not a dime. But it's Dave's business. I make my move an' keep my face straight. Dave sees through it.

"Somethin' slick, ain't yuh?" he grins. "But it happens I pulled that one on a guy oncet, myself."

I look up, an' I see on Keecee's face a sly grin which says plainer'n Scripture, "Yuh old fools, anybody could outslick both of yuh."

Dave picks up the coin, absentlike, drops it in his pocket. Keecee is perched again, eatin' peanuts an', o' course, much to the good. Guys start comin' fer gas. Dave has to go out once in a while to fill a tank—or give 'em their stamps' worth anyhow. Sometimes there is quite a bit of business per square inch. So, while Dave's out I just keep an eye tailed on Keecee so's he don't shin up the chimney with the cash register or nothin'. But he sits there, sweet an' good as a bouquet of lilacs.

A guy comes in fer change, an' up speaks Keecee! He says: "I get change, too, Dave!"

Dave looks puzzled. "Why? What did yuh gimme?"

"I gave yuh a quarter. I got a chocolate milk an' a bag o' peanuts." Hmm! So this is how it works, I think to myself.

Dave fishes all the silver out of his pocket where he's been puttin' it all evenin'. "Why, I ain't got no quarter."

"I gave yuh a quarter, because I had a nickel and a quarter, and here's the nickel!" An' sure enough he pulls out a nickel. He looks at me. He wants me to speak up fer 'im. Nerve! Whew!

"Yuh laid yer money down," I says, sarcastic-like, "but I thought it was a nickel." But durned if Dave don't give in and hand him three nickels change!

"I reckon yuh wouldn't lie for 15 cents," Dave grins.

Keecee perches himself up on the counter again, four coins in his jeans 'stead of the two he started out with, an' a bag of peanuts glidin' along his gullet. Washin' 'em down with his free chocolate milk! Naturally, I'm wonderin' if Dave's nuts or blind, when he gives me a look which says, "Shut up! Everythin's hunkydory."

Soon Keecee goes out, lookin' thoughtful. Dave starts grinnin' all over his face, an' Dave's face covers a lot of territory. He gets all his change out of his pocket. He fiddles around through a fistful of it till he comes to Keecee's bit. He hands it to me, an' I see Keecee's right! It's NOT a nickel. But it's somethin' I have only seen twicet in 15 years of steady lookin'. An' while I'm makin' plumb sure, Dave's reachin' for a big "No Loafing" sign. "I'm ahead of him now," he chortles, "and sure as gun's iron I'm gonna stay ahead!"

He hangs up the "No Loafing" so it'll look Keecee right in the eye when he comes in. He stacks empty pop cases, old boxes and sticky oil rags two feet deep on Keecee's end seat. Now I'm sure he's not nuts! For that piece I'm a-gapin' at is a big copper cent. It's a 1799 model in beautiful condition. An' Dave knows it's the real thing. He's been huntin' one a long time. He pulls out his Rare Coin Encyclopedia an' points to somethin', still grinnin' a-plenty. It's value is listed accordin' to condition—$2 to $80!

Touch Up Appliances

Keep that refrigerator and range new looking by touching up chipped and scratched places. Shake the container of "liquid enamel" well before using, then apply with the small brush that is attached to a cap. This "cover up" comes in a variety of colors and can be used on bathroom fixtures, washing machines or any porcelain enameled surface.

Kite That Climbs, Dives, Loops Army, Navy Target

A unique type of kite is used by the army and navy as a target to train their AA gunners because it can be made to climb, dive, bank, loop, do figure eights and all other maneuvers of an airplane so quickly that it is rarely hit by more than one out of 50 shots.

Of traditional shape, without a tail and only five feet in both height and width, the kite is controlled through two lines that operate its rudder and other parts.

Smart Cover for an Old Sewing Machine

IF IT is necessary to keep an old-fashioned treadle machine in a bedroom, it may serve as a dressing-table if attractively covered. In the dining room it may do double duty as a serving table. Here, it is shown in a living room. The full skirt matches curtains and slip covers, and the scalloped felt top repeats the covers of the stools that serve as lamp stands and the chair cover.

The difficult problem is to make the top of this type of machine level. This is done here with a removable top of plywood. Cleats are screwed to the under part of this top and the cover is tacked to it. The whole thing may be lifted off easily when it is time to use the machine.

NOTE—The sewing machine cover is from BOOK 9 of the series of homemaking booklets. This book also contains complete directions for the spool lamps shown here and for more than 30 other money-saving projects that will help you to keep your home attractive. 3 Presidents in Position To Pick Their Successors

Until 1886, a law provided that when the presidency of the United States was left vacant by one who had succeeded to it from the vice presidency, the office was to be assumed temporarily by the president of the senate for the sole purpose of ordering a new election, says Collier's.

Since 1886, when a new law extended the succession to cabinet members beginning with the secretary of state, three Presidents have been in a position to name their successor in case of their death—Theodore Roosevelt, Coolidge and Truman.

Air Rescuers Snatch 2,300 From Sea Death

WITH 5TH AIR FORCE, LUZON. — In a little office at this base is a chart on which the first entry was made last September. Now there are 2,300, the names of airmen who were rescued from death on the ocean stretches of this aerial battlefield.

It is the record of the 5th emergency rescue group.

Holds Back Tears While She Dances

Buddies Make Good Promise Of Dead Brother.

MACON, GA. — Holding back the tears, a brotherless "kid sister" swirled to dance music in a gown of white—"the prettiest in town"—just as her brother who died on Iwo Jima promised she would.

It was Miss Frances Newman's 18th birthday.

Buddies of her brother in the tough 4th marine division provided her with the beautiful evening gown she wore to her birthday dance, arranged by her co-workers at Warner Robins field near here. The division commander, Maj. Gen. Clifton B. Cates, sent orchids.

"I miss Bob terribly," said the tall, earnest young girl. "But I'll dance and have a good time—just as we had planned. I know he'd want me to."

The brother, 20-year-old Sgt. James R. (Bob) Newman of Lumpkin, Ga., had promised his "kid sister" long ago he'd get her orchids and the "prettiest evening gown I can find" for her 18th birthday and take her to a dance.

But Bob was killed by a Japanese shell February 23.

After he was killed, Frances wrote General Cates, telling him she was going to keep her chin up—"because if Bob had to die, he would have wanted to die a marine." Her note also told of her and Bob's plans for her 18th birthday. Cates said the letter was the most beautiful he'd ever received.

When the dress came, there was a "Happy Birthday" card with it. It was signed "Bob's Buddies."

Throttle Shot Off, Pilot Crash-Lands His Bomber

CHICAGO. — A Yank who saw plenty of action but "didn't get a scratch," is Lt. William H. Carls, 25, of 2506 N. Mozart street, a combat navigator - bombardier with the 9th air force.

In support of ground troops in a raid on Sauerlaten, Germany, his precision bombing with radar equipment helped take the town with negligible losses. On his return from the mission, his plane made a crash landing at 250 miles an hour, as flak had shot off the right throttle at full power and the pilot couldn't cut the engine.

During an attack on the Ruhr valley, his B-26 was jumped by enemy fighters. Three of the gunners were wounded, the hydraulics and air speed meter was knocked out, and the plane had over 300 bullet holes in the fuselage. The ship caught fire when they crash landed at a British fighter field at Eindehove, Holland. Carls wears the DFC, the air medal with 10 clusters and 5 campaign stars.

Latest Jap Trick Kills Marine on Patrol Duty

OKINAWA. — A new Jap lure resulted in the death of Marine Pfc. Michael H. Shout of Minneapolis.

Shout, on patrol in the rugged hills of Motobu, saw two men dressed as civilians. Realizing there were many troops in the area and the civilians might be hit, Shout called to them to come back through the lines.

The two men halted, but as the marine drew near they darted away and a Jap machine gun opened up. Shout blasted the nest with his submachine gun. Then both guns were silent.

Four Japs lay slumped over the gun, dead. Shout also was dead.

Amputation Done With Combat Knife Under Stars

OKINAWA. — An amputation with a combat knife, performed by occasional star shell light, was only part of a night's work for Victory H. MacSorley of Cambridge, Md., a navy pharmacist's mate.

MacSorley, with a marine unit on Motobu peninsula, completed the necessary removal of a marine's shattered foot in about 10 minutes.

He also attended 18 other wounded marines on the 6th marine division's perimeter that night. At dawn he returned to his aid station, carrying his last patient, a wounded sergeant, across his shoulders.

Lifer Seeks New Trial After Serving 22 Years

CARO, MICH.—Clarence Adams, 49, who has served 22 years of a life sentence in prison, has petitioned for a new trial.

Adams was sentenced October 24, 1921, after pleading guilty to a first-degree murder charge in the death of Howard Long.

He now claims he shot Long in self defense and that the court erred in accepting his plea of guilty.

IT DIDN'T take Myrna Loy long to decide what she'd do as a free-lance star after she left Metro. Practically everybody wanted her for a picture, but she chose the feminine starring role in "Genius in the Family." The story's laid in 1870, and is all about the courting days of Hiram Stevens Maxim, who invented the machine gun, among other things. And who do you suppose plays Hiram? None other than Don Ameche. But he doesn't invent a thing during the picture, just plays a charming and resourceful suitor.

When the Kate Smith program returns to the air early in September, it will be broadcast Fridays at 8:30 p. m., EWT, on CBS, instead of Sundays, and will be on the air 25 minutes instead of a full hour. And there'll be more songs by Kate.

Cornel Wilde, expert fencer, who plays the swashbuckling Aladdin in Columbia's "A Thousand and One Nights," will be built up as the successor to the late Douglas Fairbanks in roles of that type. He's the first to get that build-up since Fairbanks died.

Remember all those models who were taken to Hollywood, with much fanfare, for "Cover Girl"? Dusty Anderson, the only one of the 15 to be given a studio contract, gets her first lead playing opposite Warner Baxter in "The Paper Doll Murders."

—:—

John Reilly, the engineer of the air show, "It Pays to Be Ignorant," works nights, and sleeps late mornings. At least, he did until his three-year-old daughter heard little Johnny, the call boy on the Ginny Simms show. Now she gets up at the crack of dawn and goes around the house imitating Johnny's clarion call advertising the sponsor's cigarettes at the top of her lungs.

Marie McDonald will play her first piano solo before a huge audience — all the people who go to see "Getting Gertie's Garter." Producer Edward Small heard that Marie had been studying piano with Ray Smatra, cousin of Frank, who's one of Hollywood's best known pianists and arrangers. Small didn't know she'd learned little more than the scales, so he had her written in for a piano solo.

The new Fred Waring show, heard Mondays through Fridays over NBC, is a novelty in more ways than merely changing the usual network type of morning programs. Waring has made his program a showcase for returning veterans who want to make show business their postwar careers. The veterans apply for an NBC "Welcome Home Audition," provided by the network especially for servicemen; Waring scans the results and picks the most promising.

When Roy Acuff and the Smoky Mountain Boys and Girls of "Grand Ole Opry" fame were being flown in a C-47 to a huge war bond rally in Tennessee, members of the plane's crew regretted that they'd miss the show, as they had to return. So Roy and his band got out their instruments, and while flying 200 miles an hour at 5,000 feet, gave their complete performance for the crew.

Kay Kyser wrote President Truman asking for a list of the chief executive's tunes, and was informed that they're "Over There," "Pack Up Your Troubles," the "Toreador Song" from "Carmen," and "Song without Words." Kay will present them in new arrangements on his air show.

ODDS AND ENDS—Ellery Queen show guest armchair detectives who have only a mild intrest in murder-mystery fiction are usually the most successful in guessing the correct solution. . . . Barbara Jo Allen, the "Vera Vague" of radio fame, has a featured role in Columbia's "Snafu." . . . Micky Kuhn, 11, who plays Rhett Butler's son in "Gone With the Wind," has been signed to play Dick Tracy Jr. in RKO's series of films based on the popular comic strip. . . . Monogram's "Dillinger" is breaking records, and inspiring other studios to go in for similar films. . . . Andy Russell has been signed for the new Joan Davis air show, starting in the fall.

Swift Racing Greyhound Has a Stride of 21 Feet

The racing greyhound is the fastest of all dogs and for short distances can keep pace with the race horse. The dog has a stride of from 13 to 21 feet while a horse's leap measures about 25 feet.

For about an eighth of a mile the racing dog can stay with the horse, but thereafter the equine animal will pull away from his canine brother. Racing dogs have been known even before the Christian era, but whether they were of the greyhound breed is not clear to historians. Bits of early history give us the clue that the Egyptians used dogs for the sport of coursing, but they were said to have feathered ears and feathered tails.

Greyhound racing is only about 30 years old and was developed after it had been discovered a dog with a light sense of smell would chase a tin rabbit believing it to be the real thing.

The flavor of a fruit salad or a fruit cocktail is greatly improved by the addition of a little lemon juice. For a good vegetable salad dressing too, you can hardly find a substitute for lemon juice flavor.

Cornstarch sewed up in a small bag is a hot-weather sewing convenience. Dust it on palms of hands to absorb perspiration when working on white or light-colored fabrics.

The Louisville & Nashville Railroad—the "Old Reliable"—is not waiting until the war is over. It is doing things NOW!

To tap a rich coal field, it has just completed 11 miles of mountain railroad at a cost of almost $2,000,000.

Other construction for a similar purpose, at a cost of $1,600,000, is under way.

Still other lines for new coal development, costing several hundreds of thousands of dollars, are now under contract.

Eight passenger road locomotives, costing $1,400,000, have just been received. On order are 28 aluminum, streamlined, ultra-modern passenger cars, costing about $2,400,000.

About 71,000 tons of new steel rail and appliances to cost $3,900,000 has been requisitioned.

In addition, other authorized improvements amount to $5,000,000.

What does this all add up to? . . . nearly seventeen million dollars! But that's not all. It means employment of thousands of men for manufacture, construction and operation for the best part of another century . . . a stimulant to commercial life, better homes, better schools and better living . . . in our Southland.

We want our constructive activities and service to merit your good will and patronage.

Where they are and How they are

Seems this week is Navy homecoming week, with so many of the hometown boys now in Uncle Sam's Navy home on leave.

One familiar face was that of Richard Lawrence, riding around in his little 'ole T-Model Ford. There's been some changes made though. Richard has replaced the usual sporty re shirt with a gleaming white uniform, which I'm sure he is proud of—or maybe just being home made that wide grin on his face. Anyway, it's nice to have him here for a few days after completing his "boot" training at Great Lakes, Ill.

Another sailor sporting his Navy blues Sunday was Robert Earl Martin who also just completed his "boot" training at Great Lakes. Upon questioning Robert Earl as to how the Navy was treating him. I received the hasty reply, "Nothing like it, best thing there is."

From what I've heard about the Navy, a guy who can maintain an attitude like that after completion of "boot" training, is likely to go places in the Navy. He has our hearty wish for a big success.

Cpl. James Minor just returned from 10 months in the European Theatre of Operations and is spending a 30-day furlough here with his parents Mr. and Mrs. Percy Minor and his wife, Sarah Nell McCary Minor.

Planning for

TELEPHONE PROGRESS in Rural DIXIE

To keep step with farm progress and to extend service to more farm families, the telephone industry is working on important new devices and methods.

Plans are already under way for resuming our rural telephone expansion program which was suspended in 1942 when equipment and materials became more urgently needed for the armed forces. Surveys are being made to determine the needs and to provide the facts from which we can carry out plans for expansion of farm telephone service in the South.

The goal is to bring the telephone to the greatest possible number of farm families.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Jap Fleet Refuses U.S. Challenge As Carrier Planes Raid Tokyo; World Studies Big Three Meeting

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

The American public is responsible for forcing U. S. war vets to ride uncomfortable day coaches, as pictured above, says Undersecretary of War Robert Patterson. New regulations bar civilian use of sleepers on short trips.

U. S. FLEET:
Another Challenge

Supplemented by land based fighters and bombers, more than 1,000 carrier-based planes of the 3rd Fleet attacked Tokyo. Showing his contempt for Japanese air and fleet power, Adm. William F. Halsey issued a list of ships taking part in the action and invited Nips to come and meet in battle. This was the beginning of big scale operations against Tokyo. Former attacks were limited to 500 or 600 or less planes.

The carriers launched the mighty procession while standing a few hundred miles off the Japanese coast. Future daily raids will continue with number of bombers and fighters reaching 2,000 or more.

BIG THREE MEET:
Six Weeks for President

Accompanied by a staff of advisors, numbering 200, including the new secretary of state, James Byrnes, President Harry S. Truman arrived in Potsdam to attend the long-planned Big Three meeting. In Europe he was joined by General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower and the joint chiefs of staff.

The President will be away from Washington at least six weeks, at the conference, visits to London and inspection of American troops in Europe.

Germany to Pay

The Big Three power reparations commission sitting in Moscow has taken, as the foundation of its negotiations, 20 billion dollars as the total value of compensation to be exacted from Germany. It is not expected that final division of this sum will be allotted until after the Big Three meeting in Potsdam.

OVER THE TOP:
Bond Quota Doubled

The goal of the seventh war loan, 14 billion dollars, was almost doubled as final tabulations were made on the closing date. Henry Morgenthau, retiring secretary of the treasury, made the announcement in his "valedictory" speech.

Sale of all classes of bonds totaled 26 billion, 313 million dollars. The "E" bond quota of four billion dollars was almost attained, a mark of three billion, 976 million being reached. This was the issue that was intended particularly for "small" buyers.

Total sales to individuals amounted to eight billion, 681 million dollars, surpassing the eight billion dollar goal by a wide margin. Purchases by banks, insurance companies and other financial institutions accounted for the rest of the bonds sold.

PHILIPPINES:
A Great Record

The Filipino people are fully capable of governing themselves, General MacArthur told the members of the Philippines congress in Manila. Their combat record, the general went on, is the best assurance that they can handle their peacetime affairs efficiently.

He said that he was "fully confident that the American people will do everything within their power to assist you to your national destiny." The occasion was the formal presentation of orders making the general an honorary Filipino citizen and a lifetime field marshal of the Philippine army.

MORE SHOES

As a result of army order cutbacks to become effective in September, there will be an increase of 3,000,000 pairs of civilian shoes per month.

The council based their hopes for a more generous issue of civilian ration coupons on an increase in the supply of sole leather.

The industry was given a 60-day period to prepare for increased production to meet civilian requirements.

PACIFIC ACTION:
In Borneo

Dutch amphibious forces made two new landings on the north shore of Balikpapan bay to loosen Japan's last grip on Borneo's vital oil.

Opposed by determined Jap small arms fire, the Dutch landed on Teloktobang and Kariango peninsulas, completing encirclement of the lower Balikpapan bay.

In China

By capture of Tayu, head of the mercury ore mining region in Kiangsi province, Chinese troops severed Jap communications with Kukong, rail center, 125 miles north of Canton.

In liberating Liuchow, Chinese troops also scored new gains along both the Liuchow-Kweilin highway and the Liuchow-Hengyang railroad.

MEAT OUTPUT:
Gets a Boost

A first step towards increasing meat production and equalizing distribution was taken by the new secretary of agriculture, Clinton P. Anderson, who outlined the requirements which must be met by small slaughterers seeking to get from under quota limitations and shipment of non-federally inspected meat over state lines.

Rep. Stephen Pace (D., Ga.), who succeeded Anderson as chairman of the house food committee, promised that the committee will continue to keep a vigilant eye on the food situation. Next to the armed forces, he said, comes the American people's claim to American-produced food products, except where shipments must be made to "meet the calls of humanity." Mr. Anderson had previously stated that European demands are in for a "stiffer examination."

Certificates will be issued for slaughterers permitting unlimited slaughtering and interstate shipment.

CONTINUED TROUBLE:
On Labor Fronts

Loss of the closed shop provision and retroactive benefits was held over the heads of the New York Newspaper and Mail Deliverers union by the WLB, in an effort to end the strike which deprived New Yorkers of their newspapers.

Two Fort Wayne, Ind., papers, the Fort Wayne Journal Gazette and the News Sentinel, were tied up by strikes.

Strike action against eight independent Chicago radio stations was called off by representatives of the Radio Broadcasting Technicians union (AFL) following a conference with station officials. Both sides agreed they would leave settlement of the dispute to the WLB.

In Detroit a walkout at the Dodge truck plant offset a return to work of 824 Graham-Paige workers. One thousand persons were sent home from the Dodge plant because of a strike of 11 paint sprayers who had been getting 15-minute relief periods each hour and who, according to a Chrysler spokesman, wanted 20-minute periods.

Sixteen thousand five hundred CIO United Rubber Workers were on strike at Firestone at Akron, Ohio, and the Goodyear Tire & Rubber company, employing 16,700, was operating under navy supervision. The navy took the plant over after a 20-day strike.

SOAP FAMINE

Increased domestic buying of soap has resulted from suggestion by Herbert H. Lehman, United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration director, that rationing of soap be started.

The emphasis placed on the world's tight soap situation has brought about critical shortages in many sections of the country. Manufacturers state that there is very little that can be done to increase available soap supply and nothing in the way of substitutes is available.

UNITED NATIONS:
Charter in Congress

Before a friendly foreign relations committee of the senate, former secretary of state, youthful looking Edward R. Stettinius Jr. appeared as first witness, asking for its prompt adoption.

Backing up Stettinius was Michigan's Republican Senator Vandenberg, who not only declared that the charter must be adopted but paid tribute to Stettinius, while audience showed its approval with bursts of applause.

All members of committee with exception of four—a record attendance for committee hearings—were present. Pepper, absent due to death of his father; Glass and Bridges were reported ill and Senator Shipstead was not in Washington.

Stettinius said charter was not perfect, but he was sure it would improve with time. Said Vandenberg: "Stettinius' excellent record at San Francisco deserves the grateful appreciation of his country."

PRISONERS:
Machine Gunner

"I just didn't like Germans." That was Pvt. Clarence Bertucci's only explanation for killing 8 German prisoners of war and wounding 20 others at a branch prison camp at Fort Douglas, Utah. Bertucci fired a mounted machine gun into the tents of sleeping prisoners while on guard duty.

He told Col. Arthur Ericcson that he had often been tempted to turn the gun on the prisoners, and "was not at all sorry" for his actions. A mental examination has been ordered. Bertucci spent several months in England, but never was in combat. He is 23 years old, and lived in New Orleans before entering the army.

The dead PWs were buried at the camp cemetery with full military honors. Their caskets were draped with the flag of the German republic, and a group of prisoners were allowed to attend the rites.

LIKES HIS VICTUALS

The amazing appetite and capacity of Pfc. Chester Salvatori shows no signs of diminishing. His gastronome feats startled army doctors at Fort McPherson, Ga., who held him under observation for days. Recently, however, Salvatori got a furlough and had to buy his own food.

One meal in an Atlanta cafe cost him $9.95. He consumed seven orders of fried chicken, ten of french fried potatoes, nine glasses of orange juice, two quarts of milk, a giant combination vegetable salad plus ten egg salads, two orders of queen olives, two glasses of iced coffee, two servings of watermelon and five pieces of apple pie alamode. He could have eaten more, he admitted, but that six candy bars and a quart of ice cream before lunch took the edge off his appetite.

Salvatori, who hails from Southbridge, Mass., weighs only about 140 pounds. Doctors say his stomach is only slightly larger than normal. His camp nickname? "The Stomach"... of course.

TRAINS:
Still Jammed

Civilians are still on the go—despite increased travel restrictions. Space reservations for July had already been sold out for the most part during June on the old 30-day advance limit when the new order went into effect. ODT regulations limiting advance space reservations to 5 days will not affect civilian travel until August, railway officials explain.

In the big cities there has been no appreciable wave of cancellations as result of the second ODT order designed to give more space to the military by withdrawing Pullman accommodations from trains on trips of 450 miles or less.

There is not much "beefing" among travelers, and when questioned they usually come forward with some good reason for making the trip.

U. S. AIR KING:
Fastest Fighter Built

The Chance Vought F4U Corsair, which has just gone into action against the Japanese, has proven itself in combat and bombing as the navy's fastest and most powerful fighter-bomber plane.

Powered with a 2,100 horsepower motor and armed with six 50-caliber machine guns and racked for 2,000 pounds of bombs, it is described as "tops" in maneuverability.

Nazi Flying Boat

Two years before the end of the war, Germany built a 200,000 pound flying boat, the world's largest. The plane had a range of 6,000 miles, could carry 40,000 pounds of cargo. The designer had plans for a 400,000 pound craft. The German flying boat was wrecked and set afire by six U. S. Mustang fighters late in March before it had a chance to be used against the Allies.

REDEPLOYMENT:
Ahead of Schedule

Redeployment of U. S. troops from Europe continues to keep in advance of its schedule.

An army announcement states that the program is 30,000 men—two full divisions — ahead of schedule, and that by the end of June 396,001 U. S. soldiers had left European shores for home.

The June quota was 250,000; 280,000 men left Europe during that month.

Concentration Camps Turned Men Into Brutes

Prisoners Who Survived Cruelties Eventually Adopted Ways of Their Sadistic Guardians.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

(This is the second article on postwar Germany explaining how the Nazi "planned terror," methodically applied to the older Germans, has produced a state of mind among the anti-Nazi element which vastly complicates American rule of Germany.)

WNU Service, Union Trust Building
Washington, D. C.

In my preceding column I described the state of mind of the middle-aged German who had been anti-Nazi or at least had no connections with the Nazi party. A study of the gestapo methods has revealed that it was planned definitely to destroy initiative and individuality. This has greatly complicated the work of the American administration of occupied Germany.

As I said, the gestapo made use of a definite system of "planned terror."

It will, I realize, be somewhat difficult for a person living in a democratic country to grasp the extent to which such methods could be applied. First, we must realize that a totalitarian government is the absolute antithesis of a democracy. In a democracy the individual is the unit. The state exists for the individual. Under Nazi-Fascist totalitarianism, it is not enough to say that the individual exists for the state. The individual as a concept does not exist at all. "The Fascist conception of the state," said Mussolini, "is all-embracing; outside of it no human or spiritual values can exist. . . ."

It was the first task of the Nazis to destroy this concept of individuality. The terror was a part of the method employed.

Purpose Was to Break Will to Resist

Bruno Bettelheim, author of "My Life in Nazi Concentration Camps," testifies to the purpose of the camps and the achievement of this purpose by the gestapo from his own experiences. He says that among the aims were these:

1. To break the prisoners as individuals and convert them into docile masses from which no individual or group act of resistance could arise.

2. To spread terror among the rest of the population by:

a. Using the prisoners as hostages;

b. Demonstrating to them what happened to those who opposed Nazi rulers.

3. To provide gestapo members with a training ground so they could:

a. Lose all human attitudes and emotions;

b. Learn the most effective ways of breaking civilian resistance.

4. To provide a laboratory in which the gestapo could study the effectiveness of torture, minimum nourishment and medical care, and normal activities plus hard labor.

The general purpose, of course, was to create a civilian population of maximum benefit to the Nazi state.

The author's study of prisoners, conducted under the camp regime, supplemented by a careful self-analysis, leads him to believe that the camp treatment resulted in either death or an adaptation to camp life. The prisoner finally accepted his position and even came to imitate the gestapo in manner and conduct.

This seems a logical progression when we know that the gestapo themselves in their training were submitted to tortures almost equal to those inflicted on the prisoners. One of the gestapo games, the author relates, was for two of them to stand up and beat each other. The one who stood the longest, won. Old prisoners who were thoroughly "changed" were said to indulge in the same sport among themselves.

Many Were Killed, Or Were Suicides

Bettelheim describes the three stages through which the prisoners passed. The first is the arrest; the second is transportation to the camp, which is the hardest to bear, he says. The last is prison life; after a period of transition during which, unless the prisoner either resists physically and is murdered or resists introspectively and commits suicide, he is gradually "changed" until he reaches the "old prisoner" stage. Then his previous nature is eradicated, his individuality lost and his subjection complete.

The initial shock was devastating especially to a German, accustomed as he was to processes logically controlled by law and order. To be deprived suddenly of one's civil rights with no recourse, came as a severe blow to the prisoner's mentality.

The transportation to the camp and the initiation into it frequently is the first experience of physical and psychological torture which the prisoner has ever experienced.

Corporal punishment, says Bettelheim, describing his own observations, consisted of whipping, kicking, slapping, intermingled with shooting and wounding with the bayonet. Then there were tortures, the obvious goal of which was extreme exhaustion. "For instance," he says, "the prisoners were forced to stare for hours into glaring lights, to kneel for hours, and so on. From time to time a prisoner got killed; no prisoner was permitted to take care of his or another's wounds. The purpose of the tortures was to break the resistance of the prisoners, and to assure the guard that they were really superior to them."

Many were killed in this process. But those who lived, according to the author, were conditioned to the point where what followed—more beatings, more indignities, little food, exposure and brutally hard work—was not as bad as the initial experience.

For the rest, it was a slow but sure process of degeneration of body, mind and soul.

One thing which has surprised the Americans in occupied Germany is the tendency of the German people to deny that they knew the extent of the atrocities which were perpetrated in the camps or to appear to ignore their existence.

This is a result of a planned effect of the camp.

Dread Fear Hung Over Everyone

According to statements concerning conditions in Germany as early as 1930, most of the Germans who had committed actual offenses against the Nazi regime, had already been imprisoned, murdered or had died in the camps. Then the Nazis found it necessary to go out and arrest members of various groups indiscriminately, say a few lawyers, a few doctors, a few from one organization or another. This was done as a threat against that whole particular group.

The effect on a group was somewhat the same, though in a lesser degree, as the effect on a family. The effect on the families of the prisoners, of course, was marked. At first a great deal of money was spent in attempting to get the prisoner released. The gestapo always replied that it was the prisoner's own fault that he was imprisoned. Then members of the family begin to find it hard to get jobs, children had trouble at school; poor relief was denied. Always the terror hung over them. The friends and relatives of a prisoner were considered suspects. So the influence of the camp reached out over the whole group.

As the Nazi regime became more harsh and especially latterly, when world resentment increased against it even before the war, many more Germans, passive before, became openly dissatisfied and critical. It was impossible to imprison them all without interfering with the functioning of the country's economy. Then "group" arrests increased. People in lots of a hundred or so from one profession, or trade, or affiliated body, would be jailed. Thus the effect of the "terror" was multiplied. This was the manner in which the entire population of the country was enchained.

General McClure recognizes how crushing has been the effect of "planned terror," but I doubt if the general public has any realization of its magnitude. "We shall often have to go far out of our way," says the general, "to help certain individuals who have not had an easy life these last 12 years and more, men whose broken spirits may well need our support and guidance to return to the ways of active personal democratic initiative."

It took centuries to develop human dignity, but it took only a few months in a Nazi concentration camp to destroy it.

A Bell for Adano

By John Hersey

W. N. U. FEATURES

THE STORY THUS FAR: The American troops arrived in Adano, with Major Joppolo, the Amgot officer in charge. Sergeant Borth was in charge of security. The Major was determined to hold the confidence of the people and to replace their bell stolen by the Nazis. Despite orders issued by General Marvin, barring carts from the city, Joppolo recalled the orders, to permit food and water to enter the city. The people of the city had arranged a party of appreciation for the Major. The bell arrived, as did also orders from General Marvin relieving the Major of command. Unaware of the orders the Major continued his work. He made arrangements to attend his party that night.

CHAPTER XXII

Major Joppolo was excited. He called up Lieutenant Livingston and thanked him for his part in getting the bell. "Why hell," he said, "it ought to be up this afternoon. Maybe we can ring it for the party tonight. You're coming, aren't you?"

"Wouldn't miss it, Major."

"Well, see you there, Captain. Thanks a hell of a lot."

"Don't mention it. Say, there's just one thing, Major."

"What's that?"

"I'm a Lieutenant. It takes a long time to get to be a Captain in the Navy."

"Is that a fact?" the Major said. "Well, you ought to be a Captain soon," and he hung up.

Zito moved near to the desk while the Major read, and when he was finished, the usher said: "We have a new bell, Mister Major?"

"We have a new bell, Zito."

"Is the tone good enough?"

"I hope so, Zito. I think so."

"Is there some history to it?"

"Yes, Zito, I'll tell you about it when the bell is up. Do you think I ought to make a little speech explaining the bell to the people here?"

"Oh yes, you should, Mister Major. The people of Adano will be curious about the bell."

"Zito, do you think they will understand all that the bell means? I mean that it stands for the things that I believe in? Do you think I could explain that to them?"

"I think so, Mister Major. I understand what you mean, and Zito is not very clever."

A few minutes before eleven o'clock the funeral procession of the three fishermen who had been killed in the explosion went through the Piazza. Major Joppolo went out onto the balcony to watch it. At the head of the procession there were three carts. The first two carried the bodies of Agnello and Merendino. Their coffins were small dinghies such as the fishermen used to get out to their boats, with the tops planked over. The third cart, which was for Sconzo, carried a dinghy which was not planked over, but was filled with flowers.

Long before eleven thirty, Major Joppolo was out on the sidewalk beside the crated bell, waiting for the Engineers to come, looked and shoved at the crate affectionately as if there were something delicious to eat inside it.

The gang from the Engineer battalion was surprisingly on time. The Major explained the job, pointing to the top of the clock tower.

"How long do you think it will take?" he asked the old buck sergeant in charge.

"Well," the sergeant said, "some days the boys gets cramps in their stomachs and they claim they shouldn't ought to hurry when they has the cramps. Other days they don't get no cramps. It all depends."

"How long do you guess?"

"We'll have it for you today or tomorrow. It all depends."

"Try to finish today, will you?"

"It all depends," the sergeant said, and he turned furiously on his men, who slowly gathered themselves for work.

Major Joppolo went to lunch at noon. Sergeant Borth was already in the Albergo dei Pescatori when the Major arrived. The Major sat down with Borth, as he often did, in spite of his rank.

He told Borth about the bell, and his excitement about it gave Borth something to tease.

"You're worse than the first day we came here," the Sergeant said.

"How am I worse?" the Major said.

"You're so damn sentimental."

"Oh, cut it out, Borth."

Borth's teasing cut a little deep. "No, I'm serious," he said. "There's a war going on. Fishermen get blown up in the harbor here. Children get run over in the streets. There's one case of malaria in every six people. And you can't think about anything but tinkling a bell."

Major Joppolo said: "I'm worried about those fishermen, Borth. I could get in trouble over that. Do you think I was guilty of carelessness about it? You know I forced the Navy to let them go out."

Purely by way of teasing, Borth said something he had cause to regret later: "Sure," he said, "you could catch hell for that. You could get sent back to the States."

And Major Joppolo said: "They wouldn't do that, they couldn't."

Borth said: "Why couldn't they? I heard about a fellow in airborne who got sent home just for getting drunk."

Major Joppolo said: "They couldn't, Borth, there's so much to do here. Think if they got somebody bad in this town. Think if they got a dope like that fellow up at Pontebasso."

Borth said: "You don't like yourself much, do you?"

Major Joppolo said: "Oh lay off, Borth, sometimes you aren't funny."

At 12:25 Zito came running down to the Albergo dei Pescatori to tell the Major that the bell was uncrated. "It looks nice," he said.

The Major tried to get Borth to go up with him to look at the bell, but Borth said: "This eggplant is so good, I don't see how I could leave it."

So the Major went up with Zito. On the way the usher said: "Before I forget it, Mister Major, the officials are very anxious to meet with you at four o'clock. They said it was important."

A moment of worry showed itself on the Major's face. "Is it about the fishermen, Zito?"

Zito said: "I am the usher, Mister Major, the officials do not tell me what is on their minds." Then

"We have a new bell, Zito."

Zito seemed to think better of what he had said, and he added: "No, it is not about the fishermen."

The Major said: "Oh, so the usher has ways of finding out what is on the officials' minds?"

Zito just smiled.

There were quite a few people standing around watching the Engineers working on the bell. One of them was the ancient Cacopardo. Because he had spoken to the Major about the bell on the very first day of the invasion, he had appointed himself a kind of supervisor of the work, although none of the Engineers could speak Italian.

As soon as the Major came up, Cacopardo said: "I have sent for Guzzo, the bell-ringer at the Church of San Angelo. He will be able to tell just by looking at it whether it is a good bell. If it is not, you will of course have to send it back."

The bell stood on the sidewalk just where the Navy men had put it down. The crate had been peeled down from around it.

It was bronze, and the men of the Corelli had taken the trouble to polish it, so that it was like gold in the midday sun. On one side there was this inscription:

U.S.S. CORELLI
America ed Italia.

When Cacopardo saw the Major reading the inscription, he asked: "Who is this man Corelli, and how does he happen to get his name on the bell of Adano?"

The Major said: "I will tell you later, when the bell is hung." Then he got a little stone out of the street and tapped it against the side, but of course there was only a dead sound, since the bell was sitting on wood. "I wonder how the tone is," the Major said.

"Guzzo will know," Cacopardo said.

In time the bell-ringer came. He was almost as old as Cacopardo. His hands and forearms looked very strong, but the rest of him looked as if it were long overdue.

Cacopardo called him to the center of the crowd and told him to examine the bell. The old bell-ringer walked round and round the bell, looking at it. Then he leaned over and ran the flat of his hand from top to bottom. Then he stood up and seemed to read the inscription over and over. He looked once up at the top of the clock tower, where some engineers were rigging a hoist. He asked that the bell be turned over and when some of the engineers had turned it up on its side, he looked inside.

He stood up finally and shrugged his shoulders and said: "It is all right."

Cacopardo was delighted. He said to the Major: "I know old Guzzo. He does not exaggerate. When he says something is fair, he means it is perfect. The bell will be very good."

"I'm glad," the Major said.

At a few minutes past one o'clock, Major Joppolo went home to his villa to take a nap. He wanted to save up some strength for the party—but he also wanted to think a little about his speech about the bell.

He lay down on his bed. At first his thoughts were confused, because he was excited. But gradually the thoughts began to sort themselves out, and everything came very straight to Major Joppolo.

He would say a few words, he thought, about the removal of the old bell. Then he would tell about how the people of Adano had interested him in trying to get a new one. Then a few words about Corelli, and what he had done for Italians in the last war, and then the meaning today of the inscription on the bell, America ed Italia, American and Italy, and then perhaps something about the Americans' Liberty Bell. After talking about it that day, the Major had been curious about the Liberty Bell, and he had written a letter back to Amgot headquarters inquiring about it, and now he would be able to explain the crack, and he would tell the people of Adano the inscription on that bell, the words from Leviticus: "Proclaim liberty throughout the land and to all the inhabitants thereof."

And then everything was wonderfully clear in the mind of Victor Joppolo. He knew exactly what he would say. Words came to him which were beautiful and were the truth about the new bell and its meaning for Adano, and about what he, Victor Joppolo, wanted for the people of Adano. The words were as clear as anything can be, and as true.

At about two o'clock the courier came by motorcycle from Vicinamare. From his office Sergeant Borth saw him throw the pouch onto the sidewalk in front of the Palazzo. Mail, even official mail, was enough of an event so that Sergeant Borth got up and went across to the Palazzo and up to Major Joppolo's office to see what there was.

There was nothing for Sergeant Borth, but as long as Major Joppolo was out, Sergeant Borth decided to riffle through what there was.

In time he came on a paper addressed to Major Joppolo. He read it:

"1. You are authorized to proceed by first available transportation to A.F.H.Q., Algiers, via port of Vicinamare.

"2. Reassignment of station will be made by A.F.H.Q.

"3. Reason for this order is that reference (1) did wilfully and without consultation countermand orders issued by General Marvin, 49th Division, re entry of mule carts into town of Adano."

And the order was signed by General Marvin.

Sergeant Borth folded the order, put it in his pocket, and left the building. He went directly to the M.P. command post in the Fascio.

He said to Captain Purvis: "The Major's been relieved."

Captain Purvis said: "What do you mean?"

"Just what I said: he's been ordered back to Algiers for reassignment."

"What for?"

"Insubordination. Countermanding an order by Marvin about mule carts. I guess it was after that affair of the mule the General shot outside town."

Captain Purvis had forgotten all about the report he had sent to Division. Now that he remembered he didn't have the courage to say anything about it. All he said was: "What a hell of à note."

Borth said: "I'll say. The Major's just begun to accomplish things in this town."

Captain Purvis said: "Yeah, I guess he has." A suspicion crossed his mind: this fellow Borth had a way of knowing too much. "How did you know he was ordered out?"

Borth said: "I saw the order up in the Major's office."

"Does the Major know about it, then?"

"No, the Major's out. I have the order in my pocket. I took it. I'm not going to tell him about it until after the party tonight."

The Major got back to his office at about a quarter to four. He went through the courier mail and worked for a few minutes on a report to Colonel Sartorius. Promptly at four Zito came in and said: "Will you see the officials now?"

"Yes, Zito."

Now when the officials came in—old Bellanca first as usual, then the others, Gargano, Saitta, D'Arpa, Rotondo, Signora Carmelina Spinnato, and Tagliavia—Major Joppolo could see by their cheerful expressions that there was to be no unpleasantness in this interview.

Old Bellanca spoke: "We have something we wish to give the Mister Major."

D'Arpa could not resist saying in his high voice: "We wish to give the Mister Major a Mister Major." The others snickered.

Bellanca said: "Please get it, Zito." Zito went out.

First the usher came back carrying an easel. He went out again. Then he brought in Lojacono's portrait of the Major.

ABRAHAM'S PRACTICE OF BROTHERHOOD

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 13:1-12.
GOLDEN TEXT—Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee . . . for we be brethren.—Genesis 13:8.

As we study the contrasting selfishness of Lot, we see the true generosity of Abram and the brotherly love which prompted it in bold relief. In a world where men reckon even their friendships as something which must yield some financial return, it is good to stress the fact that kindness and sacrifice are recognized and rewarded by God.

Abram, after dwelling for a time in Canaan, had gone down into Egypt because of a famine in his own land. After many trying experiences, he returned to his promised land and there he prospered mightily under the good hand of God. Unlike many who forget God when they become rich, we find Abram

I. Meeting Prosperity With Godliness (vv. 1-4).

Abram "was very rich." That would be almost enough to constitute a spiritual obituary notice for many a man's spiritual life.

But Abram did not let his riches come between him and God. He sought out the altar which he had first built at Bethel, and there he called upon the name of the Lord once again.

Note then, that riches in themselves need not destroy a man's character or spirituality if they are held as a gift from God, and for His glory. Meet growing prosperity with increased godliness and all will be well.

II. Meeting Problems With Kindness (vv. 5-9).

Abram's riches, and those of Lot, were largely in flocks and herds. For them there had to be great areas of grazing land, and in the rocky section where they found themselves, grass was scarce. Result? A fight between the herdsmen.

Lot, the younger, should have taken the lead in meeting that situation, but his selfish heart was too small for that. But Abram, eager for peace and brotherly love, indicated at once his willingness to do anything necessary to preserve peace.

One could not ask a finer indication of true bigness in a man. "Big men use their prestige to serve great ideals. Abram used his tremendous advantage to do a beautifully generous thing to eliminate strife. Not many men are big enough to follow this course" (W. R. White).

Only God can make a man that big, but God can do it for any one of us. If Christian people would listen to the words of Abram, "we are brethren" (v. 8), and put them into practice, there would be an immediate end to all the foolish strife which divides God's people.

There is no call for compromise with untruth, nor any occasion for softhearted generosity which will only spoil its recipients. We are talking about the honest and intelligent use of kindness and tact between brethren. When kindness meets problems, the problems disappear. Why not try it?

III. Meeting Selfishness With Love (vv. 10-12).

Lot made the typical choice of the wordly-minded man, the one which would give him the best returns in dollars and cents. It seemed like a shrewd thing to do, but it resulted in disaster, for it meant pitching his tents over toward the wickedness of Sodom.

Abram had to rescue Lot again and again from the results of his decision; but thus in love he met the arrogant selfishness of his foolish nephew.

God rewarded Abram by a renewal of His covenant with him (Gen. 13:14-18). God understands and values the kind and thoughtful act, even though the world may ignore it or sneer at it.

Lot probably did not intend to go all the way into wicked Sodom to live, but having once started that way, it was easy to go on and on. Even so Christians in our day may not intend to slip off into worldliness, but if they continue to pitch their tents toward Sodom, they will find themselves there one sad day.

This may be done by seeking wealth or worldly advantage at the expense of association with unbelievers, or by some manipulations or maneuvers which will involve compromise. It may come about by reason of indulgence in worldly amusements which dull spiritual perceptions and kill an appetite for the Word of God and prayer.

Abram is a character who "wears" well. We see him meeting one situation after another, and making the right choice. Oh, he was not perfect! His mistakes are noted in Scripture, and he suffered for them, too. But because his heart was fundamentally right, and he had a constant desire to do the will of God, he found his way through, and justified the name which God gave him—"The friend of God" (see James 2:23; Isa. 41:8).

SNAPPY FACTS about RUBBER

Although rubber is ordinarily considered non-conductive, B. F. Goodrich has perfected an electrically conductive rubber used in the form of a "shoe" for de-icing airplane propellers.

Bathing suits that won't get wet even when the wearer goes in swimming are a good possibility. The waterproof bathing suits are coated with B. F. Goodrich Koroseal.

"Bullet-proof" tires are so designed that a punctured tire can be run for 40 miles before it is ruined.

Almost every modern weapon has some rubber in it.

MISS PARALEE HENSON, REPORTER

PATTON-DENBY WEDDING—

The marriage of Miss Mary James Patton of Jemison, daughter of Mr. J. W. Patton and the late Mrs. Patton, to ST. Sgt. William Floyd Denby of Douglas, was solemnized at the home of the brides father, Sunday July 15th at three o'clock.

The vows were read by the Rev. Homer Carroll before an alter formed by white standard holding white gladioli, asters and sprays of huckleberry, and candelabra holding white tapers.

The nuptial music was presented by Mrs. Cecil Martin who wore printed chiffon and Mrs Sidney Reynolds who wore printed crepe with a corsage of tuberoses. Mrs. Martin played "Liebestraum" and the traditional wedding marches. Mrs Reynolds sang "I love you truly."

Miss Lonnie Childers of Pensacola, Fla., who wore white silk corde with pink carnations in her hair and Miss Paralee Henson, cousin of the bride, who wore yellow silk shantung with yellow gladioli in her hair lighted the candles with white tapers showered with white satin ribbons.

Miss Melba Patton was her sisters maid-of-honor. Her pink lace dress was made like that of the bride and she carried a cascade bouquet of briarcliff roses tied with pink maline. Cpl. Melvin Jackson of Boaz, served his cousin as best man.

The bride entered on the arm of her father who gave her in marriage. She was lovely in her wedding dress of white embroidered mousseline. The dress featured a full skirt gathered to a diagonal fitted band outlined with wide ruffles and ruffles formed the sleeves. She wore a coronet of white flowers and carried a cascade bouquet of Killarney roses showered with tuberoses and gypsophila and tied with white satin ribbon. Her only ornament was a silver filigree necklace the gift of the groom.

A reception followed the ceremony. The bride's table covered with a cutwork cloth was centered with the wedding cake embossed with spun candy orchids. Bowls of summer flowers completed the decorations.

Out of town guests for the wedding included Mrs. J. H. Harrison of Birmingham, aunt of the bride; Miss Louise Cooper of Birmingham and Miss Amy Jean Scrrell of St. Andrew Florida.

The bridal couple left for a wedding trip to north Alabama and Miami, Fla. For traveling the bride wore an aqua and white striped shantung suit with white accessories.

The bride attended Jacksonville State Teachers College where she was on the Staff of the Teacola, student newspaper. At the time of her marriage she was a member of the faculty of the Jemison Elementary School.

The groom was a student at Jacksonville State Teachers College at the time he entered the service. He recently rturned from oversea duty where he served with the Air Force as a weather observer in Persia and Egypt.

BRIDAL SHOWER—

Honoring Miss Mary James Patton bride-elect, Mrs. Sidney Reynolds and Miss Paralee Henson were hostesses at a miscellaneous shower at the home of Miss Elizabeth McNeill on Wednesday, July 11th.

The honoree wore a white dress and her corsage was of green carnations and feverfern tied with white and green ribbon.

The program featured a minature wedding in which St. Sgt. Johnny-jump-up weatherman and Lily of the valley, the girl who waited, were united in a wreath of for-get-me-not.

Mrs. Cecil Martin and Miss Howard Nell Smith of Maplesville presented the nuptial music. Mrs. Martin played "The Rosary" and the traditional wedding marches. Miss Smith sang "Always" and "Oh Promise Me". Children who participated in the wedding included the following:

The bride, Eleanor McCornell, who wore a dress made from the wedding gown of Mrs. N. W. Henson. The groom, Robert Lynn Langston. The Maid of honor, Sandra Peterson. The best man, Edgar Peterson. The ring-bearer, Faust Adams. The flowergirls, Joyce Cobb and Charlotte Howard. The candle girls, Alice Joe Langston and Carolyn McNeill.

After little Ann Guy informed the bride that the weatherman predicted a shower with no clouds the gifts were presented in a decorated parasol.

A color scheme of green and white was carried out in decorations and refreshments. Assisting in serving were Miss Elizabeth McNeill, Mary Catherine McNeill and Martha Alice Smith of Maplesville. Miss Melba Patton kept the bride's book.

Electric Lines Will Be Used For Telephone Service

If at just the right time you happen to be traveling in the vicinity of one of Alabama Power Company's rural electric lines near Selma, Ala., you might see research engineers talking into telephones near the bases of the poles carrying one of these lines. From this you might conclude that rural telephone service over rural electric lines is just around the corner. In this you would be mistaken unless you remember that that corner is some months away because there are still not yet enough telephone instruments and other material available to fill service requests now on file with the telephone company.

Anyway, what you observed, is a rural electric line serving as a field laboratory where Alabama Power Company and the Southern Bell Telephone Company are conducting tests to determine if telephone and electric service can be carried on the same set of poles serving rural areas. There is no question of the physical ability of the poles to carry the two sets of wires but there is a big question as to whether the higher voltage of the power lines will cause sufficient noise in the telephone lines to make the telephone service unsatisfactory. Experimental equipment has been installed in this "field laboratory" line to test both the service and safety features of joint use of poles on rural lines for both electric and telephone service. If this proves to be practical, it will be possible, after the war, to provide telephone service to rural homes without necessity of setting separate poles for the telephone line.

This field laboratory test is one of many being conducted, and the results will be carefully studied by both the power company and telephone company.

Both Alabama Power Company and the telephone company emphasizes that the experiment is at present in the nature of a test. Indications are that the practicability of such an arrangement will be demonstrated. However, the research engineers caution that there will probably be "bugs" to be worked out in certain special safety and service equipment. This will require time.

They hope, that as equipment and instruments become more plentiful as war needs lessen, dependable telephone service in rural areas will become as commonplace as dependable electric service.

Chilton County Is Winner Of District Banner

Chilton County, first county in Alabama to exceed its Seventh War Loan E Bond quota, has been announced winner of the district banner for the best E Bond performance on a percentage basis in War Bond District Thirteen in the recent drive. Other counties in the district are Dallas Marengo, Perry and Wilcox.

District Thirteen won second place in point of E Bond sales on a district basis, running a close race for first place with District Three.

Under the chairmanship of J. R Oglesby, Jr., Chilton marked up a record of 136 per cent of its E Bond quota and placed sixth in the state in E Bond performance.

"Records like these," said State War Finance Chairman Ed Leigh McMillan, "are what assured Alabama of being one of the top three states in the nation in per cent of E Bonds sold."

CREDITS COUNTY BOND DRIVE WITH $5,000.00 BOND

A letter received by W. E. Owens, Distributor for the Pan-American Petroleum Corporation Monday, informed him that his company had purchased another $5,000.00 government bond during the 7th War Loan and credited same to Chilton County's quota.

4-H Club Feeder Calves Highest In County History

Chilton County 4-H Club boys and girls are feeding the largest number of 4-H feeder calves in the history of beef club work in Chilton County. This year seventy Black Angus, Herefords and shorthorn steers and heifers have been placed in the hands of Chilton County boys and girls who give these animals the best attention possible until show time next Spring.

Many new feeders are feeding this year along with club members who fed last year. Boys and girls who fed last year made an outstanding record in the Birmingham show that should give every new feeder a feeling of pride and responsibility in upholding the record Chilton County Club boys and girls made in the largest show in the state.

In feeding a club calf, every boy and girl has an opportunity to learn many of the principles of feeding and management that are basically true in any type of feeding program, namely: it is necessary to provide and feed amply; second, it is necessary to feed a balanced feed in a systematic way to produce quality animals. The value of a program of this type does not end with feeding and management, but it gives a club member invaluable experience in grooming, judging and showing beef cattle.

Most of the boys who have a beef project are also carrying a 4-H corn project. From all indications these boys are going to get a corn yield much better than average as they have done a good job of fertilizing and working their corn. By carrying a good feed and livestock program they have a very practical, well balanced, over-all 4-H Club project.

The following boys and girls have either purchased beef calves or are feeding one of their own calves to enter in the Spring 4-H Fat Stock Show and sale. With Chilton County 4-H Boys and Girls feeding these calves we feel that other counties in the state are going to have to do a mighty good job if they carry home more than their share of ribbons.

REVIVAL MEETING AT CANE CREEK CHURCH

The revival meeting will begin next Sunday, July 29th, with Rev. Homer Carroll and Rev. Hand doing the preaching.

Sunday School at 10 o'clock Sunday and preaching following.

Everyone is invited to attend the meeting.

FIFTY YEAR OLD MOTHERS

According to information received by the State Department of Health from the Bureau of the Census, at least four babies were born to Alabama parents in 1942 whose fathers and mothers were both at least 50 years old.

PLEASE NOTICE

For the past few weeks we have had in our window a display of souvenirs, brought from the South Pacific by Melvin Wilson, USMC The general public seem to derive so much pleasure from looking at and examining the several items we decided to start a collection Monday of souvenirs from the European Theatre. We had collected several beautiful knives, a German battle flag, and other objects and displayed them when we discovered one of the knives and scabbards missing. No need to mention that the souvenir, which was the property of a returned soldier, is priceless and irreplacable. If it was a childish prank and it turns up in some home we would highly appreciate the parent seeing to it that it is returned to the News office If you see anyone or hear of anyone who has a German knife with a small red Swastika imbedded in the handle we will gladly pay a reward for information leading to finding of the knife. The knife is a black metal scabbard was approximately eight inches long, overall. On the blade in German was, "Blut Und Ehre."

The theft puts us in a very embarrassing position. We borrowed it for the pleasure of passersby There is no way to replace it. If you can be of aid in finding it and returning it to its rightful owner it will be highly appreciated.

THE EDITOR.

PLEASANT GROVE METHODIST CHURCH —BEAT 15

The date of the revival at this place has been changed and instead of beginning on Friday, July 27th, it will begin at 8:30 p.m., Monday, July 30th.

Everyone is cordially invited to attend these services. You are always sure of a cordial welcome. The Rev. H. F. Pair of Birmingham will be the evangelist.—2tc

New Telephone Directories Are Issued Here

Delivery of the new telephone directory for Clanton has been completed. A total of 520 copies were delivered to local homes and offices, according to T. E. Harris, District Manager for the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company.

The new directory has a grey cover, making it easily distinguishable from the old green covered telephone book. Mr. Harris requests telephone users to help conserve war-busy telephone equipment by referring to the new directory when there is any doubt about the desired number, and by consulting the directory before calling "Information" for a number, calling "Information" only if the number is not listed.

Use of paper for printing directories has been restricted in order to conserve the available supply, Mr. Harris said. And for this reason, he requests telephone users to take the best care of their copies, since only enough to fill essential requirements could be printed.

The old directory should be turned over to the war scrap paper collectors along with other waste paper at the first opportunity.

Jap War at Pre-invasion Stage; Senate Acts on Global Pacts As Big Three Map Postwar World

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

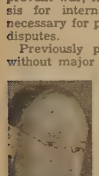
With block upon block of their once proud city in ruin, German women join men in clearing debris from Berlin.

PACIFIC:
New Stage

As U. S. warships prowled along the Japanese coastline to lob 2,700 pound shells into industrial installations on shore, and British carrier units joined up with the Americans to send naval planes against the enemy homeland, Adm. Chester Nimitz declared that the Allied attacks opened the pre-invasion stage of the Pacific war.

Tightening of the blockade around the Nipponese islands to prevent receipt of raw material from outlying territories, and destruction of industrial facilities for producing military goods, are the objectives of the new phase of operations, Nimitz said. Recounting an old proverb that the lifeblood of Japan is the water of the sea, Nimitz stated that the Allies were working to control that lifeblood.

Appearance of the British units heightened the tempo of the attacks on Japan proper, with one of their carriers, one battleship, two cruisers and five destroyers announced in action, and indications that others were participating. As the U. S. and British carrier planes conducted pin-point sweeps over Nippon, shipping and ferry facilities linking the coal producing island of Hokkaido with Honshu were hammered by American naval batteries and steel mills on Honshu were heavily hit.



GLOBAL PACTS:
Senate Acts

Even while President Truman conferred with Prime Minister Churchill and Marshal Stalin at the historic meeting in Berlin, the senate acted on vital measures designed to assure the security of the new world and also to establish a strong economic foundation.

Foremost, of course, was the United Nations security charter, drawn up by 800 delegates from 50 countries at the palatial San Francisco opera house. Less popular in appeal, but equally important in scope, were the Bretton Woods monetary agreements creating resources for trade and reconstruction, and the increase in lending powers of the Export-Import bank to stimulate commerce before the Bretton Woods pacts can be implemented.

Overwhelmingly approved by the senate foreign relations committee after five days of public hearings, the security charter was sent to the upper chamber for ratification with the committee's declaration that though the new organization cannot prevent war, it will develop the basis for international collaboration necessary for peaceful settlement of disputes.

Previously passed by the house without major opposition, the Bretton Woods monetary agreements ran into stiff opposition in the senate, with Taft (Rep., Ohio) leading the fight. With the U. S. scheduled to contribute $3,175,000,000 to the $9,100,000,000 bank for reconstruction, and $2,750,000,000 to the $8,800,000,000 fund to provide foreign currency at fair rates, Taft sought amendments to the agreements which would assure the responsibility of the borrowers.

Sen. Taft

Under provisions of the Bretton Woods agreements, the bank would loan money directly to borrowers or guarantee loans by private interests, while the fund would make foreign currency available at fair rates to countries for purchasing goods and services or evening up their trade balance.

Approved by a 102 to 6 vote in the house as a measure for increasing American foreign trade and initiating world reconstruction before implementation of the Bretton Woods monetary agreements, the bill increasing the lending power of the Export-Import bank from $700,000,000 to $3,500,000,000 also came under fire in the senate. Again Taft led the fight on the floor, demanding to know whether the bill cloaked a 1 billion dollar commitment to Russia.

Created in 1934, the Export-Import bank finances U. S. sales and purchases of goods abroad.

In the meantime, the Big Three conference continued apace in the ex-Kaiser's palace near Berlin, with Secretary of State Byrnes, Chief of Staff Marshall, Naval Chief King, Air Chief Arnold, Secretary of War Stimson, Maritime Commissioner Land and Admiral Leahy assisting President Truman in the political and military discussions.

Though the three big Allied chieftains discussed preliminaries for a future peace conference to establish the map of postwar Europe, and also pondered the peace treaty for Germany, principal interest centered on the consideration of the war in the Pacific and Russia's possible role.

While it was commonly reported that Stalin had brought Japanese terms to the conference, reliable American sources declared that President Truman presented U. S. conditions for surrender, drawn up by the state, war and navy departments.

According to the report, U. S. terms include surrender of all air, naval and military equipment; disbandment of Japanese forces; evacuation of Manchuria, Korea and Formosa and other territory outside the enemy home islands; abolition of all war factories; supervision over ship building, industry and port facilities, and prosecution of all war criminals.

Implication of the terms was that an Allied occupation force would be necessary to carry out the fulfillment of the conditions and prevent the re-establishment of the influence of the Japanese military officials in the government.

GRAIN TRADE:
Probe Tie-Ins

With corn supplies remaining tight, OPA made its first big move against alleged irregularities in the grain trade by announcing an investigation of dealers' reported practices of tying-in sales of corn with more plentiful field crops.

Under such dealings, it was charged, corn is offered with the understanding that barley and other grains will be taken above market prices. At the same time, OPA revealed it would look into reports that interests performing no marketing function were marking up corn prices over ceilings.

Announcement of OPA action came as traders predicted little corn would be available for delivery on July contracts and marketings were below requirements of wet processors. Along with corn, rye stocks tightened, the visible supply in the U. S. declining to 5,000,000 bushels in mid-July compared to 19,000,000 a year ago.

BRAZIL:

Brazil's recent regrouping of her states and territories into five new regional combinations directs attention to the outstanding bigness of this "good neighbor" to the south.

Largest republic in the Western hemisphere, the United States of Brazil spreads over more than 3,275,000 square miles, nearly half the area of all South America. It would overlap the North American Republic of the United States with almost enough land to spare to make another Texas.

RAIL RATES:
Protest Revision

Declaring that the Interstate Commerce Commission's order increasing railroad class freight rates 10 per cent in the East and reducing them a like amount in the South and West was unsupported by evidence that previous tariffs were unequal and unlawful, 10 northeastern states petitioned the ICC to reconsider its action.

Applying only to so-called class rates on articles on which volume is not sufficient to command a commodity tariff, the new rates effective August 30 are designed to eliminate freight differences working to the advantage of the highly industrialized East. Only 10 per cent of all freight moves under class rates, however, and southern interests seeking parity declare that the ICC's action is but the first step in an equalization program.

While the 10 northeastern states fought the revision of class rates, five southwestern states declared it would result in "non-discriminatory, non-preferential and non-prejudicial" tariffs. The states requested minor alterations to the order.

REDEPLOYMENT:
New Workers

In Berlin for the Big Three conference, Pres. Harry S. Truman called upon available civilian workers in the U. S. to fill 65,000 railroad jobs to help speed the redeployment of troops and materiel to the Pacific and assure an early end to the Japanese war.

Though the army has furloughed 4,000 experienced railroad men to relieve the crisis, they represent but a fraction of the carriers' needs, the President said. Most urgent need is for 12,000 skilled workers such as trainmen, electricians, carpenters and signalmen.

Meanwhile, the war manpower commission granted 17 western railroads top priority in the interregional recruitment of workers.

Frauleins Reserved

Despite the army's let-up against association with German civilians, G.I.s are not being swamped by curvaceous frauleins. Children continue to cluster around friendly Yanks, however, and play up for a share of their rations.

Having swept the mademoiselles off their feet in France and Belgium, the G.I.s have found the German belles less skittish. For one thing, return of many German soldiers has provided the more comely misses with escorts, while the open hostility of civilians toward women fraternizing with the Americans in certain sections also has tended to restrict relations.

Lifting of the ban against association with German civilians followed repeated complaints that it would never work in view of the American disposition for striking up friendships. The Russians had never enforced such a ban in their occupation zone, presumably to unsell the civilians on their fear of the Reds.

MEAT STORAGE:
Supplies Up

Despite the fact that the 635,998,000 pounds of meat supplies in cold storage on July 1 were at the highest level since last September, civilians were not expected to benefit because a large percentage of the stocks are earmarked for the army.

Supplies of other foods were spotty, with butter holdings abnormally heavy and stocks of frozen and shell eggs up, while dried egg and poultry inventories were down.

Beef registered the largest gain in meat supplies, standing at 261,373,000 pounds, with pork also showing an increase at 330,524,000 pounds. Lamb and mutton stocks were up to 17,903,000 pounds and lard 62,430,000 pounds.

As of the first of the month, public warehouse freezer occupancy stood at 73 per cent of capacity, with gains in canned fruits and vegetables, fish, cheese, shell eggs and sausage largely offset by a heavy outmovement of apples, pears, dried eggs and canned meat.

REPARATIONS:
Allied Plan

German payment of reparations from available resources to avoid the rebuilding of the reich's economy to meet foreign claims, as was the case following World War I, was recommended by the Allied reparations committee sitting in Moscow.

Following the pattern of the U. S. plan, the commission's proposal calls for the distribution of potential German war-making equipment to claimant countries, and German production of reparations material from existing facilities. No funds would be advanced for reconstruction of transport or industry that could be integrated into a military economy.

In line with its plan, the commission also declared that claims against Germany should be taken from the country's existing wealth, such as stocks, foreign investments, machines and supplies.

Navy Fares Well

Stateside rationing to the contrary, there's enough food aboard a typical aircraft carrier in the Pacific to furnish personnel with a full ration three times a day for 90 days.

Radar Saved Britain— Will Remodel Industry

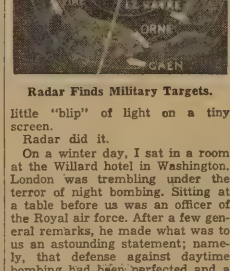
Electronics Proves of Great Value to American Air and Naval Forces During Present War.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

(This is the first of two articles by Mr. Baukhage revealing some of the remarkable achievements of radar and explaining how it operates.)

Little by little the world is learning more of the secrets hidden in that magic, five-letter word which, spelled backward or forward, means the same thing, but whose real meaning is still a mystery. I mean R-A-D-A-R.



I have written it down that way because its derivation is one mystery that we can reveal. Before it went into "classification," which is what they say in the army when they mean something can't be mentioned in public, radar was an important but little - known, copyrighted, commercial label. It is really four words in one: Radio Direction and Ranging.

Early in the war there were some stories printed about a German airplane which had a television camera in it which could send back pictures of the territory beneath it. Shortly thereafter all mention of such an apparatus stopped and the dark and mysterious career of radar began. Radar and television are not the same thing, but there are similarities and if we can believe that actors in a studio in the RCA building in New York can be seen out in Westchester county by people sitting around a television set, we can believe that another little gadget can register the presence and location of a distant object (like a plane or a warship) and, if it is moving, tell which way it is going and how fast.

Radar Will Soon Be Industries' Marvel

As I said, we knew the Germans had been working on such a device early in the war. This is how radar was born in this country:

Back in 1932 two scientists observed that something happened to a radio wave when it hit the wide side of a building and also when a ship went across its path. Research continued, but the war sent radar into hiding. On November 14, 1942, a Jap battleship slipping through the sea near the Solomon islands was suddenly struck by a salvo of shots from an American ship eight miles away. The Japs went down to Davy Jones' locker without knowing what hit them. They never saw the American ship which fired the shots. Nor did the Americans ever see the Japanese warship except as it appeared as a little "blip" of light on a tiny screen.

Radar did it.

On a winter day, I sat in a room at the Willard hotel in Washington. London was trembling under the terror of night bombing. Sitting at a table before us was an officer of the Royal air force. After a few general remarks, he made what was to us an astounding statement; namely, that defense against daytime bombing had been perfected and a method of ending the effectiveness of night attack would soon be in operation.

The tide had been turned in the battle of Britain and, though we didn't know it then, radar had done that, too.

Between these two events was another one we don't like to talk too much about. Over in the Hawaiian islands on December 7, 1941, Pvt. Joseph Lockard, though not supposed to be on duty at the time, was listening to a "detector," an apparatus which strangers weren't allowed to approach in those days. Lockard "detected" an airplane about 30 miles away. He reported it to his superior, but that gentleman, knowing American planes were out at the time, took no action. Lockard was eventually given the Distinguished Service medal. The rest we had better try to forget while we still must "remember Pearl Harbor." Human service failed to carry the message that the Jap air fleet was coming, but radar had done its part of the job.

Radar has grown to be a giant since then. This is what "Impact," an official publication of the assistant chief of air staff (intelligence) says:

"The use of radar in military operations is in its infancy, but it has permeated every phase of air warfare. It is used in strategic bombing by both British and American heavies. It makes night fighting and intruder operations possible. It literally saved England in the battle of Britain. And it provided for the control and direction of virtually every day or night sortie flown by the TACs (tactical air force planes) during the winter (of 1944-45)."

The importance of the part which the American tactical air forces played from the battle of Normandy right up to V-E Day is acknowledged by everyone, though there may be differences of opinion as to the relative achievements of the various branches of the service. (Tactical bombing and strafing is that part of air force activity which is an integral portion of the individual land force operations, as much a part of the battle plan and its execution as the disposition of artillery. Strategic bombing is the "softening up," the long range air attacks.)

And radar was a vital part of the success of the tactical operations in Europe from D-Day on because of its help in getting a fighter-bomber to its target and getting it home again in weather which is too bad for normal operations.

It controlled night fighters, photo and mapping planes, picked out targets and kept track of enemy planes in the area.

To quote an official comment:

"On the western front, despite constant overcast conditions during the last winter, the IX, XIX and XXIX TACs were able to operate at maximum strength continually. On the other hand, the 1st Tactical air force, which was without radar equipment last November, flew only two missions that month, one of these abortive because of the weather."

As to the long-range, strategic bomber, which has to cross half a continent to get where it is going, if bad weather envelopes it, radar is, of course, invaluable for keeping its location. Radar is also an integral part of the fire-control.

Commercial Aviation Will Profit Greatly

Speculation as to radar's ultimate possibilities are unlimited, both in war and peace. Any ordnance expert will tell you that a "controlled missile" — that is, a bomb such as the deadly German "V" bombs, which flew from Holland to England — can, with certain improvements, be made much more deadly. Not only can they be made to fly much farther—across the Atlantic, over the North Pole — but they can be accurately aimed and directed at an area such as a city and ruthlessly destroy it. Radar can do that and many other things it has not yet attempted. There are, likewise, an infinite number of ways in which radar can and will serve a peaceful world.

In commercial aviation, the man in the control tower, the traffic cop at the airport, will be able to locate all of the planes in the vicinity by day or by night, in cloudy weather and clear. And it must be remembered that regulating the traffic is going to be one of the most important problems of tomorrow's skyways, for there will be a tremendous increase in the number of planes which will be in use and a similar increase in their speed and size.

Radar can warn the planes themselves against collision and the presence of land masses, high tension wires, tall buildings or other obstacles to their flight. And, of course, will permit safe landing even in a dense fog.

IT'S the women who rule the box-office destiny of the movies, according to Hunt Stromberg, who's been making good movies for years, and now has his own producing company. Women form a large part of the audience, says he, and also determine to what movies their men shall take them. Not that he ignores the males in his appeal to the public! "Young Widow," costarring Jane Russell and Louis Hayward, is intended to entertain both sexes. But Stromberg likes feminine titles — "Dishonored Lady" is on his list, and "Strange Woman," and his first independent picture was "Lady of Burlesque." And credit him with giving Joan Crawford, Myrna Loy and Rosalind Russell a big push toward stardom.

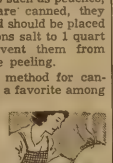
Handy Chart for Fruit Canning
(See Recipes Below)

Fruitful Canning

Of all the canning you can do this season, it is the canning of fruits which will pay the biggest dividends. Not only are fruits a good source of vitamins and minerals, but they will enable you to save hundreds of points this year as they did last year.



Since rationing began, fruits have always carried a high ration value, and yet, they are essential and convenient to serve for breakfast, luncheon and dinner. Fruits may be canned with or without sugar, but the fruit will mellow and ripen in the jars much more satisfactorily if a sugar syrup is used. With syrups plentiful, part, usually half, of it is sweetened with a light or dark corn syrup. Honey may be substituted for one-half the sugar, also. It will darken the fruit and give it a somewhat stronger flavor, but it is good.

Only fruits that are good in flavor, uniformly ripened and firm in texture should find their way to the jar. Just as it is true of any other canning and preserving, you get only what you put into the can. Canning is designed for preserving the fruit, not for improving poor quality produce.

When large fruits such as peaches, pears or apples are canned, they require peeling and should be placed in brine (2 teaspoons salt to 1 quart of water) to prevent them from turning dark while peeling.

The open kettle method for canning fruit has been a favorite among homemakers for many generations because it gives such attractive results. However, the hot water bath has found many users because the danger of spoilage is reduced to a minimum and the appearance of the fruit still retains its shape, flavor and texture. On the table, time is also given for processing in the pressure cooker if one is available, but it is not essential for fruit canning as it is for vegetable preserving.

Syrup Making Guide.

Thin syrups for fruit canning will be most popular this year because of the sugar shortage. For this type, use 1 cup sugar to 3 cups water. Heat the sugar and liquid together until sugar is dissolved and syrup is boiling. Or, use ½ cup corn syrup (light or dark) or ½ cup honey with ½ cup sugar.

Medium type syrup is good for most fruits and berries, but it requires a little more sugar. The proportion is 2 cups water to 1 cup sugar, or half corn syrup or honey and half of the amount in sugar.

In past years, peaches and pears and some of the other fruits have always been canned with a thick syrup—1 cup water to 1 cup sugar. Don't feel that you cannot can if the sugar doesn't reach around for this type of syrup. A thin or medium syrup can do the job.

Packing Jars.

Fruits, berries and tomatoes (which are considered a fruit for canning purposes) are delicate in texture and high in juice content. They should be packed solidly in the jar to prevent undue shrinkage and consequent "empty" appearance after processing. Precooking of the fruit is suggested because it shrinks the fruit or berry and enables you to get more in the jar. It takes a little bit longer to can by precooking, but the results are worth the effort.

Jars should be filled to within ½ inch of the top. If tightly packed up to this point, fruit and berries will rarely float after processing, and the jars will have a much nicer appearance because they are full of fruit.

Make sure the rims of the jar are not chipped as this will prevent a perfect seal. It's a good idea, too, to wipe the rims after the fruit and syrup are added so that no particles of food or juice stick to them to prevent them from sealing properly.

Making a Hot Water Bath.

A water bath canner may be made from a wash boiler or any other large deep vessel that has a close fitting cover and is deep enough to permit the jars to stand upright and still have enough water to come an inch or two above the jars. This water should be kept boiling during the entire processing period. It should never be allowed to boil away enough to come less than 1 inch above the jars. If necessary have a kettle of boiling water on the range, beside the water bath, to replenish the supply in the canner.

A rack which will hold the jars ½ inch from the bottom of the kettle is also essential. The jars should be set wide enough apart to allow for free circulation of water.

How do you count processing time? As soon as the water starts boiling briskly around the filled jars is the rule. The times given on the above table are tested and accurate. Set the clock with an alarm, if necessary, and do not try to whittle it down. As soon as the processing period is up, remove the jars and place on several thicknesses of cloth or newspaper in a place free from drafts and allow to cool. Then store in a cool, dry place. The jars should be set far enough apart to allow for free circulation of air to bring them to room temperature as quickly as possible.

LYNN SAYS

Fruit Canning Tips: Fruit sometimes discolors at the top of the jar if the fruit is under-ripe or when accurate processing time or temperature is not maintained. Discoloration of the top layers of the fruit is caused by oxidation which means that air has not been expelled from the jar by the heat of processing.

If food is packed too solidly or jars filled to overflowing instead of to within a half inch of the top, some of the liquid may boil out of the jars during processing.

Canning powders and preservatives are not necessary in the canning procedure.

Mule Track Money

By ELSIE WILLIAMS

McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Features.

"ME? FARM? You're crazier than you look, Hamp!" Banty McCann spat contemptuously and hitched up his overall pants. He glared up at Hamp Anderson. "I ain't no farmer. Who wants to mess with a truck crop when the mast is as good as it is this year? Hogs will be fat as butterballs by Thanksgiving. Farm? Phooey!"

Hamp Anderson placed a foot carefully on the porch step, cut a chew of tobacco just as carefully and tucked it into a corner of his mouth before he spoke. "No patriotism, I see," he said quietly. "Here the Gov'mint is hollerin' for vegetables and you want to traipse the woods. Look: Them hogs'll fatten theirselves. While they're doin' that you can work a acre of cukes."

A stout, round-faced woman came out and eased her bulk into a specially reinforced rocker. Hamp Anderson raised a hand to his wide-brimmed hat. "Howdy, Aunt Mat. How are you?"

"Fair to middlin', I reckon, Hamp. You-all talkin' cukes? Tom always did like to raise 'em, but he never could eat 'em." Tenderhearted Aunt Mat raised a corner of her checked apron to her eyes when she mentioned her late husband.

Hamp cocked an eye upward and peered judiciously at the sky. "Likely be a dry fall . . . how about it, Banty? Want to try a little easy money?"

"Sure wish you would, son," said Aunt Mat. "Ain't had a crop since

"Want to try a little easy money?"

—since Tom passed away." Aunt Mat sniffed heavily.

"Well—" said Banty again "I reckon I will. Bring on your seed and your fertilizer, Hamp. Doggone! Me—a farmer!"

Easy money! Everybody said cukes was easy money! Banty thought savagely as he finished bedding out his last piece of land in the rich pond bottom. He was anxious to get back into the woods and see about his hogs. Screw worms might kill a hog if he didn't find it in time. Gators might be catching the shotes. Snakes might have pizened one.

Cucumber seed comes up fast, especially in the fall, and Banty had no time for hog hunting. Then came the rains — hurricane season! The torrential downpour filled all the middles and flooded the ditches Banty hadn't taken time to clean out. Water backed up in his low field.

Banty took off his shoes, rolled up the legs of his pants and waded in with hoe and shovel. Hamp Anderson rode up to the fence on his big bay mare. "Looks pretty damp," Hamp admitted.

"Damp you say?" Hamp's deliberate understatement angered Banty. "Woods is full o' water, too. Ought to see 'bout my hogs. This whole cuke patch ain't worth a shuck!"

"Oh, we'll make out fine," Hamp said easily. "Reckon you'll save two-thirds of this field."

When the ground began to dry out, the plants grew unbelievably fast. "Be pickin' less'n 45 days from plantin' seed!" exulted Aunt Mat. "Bet you make money, Lonnie."

Banty patted her fat shoulder awkwardly. "Don't get but half, Aunt Mat. Hamp's furnishin' me," he reminded her. "Well, I'm goin' in the woods today and see 'bout my hogs."

The herd was on the creek bank. One sow had farrowed and lost all but one measly pig. Two shotes had screw worms in their ears, and one had nearly lost his tail. A fourth hobbled on three legs.

"Cukes!" he said aloud. "For blamed cukes—!" He turned and walked away.

Banty rode to market with the first load of cucumbers. Hamp was unusually silent. He's keepin' somethin' back from me, puzzled Banty, looking at the glum man. Wonder what?

He soon discovered the reason for Hamp's gloom. Posted bulletins and angry truck farmers had one theme: "Government regulation. October ceiling price on cucumbers—$2.10 per tub."

Banty McCann clenched his fists. He flung a stream of abusive words at the market, at farmers, and at cukes in particular.

"Easy money — mule track money! Phooey!"

FOLKS & THINGS ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

The local city officers are mighty good friends of ours, but we will just have to tell this little story that came to us. Seems the officer was calling down a lady who had made an improper turn and had broken several traffic laws in doing so. The officer asked the lady where she was from, to which she replied, "Cincinnati." The officers said, "Lady, there's no use lying to me, I saw an Ohio tag on your car."

Which gets us around to the story of the husband who had been arrested for speeding and brought into court:

The Judge (sternly): "Well, what's your excuse for speeding sixty miles an hour through the residence section?"

The Victim: "I had just heard your honor that the ladies of our church were giving a rummage sale and I was hurrying home to save my other pair of pants."

The Judge: "Case dismissed."

We got a new man down at the Shell Station on the corner. Paul Williamson and Joe Smith, operators of the "jernt," went fishing on the "Fourth" and got all sunburned—half way down. Both now have peeled off, that is half way down, and we believe the two halves should be considered "a new man." Joe says as a rule he likes for friends to give him a friendly slap on the back of a morning, but two or three times since the "Fourth" he has just about fainted when his friends got too friendly. Yep, now we got a new man down on the corner at the Shell Station.

We just learned today why after a Japanese reaches the age of 28 years he becomes 30. He doesn't like to be 29.

The other day a small niece of ours had listened attentively to the 'latest news' being broadcast. After a while she asked mother, "Why don't they ever broadcast mens news? They are always broadcasting 'ladies news."

The E. L. Klinner Furniture Company received some fruit dryers the other day. "Pat" Hamilton, Manager of the store, opened a couple and placed them in the window for display. Shortly after Judge Victor Heard came by and paused at the window to look at the "new fangled" contraptions. He called Pat, after looking at them for a while, and said, "Pat I can't see how in the world the eggs stay on those trays without rolling off." Pat told him, "Judge, that's not an incubator, that's a fruit dryer." The Judge threw up his hands and proceeded down the street without another word. (Aside to Judge Heard, You have plenty of company, "Vic." About nine out of ten who see the new fangled contraption think it is either a brooder or an incubator.—B).

A. B. Windham received a letter this week from an Auctioneer at Dalton Ga. Among other things he wanted to come to Chilton County and put on an auction sale for Mr. Windham. He had seen his "Lots For Sale" advertisement in Chilton County News This here News gets around.

Our dreams are getting better all the time—now we got help in the back end. We mean the back-end of the Chilton County News. An experienced linotype operator returned to us this week. We have a good apprentice now, and a "little devil" that's a dandy. Those additions to the Chilton County News force with the old ones who have been carrying on since "Pearl Harbor" will be able to get back in the old "groove" and give you folks a real newspaper again pretty soon.

George Williams Sansom was 70 years young this Tuesday. The full seventy years has been spent in Chilton except for three years in Autauga County and one year in Cuba with the United States Army. That was in 1898-99. Mr. George has 12 living children and one died when an infant. The wife, Mrs. Lula E. Minor Sansom, resides with him here. The News wishes our good friend, George Sansom, a happy birthday and hope for him many more worthful years of living among us.

We stopped by The Union-Banner Monday morning and congratulated Gene Wyatt on his 10 and a half pound youngster. It is a boy. He says both mother and son are doing nicely. We had no luck in getting a cigar. Gene spent all the time trying to convince us why he should be the one to get the "smoke."

We really felt like old times the first of the week when we could take our order book under arm and make the rounds for advertising and news like we used to each week back in the "good-old" days. Seems good again to walk in and chat awhile with all the fellows. And by-the-way, the ladies too. Things are still mighty quiet and we didn't sell much advertising, but we did renew some old acquaintances that we had neglected for several years. And we found out from each merchant that we contacted that they were glad to know that we were still in business and when stocks did warrant advertising we would get 'plenty.'

HIGHLAND

On Wednesday night of last week Staff Sgt. George Enfinger and Miss Agnes Mae Mims of Clanton were united in marriage at the home of our pastor, Rev. E. C. Hand.

The groom was dressed in a very neat uniform, and the bride's ensemble was navy blue and white accessories to match, with a beautiful corsage.

It was a beautiful ring ceremony in the presence of a few friends. Staff Sgt. Enfinger has spent something over three years overseas in India and China mostly and is now stationed in West Palm Beach, Fla. His people are in Chilton County now, but formerly came from Autauga County, where the family was raised.

The bride is a resident of Chilton County and lives on Rural Route No. Two. She is a fine young lady. The many friends of this splendid young couple wish them much happiness, joy and success, along the merital voyage of life.

The many friends of Sgt. Ed Langston will be glad to know that he is now home on a thirty-day furlough. He has spent around nine months overseas in the European area. Sgt. Langston was formerly the song leader of this church.

The friends of Corp. Cornelius Mullins are sorry that he has to leave Friday to go back to camp. He has been spending a 30-day furlough with his wife and parents.

Master Herbert Shaw and his little brother are spending a few days with their grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Shaw.

Miss Nora Dean Dickey of Anniston is spending this week with Miss Marietta Hamilton and other friends.

Our meeting has gotten off with a grand start. Rev. Carey Cox of Prattville is helping and he is a splendid preacher. Come and hear him. Take our word for it, you'll want to come again.

Prayer service begins at 7:30 o'clock in the evening; preaching at 8:30. Prayer service begins at 10 o'clock in the morning; preaching at 11:00. Everybody is invited.

Pointing out that seed from many vegetables grown in the home garden may be saved for planting in next year's garden, horticulturists of the Alabama Extension Service are urging gardeners to save and properly label and store seed from these crops.

PEACH PRODUCTION IS FAST GROWING INDUSTRY IN CHILTON COUNTY, with emphasis on intelligent grading and marketing as well as production. County Agent M. R. Glasscock reports that her farmers have 300,000 bearing trees on 3,000 acres, and 120,000 young trees set on 1,200 acres. This season 65 carloads and several thousand truckloads were shipped from the county. Above, upper left, Miss Jeanette Little picks luscious Hale peaches in orchard of R. M. Roper; right, fruit moves from orchard aboard trailer; lower, left culling overripe, off shape and green peaches as they go through machinery of Chilco Packing Plant at Clanton; right, J. B. DeRamus and his son, John, stand beside crates of No. 1 peaches going from packing machine into refrigerator car for shipment to Northern markets. (State Newsphoto.)

"THE CHILD OF BETHLEHEM"

A religious feature picture, "The Child of Bethlehem," will be shown in several Chilton County communities during the first week of August. The picture was produced by Cathedrial Films in Hollywood, considered the best producer of the highest quality sound religious pictures. With the feature will be a reel showing Japanese-Americans living in a relocation center. The pictures are being scheduled for Pleasant Grove August 2nd Training School 3rd, Mt. Pleasant 4th, Pleasant Hill 5th, Mineral Springs Schoolhouse 6th, and Thorsby Institute August 7th.

This motion picture program is being sponsored by the Farmers Union Cooperative and the United Congregational Church. Offerings are taken to help defray the expenses. Several communities have been requesting this service. The sponsors are anxious for as many people as possible to have the benefit of these inspirational programs.

SOIL CONSERVATION NEWS

Very fine plantings of sericea have been seen on different farms of Soil Conservation Cooperators in the county. Some of these plantings were in water disposal areas, and some were for field borders. Some plantings were on fields too steep or eroded for continuous cultivation of row crops. C. R. Childress of Jemison, Route One, and J. Litt Cox of Billingsley, Route one, have very good stands of young sericea.

Some farmers seem to be quite concerned about weeds in young sericea. As long as there are only weeds, there is not much need to worry. Crab grass can smother it out if the grass gets up high enough to fall over and form a mat over the young sericea plants.

Kathleen Norris Says:

Don't Be Someone Else

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

She never saw the beauty of the rolling waves or the brilliance of the happy crowd of soldiers and sailors and their girls streaming up and down the boardwalk.

DON'T spoil your life longing for something just because someone else has it. This is a real fault in American women, partly because they have so much, and because their leisure time lets them think about their neighbors.

If life was a little more real for us, if grim necessity more often knocked at our doors, we would be cured of this weakness. The women of the Orient don't know it at all. They drive straight ahead, each one planning and working for the comfort and protection of her own little group, not embittered by the fact that luxury and leisure and all the prettiness of life are denied her forever.

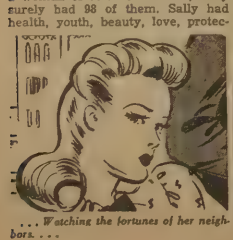
But the days of many an American woman are darkened by constant watching and comparing her neighbor's fortunes to her own. She doesn't appreciate at all what she has—all that matters is that the Browns have more.

For example, I once knew a woman named Sally. She was healthy, beloved, a happy wife and mother. I met her when she had her three small children at the seaside. She and I had rented neighboring cottages for a fortnight's vacation. We were within a block of the shore and all the wild delights of childhood — merry - go - rounds, dodgems, popcorn, slides, whirls, museums and sandy beach—were close at hand. Nobody could call it an aristocratic resort, but it was inexpensive, joyous and wholesome as only the shore can be.

Craved for Luxury Resort.

However, to Sally, the blight was that she had a friend who had taken her child to Tahoe—remote, refined and, in spots, very dull. But Tahoe is fashionable and Santa Cruz is not, and Sally kept comparing the two places until her vacation was ruined by fretting and discontent.

If Sally had been a child, how simple it would have been to say, "Now, not another word about Tahoe or what Nancy is doing. If I hear any more of this nonsense, Miss, you go straight to bed!"



But Sally isn't a child, so we had to put up with it. She never saw the beauty of the rolling waves or the brilliance of the happy crowd of soldiers and sailors and their girls streaming up and down the boardwalk. She never smiled when everyone was in the glorious salty surf, clinging to life lines, lying wet and breathless on the float. She didn't brighten when we gathered for a delicious hot breakfast in the coffee shop or took hamburgers and buns down on the beach. Not Sally! Nancy was at Tahoe, where everything was elegant and expensive, so there was no pleasure for Sally anywhere else.

Nancy, as it happens, came back with a bad case of hay fever and her little girl was sent off to camp, but that didn't interest Sally. She continued to remark frequently that she wished the holiday was over.

Ninety-nine women out of every hundred in the world would have thought her crazy. Some would have wondered why she wasn't struck dead for ingratitude, stupidity and blindness.

Had Almost Everything.

For if there are 100 good things for a woman of 30 in this world, Sally surely had 98 of them. Sally had health, youth, beauty, love, protection and plenty; she had a home, car, water, heat, clothes, food, pleasures, leisure, radio, telephone, gas stove, electric light. Sally had wifehood and motherhood, companionship, responsibility, a keen mind, an active body, bright eyes, good hearing, strong legs and clever fingers.

. . . Watching the fortunes of her neighbors. . . .

ENVY AND DISCONTENT

Foolishly longing for what others have blights the lives of many women. That yearning to "keep up with the Joneses" makes life miserable for women who have all the essentials for happiness. If they could only curb their childish envy of other people who may be a little richer, or more fortunate in some other way, they could be much happier.

Sally was one of these silly, discontented women. She had health, beauty, a loving husband, three children, and a middle-class family income. But these blessings were insufficient for Sally. Her friend Nancy could afford to go to an expensive and exclusive resort, for instance. Sally had to go to an ordinary seaside cottage colony. The only difference, as far as pleasure was concerned, was the social ranking of the two places. This distinction, nevertheless, bored into Sally's spirit and spoiled her vacation.

Miss Norris compares the lot of the average American woman with that of the European or Asiatic woman, for whom life is a constant struggle just to maintain existence in a war-torn world. How trivial would most of the American woman's difficulties appear in such a setting!

She had, even in this rented cottage, a comfortable bed and good books to read; she had white sheets and fresh blankets; she had a strip of garden, the sight of great trees, the nearness of that eternal miracle of healing, the sea, and that other miracle to which men have turned since the earliest days of Biblical history—the great line of rising dark mountains. But it is ridiculous to attempt to list what she had and it would be tragic to compare it, detail by detail, with the bitter need that millions of women overseas are facing.

These women, frightened, destitute and desperate, have traveled dusty roads looking only for water first, rest and then perhaps a little dark bread and a few boiled turnips or cabbages. They have reassured terrified children, promised them security, shelter, milk and food, only to have the little feet falter, the little hearts break and the children lie down beside the road to rest, not even rating a grave. They have known that their men were gone forever and with them all the dear old life of home, garden, kitchen, familiar stove and beds and home treasures—never to be found again.

One week with them might turn the mirror around for Sally and let her see not what she hasn't but what she has.

Handle Strawberries Carefully

Strawberries are scarce, so if you are lucky enough to have some on your menu, handle them with care. Do not wash them until ready to serve. Water clinging to the berries starts unnecessary spoilage. If you hull berries a long time before using, they may soften. If the strawberries must be held overnight, spread them on a flat plate and store uncovered in the refrigerator. Don't hesitate to can the berries, though, even though sugar is scarce. Can without it if necessary.

Postwar Air Freight To Be Within Reach of Every Farmer and Every Community of the Entire Country

Trained Pilots and Plenty Of Improved Planes for Everyday Needs of All

By Walter A. Shead
WNU Washington Correspondent.

How about having those spare binder parts dropped in your farm lot by parachute? Or how about calling up and having a flying ambulance deliver you to the nearest hospital for that emergency operation?

Or if you are in a hurry for that order you placed, call up and have them deliver it at your gate by helicopter. Ridiculous, you say. Well, not so ridiculous as you may think, for the amazing progress of air transportation during the war is reflected in these very practical steps for a new horizon for commercial operations as soon as peace permits.

As a matter of fact, the Civil Aeronautics administration in the department of commerce has on file at this moment applications for these and many more new types of civilian air business and these applications afford a stimulating picture of what the plane may soon be doing to advance new progress in American life and manner of living.

Old and new hands at the flying game, including many veterans still in uniform, have formed enterprises now simply waiting for the official green light to serve the public in many ways that would have been thought ridiculous or visionary a few years ago. For instance, some of the applications include:

Flying ambulance and funeral planes . . . armored airships for safe dispatch of currency and other valuables . . . delivery of new automobiles by huge glider trains . . . tank planes for shipment of gasoline, oil and other liquids . . . bus and taxi service . . . deliveries of medicine, food and of other department store merchandise . . . "fly-yourself" systems . . . sightseeing specialists . . . pick-up or delivery by parachute . . . and many others.

These projects are in addition to applications for wide extension of service into new territories sought by existing airlines and the entry of others into the fields of feeder, pick-up, general express and cargo business.

Start New Enterprises.

Applicants for certificates for these new enterprises cover the whole range of people who have been stirred to action by faith in the future of air transportation. In the active dockets of the department are the names of companies and individuals with experience in transporting persons and property by air. There are others who have had equally broad background in transportation by steamship, bus, taxicab and truck and there are still others, such as department store owners, who are obviously strong in financial resources, but who have never, perhaps, even delivered their own parcels.

Then there are the embryo airline magnates, like the man and his wife who want to start an air freight line between Los Angeles and New York, and for specifications for their fleet, submitted colored cutouts of a Liberator bomber from a Sunday supplement. As a matter of fact, practically all the applications state in more or less apologetic terms that the applicants have no planes with which to start business. But since practically none will be available until after the war, they are all on an equal basis from that standpoint.

Photo shows a record shipment of penicillin, nearly 3,000 pounds. This is just one of the many items that will be handled almost entirely in postwar era by the new and existing taxi and air freight lines.

The group of applicants who look toward peacetime flying business with the keenest anticipation and toward whom official eyes will look with greatest sympathy are the soldiers and sailors, some already discharged veterans and others ready to take to the air as soon as they are discharged.

Of the 350,000 military pilots which the war has produced, the majority who plan to make aviation their career, see their future as pilots for established airlines. There are, however, many who want to start their own business . . . nothing fancy, understand, maybe just a local feeder line. There has been as yet no breakdown to learn just what percentage of the applications already filed are by servicemen, but the percentage is high. A typical one is the application filed only a few days ago by Lt. James Walker Case of Sutter Creek, Calif., 28-year-old navy flier. Lieutenant Case wants to start a business flying persons and property to all parts of California and Nevada in the most suitable available aircraft, just as soon as the navy lets him go.

Taxi Rural Service.

There is also the Norsemen Air Transport company, which turns out to be several servicemen who want to continue their war association by establishing feeder airlines throughout New England.

Many of these projects may never see the light of day, but there are applications like that of Lt. Col. John C. L. Adams, who before being called back to his regular army job when war came, organized and operated an extensive air service in Panama. He wants to start a sightseeing business with helicopters or light planes, fanning out in various scenic routes from Cristobal and Balboa. Until he can start work sans uniform, his wife, Alberta, is getting things lined up.

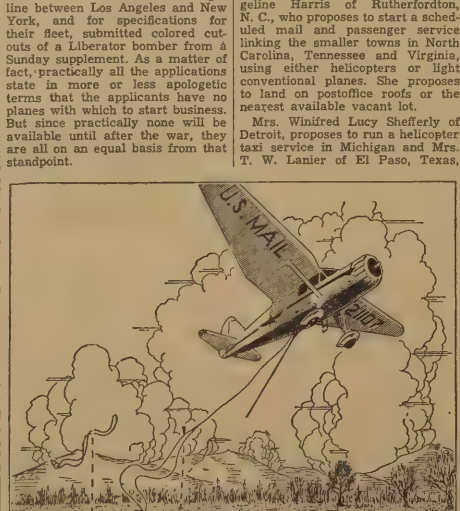
Then there are also a number of women who plan to start airlines on their own. Some of them, judging from their application papers, have already had successful careers in other lines of business. There is Angeline Harris of Rutherfordton, N. C., who proposes to start a scheduled mail and passenger service linking the smaller towns in North Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia, using either helicopters or light conventional planes. She proposes to land on postoffice roofs or the nearest available vacant lot.

Mrs. Winifred Lucy Shefferly of Detroit, proposes to run a helicopter taxi service in Michigan and Mrs. T. W. Lanier of El Paso, Texas, proposes to begin with transport of mail and later of persons and property on two circulating routes covering hitherto none too accessible places in Texas, New Mexico and Arizona.

The proposed air ambulance service, no doubt, had its inspiration from the remarkable operations in evacuation of wounded by the air transport command of the army and navy and the airlines under contract with them. Two applications for this service now on file with the C.A.A. are by long-established undertaking firms, who plan to use the airplanes either as missions of mercy or for burial. One of them is Shannon's of Fort Worth, Texas, who proposes to operate a helicopter ambulance or hearse from their city to or from any points within 600 miles; from within that radius to any place in continental U. S. or from anywhere in the country to within that circle. An exactly similar application is on file from W. C. Croy of Poplar Bluff, Mo.

Julian Bondurant's Armored Motor service of Memphis would enlarge his operation by use of airplanes throughout the south and southwest "on call and demand."

The fabulous supply of our motorized forces with fuel by airplane in the dash across France and elsewhere, probably influenced H. I. Moul, president of Coastal Tank Lines, Inc., of York, Pa., to file an application to supplement his fleet of 175 trucks with flying tankers. His ships would carry 3,500 gallons of any kind of bulk liquid commodity in compartmentized tanks throughout the United States and to Alaska, Canada and Mexico.



Autos by Air.

Delivery of jeeps and trucks by airplane to the battle lines unquestionably gave T. P. Geddes of the Automobile Air Freight corporation of Detroit, the inspiration for similar operations in peacetime. Before the war his firm was reputed to be the largest deliverers of new automobiles in the world, by steamship on the Great Lakes and by the well-known super-trucks. Their lake vessels the year before the war transported 180,000 cars. Now their concern proposes to do rush orders on the same job with huge cargo planes and glider trailers. They seek a certificate to transport automobiles from the middlewest to anywhere in the United States and to bring back general cargo to that area.

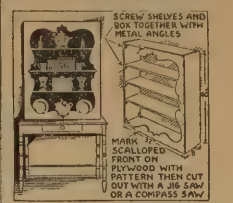
Department store deliveries with the helicopter as the favored vehicle is proposed in dozens of applications on file. Perhaps the best known firms include the Hecht Company, Inc., of Washington, D. C., and the William Filene Sons company of Boston. Both would cover the metropolitan area surrounding their cities and would also seek to serve their customers in smaller cities at greater distances.

E. J. McKeown, president of the Producers Air Lines of Toledo, would use cargo planes, gliders and helicopters in the transportation of perishable foods, flowers, drugs, medicines and medicine ingredients. A proposed plan of similar type is that of the Fish Airlines corporation, headed by Charles J. McGowan of New Bedford, Mass., which would emphasize rushing sea foods from Massachusetts and Rhode Island to fishless regions of the country.

Plane builders have demonstrated that there may be a plane built for every purpose, that has been their record in wartime. And with plenty of skilled operators available, also as a result of the war, it remains to be seen whether or not the American public is really ready to try its wings when peace comes.

Drawing shows plane in full flight picking up mail sack. The same technique will be available in peace time and regularly routed commercial planes are expected to drop and pick up packages while on the wing.

Taxi Firms to Start Air Helicopter Service



A number of long established taxicab companies, such as Frank Sawyers' Checker Taxi of Boston, have applied for general air taxi service by helicopter. This field too, has its specialists for at least two operators, who for years have transported passengers between airports and downtown districts, stand ready to perform the same function with helicopters. One of them is John P. Carey, president of the Grand Central Cadillac Renting corporation, who furnishes limousine service between LaGuardia airport and the Airlines Terminal building in New York, and the other is Joe Ferrant's Airdrome transport which would be at the beck and call of film stars on the west coast.

William Edward Hann of Detroit, proposes to replace horses by airplanes in the sightseeing field. He has filed application to make it possible for saddle-shy tourists to see Grand Canyon National park, Rainbow Bridge national monument in Utah and Canyon de Chelly national monument, Arizona, by airplane.

There are scores of other applications now on file and more are coming in daily for new businesses, new and novel enterprises with the use of airplanes. As of the first of June more than 600 such applications were on file with the Civil Aeronautics board. This number will be increased at a rapid rate during the months following V-J Day.

Scalloped Cupboard On Table or Chest

IF YOU have a wall space crying to be filled with an important piece of furniture, here is the answer. A breakfront cupboard effect to hold bright bits of pottery and china and perhaps a few books. Cost a fortune? Not at all. You can have it and save money for a bond too.

You will need a base which may be a table that you have on hand or a chest of drawers made by taking the mirror off of an old dresser, also some short lengths of lumber and plywood. A simple box cupboard is made to place on this base. The next step is to mark the design for the scalloped front on the plywood and cut it out with a compass saw or take it to a woodworker to be cut with a power saw. Paint or stain the cupboard to match the base, and stretch fabric across the back to make a colorful background for your treasures.

NOTE—Pattern 264 gives large cutting diagrams and illustrated directions for making the box cupboard; also an actual-size pattern for the scalloped front. A list of materials is included. To get Pattern 264, send 15 cents with name and address direct to:

GOD'S PROMISE OF A NATION

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 17:1-10.
GOLDEN TEXT—I will establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee and to thy seed after thee.—Genesis 17:7.

God keeps His promises. It may have appeared that God had forgotten, but He had not, and in our lesson we find Him ready to fulfill His promise.

We need to learn the lesson of patience, of awaiting God's time for the carrying out of His purpose. He is not in any hurry, but He always arrives on time. If we travel life's way with Him, all will be well.

Abram found the fullness of God's blessing because he sought His will for life and service. We find him

I. Walking in God's Plan (vv. 1, 2).

The place of blessing is not in some cloistered refuge where the circumstances of life and its problems cannot disturb us. It is out in the daily walk with God, in the home, the office, the shop.

What is God's plan for the life of the believer? Just what He told Abram: "Be thou perfect." Nothing less will do, for He is a perfect God. His law is perfect (Ps. 19:7). He requires a perfect obedience to the perfect law (James 2:10). This was His standard for Abram, and it can be no less for us.

How shall we attain to it? Only in Christ can we meet and fulfill God's plan of perfection.

That means that as followers of the Lord we are to seek His power for the outworking of His grace in our lives. We are not to be content with a Christian life on a low standard or lacking any of the graces which God can give us.

We, too, must recognize that if God is to give us His full measure of blessing, we must walk in accord with His will, walking in the light as He is in the light (I John 1:7). Much of the failure and impotence of present day spiritual life is explained by the willingness of Christians to live imperfect lives.

II. Talking of God's Purpose (vv. 3-8).

Abram fell on his face in adoration and worship. Ineverence and humility, he put himself in the place of subjection and service.

What happened? "God talked with him" (v. 3). This man was ready for a holy conversation with the Lord. His attitude of body was only the outward expression of an attitude of heart which was right. So God and he talked about the purpose of the Lord for Abram's life.

He had been Abram, which means, "exalted father," that is, of a family or a tribe; now he became Abraham, "the father of a multitude."

This is the first of many instances in Scripture where a name was changed by God to mark an important event, or a change of heart. For example, Jacob "the supplanter" became Israel, "a prince with God" (Gen. 32:28); Simon became Peter, "a rock" (Matt. 16:17, 18).

The letter to the church at Pergamos speaks of the one who overcomes in Christ's name as having a new name written which no man knows save he that receives it (Rev. 2:17). The believer on Christ is a changed man, a new creature, whether his name be changed or not. God wants to change men—has He changed you?

The promise is renewed to Abraham. It was to his "seed," that is, his descendants. He took the blessing from God's hand, accepting things that as yet were not, as though they were. God is able to make them come to pass (cf. Rom. 4:16-18).

III. Trusting God's Promise (vv. 9, 10).

Down through the ages every man in the great host to descend from Abraham was to bear the outward token that he belonged to the covenant people. This was to be a symbol of and to lead the recipient into that attitude of heart which would bring outward rite into fulfillment as an inward reality.

Observe that after Abraham, it was always the parent who thus brought the son into the covenant. This speaks of the parental responsibility to bring the little children to the Lord, and it also gives us the precious assurance that God is interested in the children and ready to receive them at the hands of parents, taking them into His own tender care.

Thus down through the generations, Israel was to show their faith in God, their assurance that He would keep His promises to them, and their consequent eagerness that their families should be counted into the covenant with God.

Christ is ready and eager to undertake for our children. His grace is sufficient, not only for us, but also for those who come after us. His promise is to our "children's children" (Ps. 103:17, 18), "of such as keep His covenant." Let us trust Him, and put ourselves and our children in that place of obedience where He may bless us and them.

A Bell for Adano

By John Hersey

W. N. U. FEATURES

THE STORY THUS FAR: The American troops arrived in Adano, with Major Joppolo, the Amgot officer in charge. Sergeant Borth was in charge of security. The Major was determined to hold the confidence of the people and to replace their bell stolen by the Nazis. Despite orders issued by General Marvin, Joppolo permitted the carts to enter the town with water and food. The bell arrived and while the Major was busy seeing that it was taken care of, the courier arrived with dismissal orders for Major Joppolo from General Marvin. Borth put the orders in his pocket, to keep until after the party to be given the Major that night. He knew the effect it would have on everyone.

CHAPTER XXIII

It was really good. When the Major saw it, he stood up in delight. He said: "So that is why you wanted my picture taken!"

Gargano posed as if with one hand on a camera and the other squeezing a shutter bulb and tried to imitate the cracked voice of old Spataforo: "Young man, you are vain. All you want is to look at your face."

This time when all laughed, the Major laughed with them.

"Thank you," Major Joppolo said. That was all he had time to say, for the officials of Adano left the room quickly. In any case, it was all the Major was able to say.

The committee of hosts stood waiting in the entrance hall of Quattrocchi's house. Old Bellanca was there, ex officio, and Cacopardo, the only resident of Adano who owned a swallow-tail coat and the only one who would wear one if he had it, and the fat Craxi, who appeared to have exceeded his limit of three bottles of wine for dinner, and Signora Carmelina Spinnato, representing as well as she could the fair sex, and the white-haired Lojacono, who was included because he had done such a good picture. The ones of the committee who were absent were Tomasino, out of respect for the dead fishermen, and Gargano, who was otherwise engaged.

It was ten minutes after starting time, and the guest of honor had not arrived. Giuseppe, who had arranged the whole thing, hovered in the background, saying over and over: "The Mister Major will be here any minute now."

The Mister Major was at that minute calling for Tina, and Tina, in the way of all women, either was not ready or was not willing to admit that she was ready.

Finally, at a quarter to eight, Tina came out of her room. She was dressed in a flimsy white blouse and a huge red taffeta skirt.

Major Joppolo's slight annoyance at being kept waiting dissolved at once. "This was worth waiting all night for," he said.

Tina curtsied gravely. She gathered some of her skirt on her left arm and reached with her right hand for Major Joppolo's arm. He offered it to her and the couple left, shouting good-byes to Tomasino and Rosa, who was beady with perspiration from helping her daughters get ready.

On their way down the Via Umberto the First the couple heard two small children crying. In the darkening evening they could just make out two little figures huddled on the curb on the other side of the street. They crossed.

They found the ragged little son of Erba and the well-dressed grandson of Cacopardo sitting with their arms around each other crying hard.

Major Joppolo crouched down and patted the boys' backs and asked what the matter was.

Between sobs, little Erba managed to say: "We were too late—for the feast—of the caramels."

Little Cacopardo said: "Too late."

"For the what?"

Little Erba said: "For the picnic of caramels. We—we—are the only ones—who were left behind."

Little Cacopardo said: "All the other children."

Major Joppolo remembered what he had told Gargano to do, and he said: "Well, never mind, we'll take you instead to a grownup party. Come with us."

So the Major and Tina walked on toward Quattrocchi's house, each holding a little child by the hand.

When they entered the house, the fat Craxi, who had a little too much wine in his belly, rushed forward in amazement. "Son of Mary!" he exclaimed. "He has a family! Two fine little boys" — he patted the youngsters on the head—"and a beautiful—"

He gulped when he saw that the "wife" was Tina.

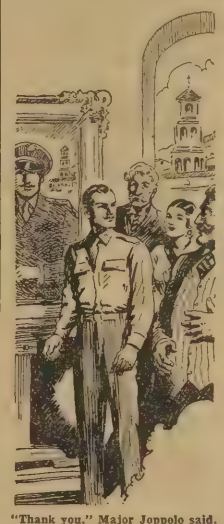
"Mister Major," he said, "why did you not tell us?"

But by this time the rest of the committee had come forward, and the confusion of their greetings overwhelmed Craxi's confusion. Old Cacopardo took both his well-dressed little grandson and the ragged little Erba by their hands, and kept them with him all evening.

Giuseppe met the Major, wringing his hands and making desperate faces. "Mister Major, where have you been? I have been looking for you on all the balconies and in all the bedrooms."

"That was hardly necessary, Giuseppe," the Major said. "What did you want?"

"Fat Craxi and your Sergeant, they are misbehaving. I can't do anything with them."



The Major said to Tina: "Wait here," and he went off with Giuseppe to find Craxi and Borth.

Major Joppolo said sharply: "Borth, behave yourself."

When the Major spoke so angrily, fat Craxi tiptoed out of the room, and Giuseppe followed him to keep an eye on him.

The Major and Borth were alone. The Major spoke again: "Behave yourself or go home."

Borth was drunk because of the Major. He had never been drunk in uniform before. But when the Major spoke so angrily, that streak of contrariness in Borth which made him tease people so much, which made him always laugh at serious people and deflate pompous ones, came out in him. He said thickly: "You can't boss me around."

"Thank you," Major Joppolo said.

"Sergeant Borth," the Major said, with obvious emphasis on the word Sergeant.

"Don't Sergeant me," Borth said: "you have no 'thority to boss me."

"I have just as much authority as I ever had, and if you don't behave—"

"Oh no you haven't," Borth said. "You can't boss anybody, not in Adano."

"Borth, you're drunk. Now behave."

"Joppolo, you're fired. You been relieved. You're nobody round here." And Borth began to cry again.

"Borth, I don't know what you're talking about, but I—"

The Major broke off and went over to Borth and took him by the arm, to try to lead him out.

"Take your hands off me," Borth said. He reached in his pocket and said: "Here, read that."

Major Joppolo read the order recalling him from Adano.

"Where did you get this?" he asked.

Borth was crying again. "Your desk. I wanted to keep you from seeing it until after the party."

Victor Joppolo put up a beautiful front for the rest of the evening, until the very moment when he was saying good night to Tina just inside her front door. Then he put his arms around her and said miserably: "I'm so unhappy."

Tina pushed back and looked at his face. She put her hands on his shoulders and said: "But I thought you were so happy?"

The Major was in control of himself again. "I am," he said, "I'm sorry."

"Is it because of your wife?" Tina asked.

"No, Tina, it's nothing." Then, in the shadow of the stairway of her house, he kissed her tenderly and said: "Till I see you again."

She was frightened and she said: "What is the matter? Why did you say good-bye instead of good night? What is the matter?"

"Nothing, Tina. Good night, Tina."

It was the middle of the morning before Major Joppolo could get his papers straightened up and his last-minute directions given.

The Major called the motor pool and asked for a jeep to take him to Vicinamare.

Then he told Borth: "I don't want to say good-bye to anyone, Borth. I don't know whether I could."

Borth did not mock this morning. He said: "I am sorry about last night, Major. My intentions were good. I wanted you to have a good time at the party."

"I know."

The Major thought a minute and then said: "Borth, try to help whoever takes my place to try to do a good job in Adano."

Borth said: "I'm afraid it will be that awful dope from Pontebasso."

The Major said: "I hope not. Adano needs an understanding man."

Borth said: "Adano needs you, Major."

The Major said: "Too late to talk about that. I wonder how Marvin ever found out about the carts."

Borth suspected Captain Purvis, but he said: "One of his staff must have driven through or something."

The Major said: "Yes, I guess so."

The jeep came. So as not to arouse suspicion, Borth went with the driver to the Major's house and got his baggage. His entire possessions consisted of a bedroll, with his clothes rolled into it.

When the jeep got back to the Palazzo, Major Joppolo took his portrait under his arm and went downstairs and out.

He shook Borth's hand but he did not say good-bye.

The lazy Fatta, standing on the sidewalk, said by way of making conversation: "Going somewhere?"

Major Joppolo tried to sound cheerful as he said: "Not far. How is Carmelina this morning?"

The lazy Fatta said: "She is making a rabbit stew."

The driver said: "Where to, Major?"

The Major did not want to say Vicinamare so that Fatta or anyone else could hear it. Perhaps he could not say it. Anyhow, he just said: "This way," and he pointed out the Corso Vittorio Emanuele.

About four miles outside the town the Major said to the driver: "Stop a minute, would you please?"

The driver stopped the jeep.

"Listen," the Major said. "Do you hear something?"

It was a fine sound on the summer air. The tone was good and it must have been loud to hear it as far as this.

"Just a bell," the driver said. "Must be eleven o'clock."

"Yes," the Major said. He looked over the hills across the sea, and the day was as clear as the sound of the bell itself, but the Major could not see or think very clearly.

"Yes," he said, "eleven o'clock."

Determination Wins, Says The Milton Matsons

Mr. and Mrs. Milton W. Matson, who live on Route 2, Verbena, can tell you very quickly they don't believe in "Alladdin and His Magic Lamp" or that any other wishful thinking will get you any place without action and strong determination to back it up.

This family of ten knows a lot about action turned into hard work and a determination which was born of the depression to rise above their meager existence to a better way of living.

During the depression the Matsons and their seven children were having a hard time making a living. They know exactly how it feels not to have changing clothes, or enough cover on cold nights, or a comfortable bed. They know exactly how it feels to have as their only possessions a few household goods, and a cow bought on credit. They know about all this because six years isn't long enough to forget those things when they have happened to you.

Standing in their own yard, gay with flower beds, and freshly painted buildings, one could feel the deep warmth of appreciation and the pride of these plain American farm people. Their 80 acre farm spread out in a neat pattern of growing crops, green pastures and fruit trees heavy with fruit.

"Speaking of fairy stories," Mrs Matson said, 'We feel as if the Farm Security Administration has been our fairy godmother, and we tell everybody how proud we are of the help it has been to us. We know of people who feel it is a disgrace to borrow money through FSA," she went on to say, but the way we feel it is right the opposite. We feel it has been our privilege, because it has helped us in a way we had prayed for during our first years of farming. We are not ashamed for people to know how little we had when FSA made us a loan in 1939. It is no disgrace to be poor and it's no disgrace to tell the truth," Mrs. Matson said, "We didn't have anything as security so we couldn't get a loan from any other lending agency. We were told the FSA was set up to help the poor farmer who couldn't get credit elsewhere, and we welcomed the opportunity. I tell you, it was the answer to our prayers. I've pieced quilts at night for money to buy clothes. I bought sacks for ten cents each to make my boys shirts out of and they wore them to church. I still make all of their every day shirts from feed sacks and they are not ashamed to wear them. We didn't have fruit jars or a pressure cooker so we did not can food for the winter. Farm Security included money in our first loan for that and I canned 325 quarts that first year—1939. Last year I canned 900 quarts and will do that again this year plus a yearling for beef."

"That first time we got a loan, we borrowed enough for tools, two mules, a cow, fertilizer and money for food and clothes," Mr. Matson remarked. "We figured we had a net worth of about one hundred and twenty-five dollars, you might say, nothing to put up as security. The other day we figured up we own about sixteen hundred dollars worth of livestock and equipment, and we have our own home which we are buying through the Tenant Purchase division of the Farm Security Administration."

"Having a place of our own means a lot to us," Mr. Matson said, "We knew before we came here it would take hard work and doing without some things to pay for it. We feel that any sacrifice we make is well worth the satisfaction and joy of knowing this place belongs to us.

"We are proud we have a place for the children to feel is part theirs. Those who are already gone have a home to come back to. The boys in Service helps out by sending money back and we are using it to pay on the place. The children here are interested in 4H Club work and complete their projects here at home. We want them to get more education than we did, and we are planning on all of them finishing high school at least."

"The payments on our place run over a period of forty years, but we intend to pay for it much sooner than that," Mr. Matson said, "we are not depending on cotton alone but have several cash crops and we pay as we harvest the crops. We figure that we save ourselves money by doing that. The sooner you pay a debt the sooner the interest crops."

Mr. Matson looked out across his field for several minutes, then with a twinkle in his keen eyes, he said, "You know, a lot of people will say a man can't ever pay for a place through the FSA. We know of three that have already been paid for right here in this county, and we know several more who have their places well over half way paid for. That's proof enough to us it can and is being done. It is the best way that's ever been offered a tenant farmer to become a land owner. We don't know any other agency who gives a man an opportunity to buy a farm without having to make a down payment. There was a time when we didn't know which way to turn, now we honestly feel we have found peace, security and a much better way of life."

FARM INCOME FROM GREEN PASTURES

An 80 acre farm owned and operated by Mr and Mrs Cleo Cofer in the Union Grove community, six miles east of Jemison, is being "revived". Never again will it be just a cotton farm. The acres which once bore only the gaunt, bare, brown cotton stalks to mark the end of the season will be alive with green acres during the winter months to come. These same cotton acres will bring forth fruits of the soil in rich cover crops and winter grains.

Mr and Mrs Cofer for the first time in their lives are experiencing the thrill and satisfaction of being on a place of their own. They bought the place last fall through the aid of the Farm Security Administration. The Cofer's were interested in getting ahead and were also interested in getting away from the grind of farming on halves. They knew the Farm Security Administration made long term loans to buy farms at a low rate of interest and that these loans were made to young families who wanted a chance to become land owners. They are taking full advantage of the opportunities offered to farmers thru the Farm Security Administration.

You can't help but catch the spark of enthusiasm which burns in this family about the work they are doing. "We don't mind work" they said, "and we have worked out a long time plan on our farm and we know what we are going to do to make it pay off."

Mr. Cofer continued by saying: "The man who depends on cotton alone will have a hard time when prices get back to normal. Five cent cotton won't pay debts and keep a family going. Our plan is to raise pure bred cattle, some truck crops, and a little cotton. We plan to have several sources of income so if one fails, we will have something else to depend on for cash."

"In 1935" continued Mr Cofer, "we bought our first registered jersey heifer. From her we have raised six heifers and have sold two of them as milch cows. The yearlings are swapped for grade heifers. We plan to have at least two heifers for market each year. Our surplus milk will be fed to the pigs which will be marketed as top hogs. We also sell from 8 to 10 pounds of butter each week. This about takes care of our grocery bill".

The Cofers spoke with pride about their garden and food crops. "The farmer who brings his food home in a sack will never get anywhere" they said. "We grow everything we eat except the salt, soda, and few little thing like that. Our 400-500 canned jars of food, including a beef plus our dried and stored food with a fall and winter garden, is our living after summer is gone".

"Making old things do" has become Mrs Cofers slogan about the home. She has turned into a first rate carpenter in fixing up the furnishings. She has turned an old dresser into a servicable and attractive kitchen cabinet. Two wall cabinets and a dressing table have been constructed out of apple bokes, and two car seats have been made into comfortable chairs, complete with slip covers.

The Cofers are interested in paying for their farm as rapidly as possible. A few minutes spent in conversation with them is proof enough to know they have their goal in view and they believe that our Lord helps those who helps themselves.

The instrument itself is only a very small part of the facilities needed to furnish you telephone service. The necessary wires must be available from your house to the telephone central office . . . there must be available switchboard facilities . . . and a great deal of other equipment.

Major additions to telephone facilities have been stopped for over three years because the manufacture of telephone equipment has been diverted to the needs of our armed forces.

To meet the demands of the thousands who are waiting for service, Southern Bell is engineering a program of expansion to begin when equipment is available. As this necessary new material and equipment does become available additional time will be required for its installation and to catch up on present held orders for service before new telephones can be installed without delay.

VOLUMN XXIII CLANTON, ALABAMA, THURSDAY, AUGUST 2, 1945 NUMBER 31

Fox Hunters Association Holds Annual Meeting

Chilton County Fox Hunters Association held it's annual meeting on Wednesday, July 25th, 1945, about 8 miles northeast of Clanton, near Thompson's Mill on Yellow Leaf Creek.

A delicious supper of southern fried chicken, barbecued goat, fresh fried fish, iced tomatoes and lettuce was served to the one hundred and four members of the association who attended the meeting.

The treasurer reported receipts of $104.00 for membership dues, together with $49.00 contributed to the association by its many friends in Clanton, making the total receipts of the association for 1945 the sum of one hundred and fifty-four dollars. He also reported the balance brought forward from last year was $21.18, making the total of $174.18. He reported all bills received by the association, except three small ones fully paid in the amount of $155.78 and a salvage of $9.00, leaving cash credit in bank account of the Association of $27.40.

The association voted to postpone the election of officers and instructed the acting board of directors of the Association to draft a constitution and by-laws to be presented to the members of the Association at a specially called meeting to be held within 90 days.

At 7:30 a cloudburst broke and it seemed that the annual dinner and hunt would have to be postponed, however, in a few minutes the rain was over. And at 8:30 about fifty hounds were cast on Chandler Mountain. They struck and soon put to running their fox. The fox ran within hearing of the hunters gathered at the picnic grounds. About ten o'clock the dogs had divided into three packs and the hunters could at all times hear one of the packs running near the picnic grounds. The chase continued until ten a.m. the next morning.

Central Alabama was well represented at the hunt. Hunters brought their dogs for the chase from Calera, Maplesville, Jemison, Verbena, Cooper, White City, Alabaster, Prattville, Birmingham, Montgomery, Sylacauga Rockford, Stanton, Plantersville and Clanton.

The food was good, the weather was perfect, the dogs were fast, the fox were plentiful, what more could be said?

The Association thanks its many friends whose efforts were so generously given in making the 1945 annual picnic and hunt of the Chilton County Fox Hunters Association so pleasant for its members and many friends.

RETURNED SOLDIER WILL NOT NEED 1945 DRIVER'S LICENSE

Servicemen returning from overseas will not be required to purchase a 1944-45 driver's license in order to operate a motor vehicle, providing they held a valid Alabama driver's license on enlistment, Chief Van B. Gilbert, director of the Department of Public Safety announced today.

The director has issued instructions to all Highway Patrolmen in the field to make no charges against returning veterans for not having a current driver's license, if they held an Alabama license when they entered the service. This order will extend through September 30th of this year when 1944-45 drivers licenses expire.

IT'S A GIRL

Mr. and Mrs. William T. (Blackie) Griffin of Montgomery announce the birth of a baby girl, born July 24th, at St. Margaret's Hospital.

They have named her Patricia Ann. Mrs. Griffin is the former Elsie Atchison of Maplesville, Ala., and Clanton.

Complete Farm Plan Made By Conservation Department

A complete farm plan made last week on the farm of Mr. C. L. Wilkins of Enterprise Community. This plan included a complete water disposal system, permanent pasture winter grazing and cropping system for row-crop land. Mr. Wilkins plans to use meadow strips stabilized with Sericea for water disposal areas. By doing this the Sericea serves two purposes It will stabilize the water disposal areas and will be used as a hay crop He has also set aside one field to be used for winter grazing Oats will be on the field one year and Crimson Clover and Rye Grass will be on the field the next year.

Mr. N. H. Harrell of Billingsley has something to show for the soil-improving ability of Kobe Lespedeza. Using Kobe in one field and building a rotation around it, (Oats and Lespedeza two of three years then row crops) in fifteen years he increased his corn yield from four to thirty-nine wagon loads. The Lespedeza rotation probably warn't the cause of all the increase in yield; but give a good rotation time, and it will answer for itself.

Put all green vegetables and root vegetables in boiling water. The quicker vegetables can be cooked, the less food value they lose and the more attractive and appetizing they stay.

When sewing, especially if you are an amateur, you will find the cutting problem much simplified if the pattern is pressed before being used.

Homemakers with an abundant supply of butter will enjoy more delicious pastry if they will use butter for ¼ to ½ the fat required in their recipes.

Chilton County Schools To Open September 10th

According to an announcement from the Superintendent of Education, September 10th has been set for the opening of all Chilton County schools. This action was taken by the Board of Education at its regular monthly meeting held on July 27th.

The annual Teachers Institute will be held at the Chilton County High School on Monday, September 10th and schools will open their doors the following day, Tuesday, September 11.

At the present time, many teaching positions have not been filled. A complete list of teachers in the county will be published at a later date when teachers have been secured to fill the vacancies.

Things To Do To Assure Peach Crop Next Year

After the peach crop has been gathered the grower should begin plans for the next crop, advises Lyle Brown, A.P.I. Extension Horticulturist. Immediately after the harvesting of peaches, growers have some follow-up work to do.

"All fruit on the ground, as well as that which has dried on the tree, should be picked up and destroyed, or fed to the hogs," he says. If you fail to do this, plum curculio worms will develop into mature insects and spend the winter in the brush and trash around the orchard. These are the adults that you have such a hard time controlling during the spring. Brown rot fungus lives on the dried-up fruit whether on the ground or on the tree. Brown rot fungus will also spend the winter on your trees and then be ready to attack the spring peaches. This is an important step in controlling two major pests of peaches.

"All dead or broken limbs should be cut out of the trees to prevent the further decay of the tree. The orchard should be given a thorough cultivation, but do not plow or disc too deeply. Two to three inches should be enough. This is an important step because the weeds and grass rob the tree of much needed water and nutrients. A light application of complete fertilizer will pep up sluggish trees and hold the leaves longer.

"Remember that orcharding is a year-around job. Get your spray machine cleaned up and if any part needs repairing or replacing, do it now. Do not wait until it is time to spray again. Order materials for the dormant spray and for treating the trees for bore.

Lower Crop Yields Forecast For Alabama

Present indications point to lower crop harvests in Alabama this year.

"Smaller acreages are reported for all crops except wheat, oats and wild hays, reports the Alabama Cooperative Crop Reporting Service.

Smallest corn acreage since 1939 is in prospect for 1945. July 1 date indicates 2,858,000 acres for harvest this year, compared with 3, 008,000 acres in 1944 and the 10-year average of 3,449,000 acres. Production is forecast at 41,441,000 bushels, about 14 per cent short of the 1944 crop and nearly 9 per cent under average. Yield is indicated at 14.5 bushels per acre, compared with 16.0 last year and 13.2 the 10-year average.

Acreage of cotton in cultivation of July 1, 1945, is estimated at 1,380,000 acres, 3.4 per cent less than the 1,429,000 acres in cultivation on July 1 last year and 33.6 per cent less than the 10-year average. If the per cent abandoned this year is equal to the 10-year average, 1,369,000 acres is indicated for harvest. This would be the smallest cotton acreage for harvest in Alabama during any year since 1869.

The estimated 211,000 acres of oats for harvest this year compares with 192,000 last year and the 10-year average of 140,000 acres. The indicated yield at 24.0 bushels per acre equals the record yields obtained in 1944 and is about 5 bushels above average. Indicated production of 5,064,000 bushels if realized will be the largest crop since 1882 and will exceed the 1944 crop by 1,595,000 bushels and the 10-year average by 2,355,000 bushels.

1944 Cotton Loan Extended

The Department of Agriculture has announced that the Commodity Credit Corporation will continue to carry 1944 cotton loans, with the producer having the right of repayment after the maturity date of the notes on July 31, 1945. The loans will be carried in past due status for an indefinite period, subject to call by the Corporation. This will permit producers to repay their loans and obtain possession of the pledged cotton or to sell their equity in the cotton after July 31, 1945, in the same manner as prior to the maturity date of the notes.

Health Officer Urges Residents Take Typhoid Shots

Some time ago your local Health Officer called the public's attention to the fact that we were rewarded with indifference when we assigned certain days and hours to the various communities in order that the people in that area might protect themselves wih serum (shots). We feared then that indifference and carelessness would eventually lead to cases of typhoid fever.

Since that time the Health Department has had two cases of typhoid fever reported, one in the City of Clanton and one in the rural district Let this notice cause you to come to the Health Department either on Saturday mornings or Thursday afternoons in order that you may be protected.

We again make the offer when as many as twenty individuals wish a representative from this Health Department to have a clinic, we will be glad to assign certain hours in which to hold this clinic.

Take your shot and be safe!

Bulletin Available On Fall And Winter Gardening

"Fall and Winter Gardens" is the title of a new 4-page publication prepared and printed for free distribution by the extension service of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

It was prepared by W. A. Ruffin, extension horticulturist, and tells about vegetables that can be planted for fall and winter months. It also tells how to prepare the soil and how to combat insects.

Copies may be obtained without cost from county agents or by writing the extension service at Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

Rates Established For Winter Legumes

The Alabama Agricultural Adjustment Agency announces the following rate of payment for "establishing a satisfactory cover of winter legumes seeded in the Fall of 1945."

Austrian winter peas 4.9 cents per pound; Hungarian vetch or chaffy crimson clover 5.8 cents; Hairy or wooly pod vetch 11.5 cents; Common vetch, Willamette vetch (certified), or bur-clover (in bur) 6.6 cents; Willamette vetch (uncertified) 6.2 cents; Blue lupine 5.2 cents; Crimson clover (clean) 11.6 cents; Caley peas 6.0 cents; Monantha vetch 9.5 cents; Mixed vetches (minimum 70 percent hairy) 10.6 cents.

Payment will be made for legumes seeded with small grain.

The following seeding rates per acre are recommended:

Austrian winter peas, caley peas (scarified), Willamette, Monantha common, or mixed vetches—30 pounds; Hairy, wooly pod, or Hungarian vetch —20 pounds; Crimson clover (clean) —15 to 20 pounds; Blue lupine—50 to 5 pounds; Caley peas (unscarified) 40 pounds; Chaffy crimson or bur clover—60 pounds.

Winter legumes should be fertilized with at least 300 pounds of superphosphate or 800 pounds of basic slag per acre, unless the land was fertilized with at least 300 pounds of a commercial fertilizer per acre for the previous crop. Where there is a deficiency of lime, it is material should be applied.

Seed receipts or other supporting evidence of seed used must be presented. Prior approval of the county committee must be obtained.

SCHOOL MEETING AT BAKER JUNIOR HI

There will be a meeting at Baker Junior High School Friday evening, July 3, at 8:00 o'clock for the purpose of discussing a lunch room.

All parents are urged to attend.

Before mending a hole in the elbow of a sweater, paste a piece of mosquito netting over it. It will give a firm base on which to do the best darning job.

To reheat vegetables use the top of the double boiler. It will prevent that "warmed over" flavor.

Dress shields in these hot days prolong the life of rayon dresses, keep them fresh longer and reduce the cleaning bills.

Kathleen Norris Says:

Take It and Like It

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

"My father-in-law is a fine old man, but so close that a light left burning or a faucet left running will give him a chance to scold for hours. I use too much soap in the baby's bath; I leave good gravy and potatoes on my plate.

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

THE trouble with Helen Johnson is that she won't accept the inevitable. She hates the conditions of her life, and yet she can't seem to find any way of escape. So many women are in her position now that it seems worth while to quote her letter.

"I married at 20, six years ago," writes Helen. "Lewis, my husband, is two years older; he is now with the army in France, but before the war he made a good living as a contractor and builder. He worked with his father, and now that he is away I live, with my two little children, with his father and mother.

"Lew was happy that I should come to them, when he went away, almost a year ago. The lease on our apartment had expired, we could find no other place, and this roomy country house seemed ideal. Domestic help simply doesn't exist in this neighborhood. I was worn out when we came here, and expected a rest.

"Instead, nothing is right. My father-in-law is a fine old man, but so close that a light left burning or a faucet left running will give him a chance to scold for hours. I use too much soap in the baby's bath; I leave good gravy and potato on my plate; I think my children have to have fresh clothes every day.

What Way Out?

"As for my mother-in-law; she works all day, cooking, cleaning, gardening. She adores the children, loves to have them with her, but her attitude toward me is quietly critical. Wouldn't I rather buy another bond for Lewis Jr. than buy a dress? What are my plans when Lew comes home? Isn't it better for little people not to talk at all at meals? This means Sonia, for little Lew doesn't talk yet.

"I drive myself almost crazy all day trying to think of a way out, and lie awake at night planning it. But it seems impossible. Living space is at a premium. It would mean that I get a job, and what of my children? Here I have no expenses whatsoever, my husband's parents even buying the children's clothes and paying doctor's bills. Do you suppose there is a nursery, in the city, where I could put the baby, if I tried to keep Sonia with me?"

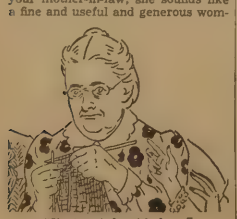
It is a pity, Helen, that a ministering angel can't appear to you, and say to you that your destiny is to remain where you are, and that dire misfortune and evil days will follow upon your being anywhere else. Such a visitation would impress you, you would awaken from a dream, face facts, settle down into the life you are living, and find in it not only content and usefulness, but a deeper happiness than you have ever known.



Your husband is enduring far harder conditions than you are, and he has no way of escape. Millions of other men and women in the world are facing situations that they thought, a few years ago, utterly insufferable.

Change Would Harm All.

No conditions remain insufferable, the minute we decide to accept them, make the best of them, improve upon them. Your husband's people have made you welcome; they pay your bills; they love your children. That the old man is thrifty is perhaps a good training for you; these aren't the days to waste soap, waste gravy and potato, waste effort washing and ironing. As for your mother-in-law, she sounds like a fine and useful and generous woman, who helps endure the burning anxiety she must feel for her son, in practical hard work.

Now just for fun, begin to tell yourself that you would be "unlucky" if you tried to make a change. That it would be harmful for Lew, Sonia, little Lew and yourself. This isn't as superstitious or fanciful as it sounds, for I can tell you from my older experience that it would be unlucky; any such course would certainly bring upon you the evil eye — the evil eye of doubt, responsibility, discontent, fatigue, bills, anxiety beyond bearing. It would deeply hurt Lew's parents, hurt Lew, hurt the children, and perhaps lessen his affection for and confidence in you.

Make yourself the angel of the wartime household. Win the older couple with a truly daughterly cooperation and affection. Turn out lights, turn off faucets, serve yourself to only what food you want; we're all learning lessons in that sort of niceness. And—just between ourselves, take the children off for a fortnight in the mountains this summer, and make that little break the time of a break in your whole attitidue. "Who so loseth his life shall find it" is just as true today as it was 2,000 years ago.

"She is quietly critical. . . ."

ENDURING CRITICISM

Sometimes little nagging annoyances loom like grave hardships. It depends a lot on the viewpoint. Helen, for instance, can scarcely bear her lot. She is a soldier's wife with two small children. They are living with his parents in a big country house. The old folks pay all the bills, and do a good deal of the work. Helen has only to take care of herself and the children, and to help a little with the general housework.

But what wears on Helen's nerves is the constant criticism from her parents-in-law. They are thrifty to a fault, hard-working, and old fashioned. Her father-in-law raises a fuss about waste—lights left burning, soap used in excess, food thrown away—and keeps nagging for hours. Her mother-in-law makes pointed suggestions about rearing the children, saving money for the future, dressing plainly, and so forth. This is day in and day out. There is nowhere Helen can go, as she is dependent, having no means excepting her government allotment. It would be difficult for her to get a job, or find an apartment. She would have to place the babies in a nursery, too.

For Glamorous Fingernails

Do you want to have glamorous fingernails? Well, you can! Buy a small bottle of white iodine at your druggist's. Ask for a bottle with a glass stopper. If you can't get the stopper, use the tail of a rat-tail comb in its place. Then buy a small jar of any reliable, lubricating hand cream.

Every night last thing before you go to bed, place a drop of white iodine under each fingernail. Then massage a dab of the hand cream into your nail cuticle. The white iodine serves to strengthen the nail. The lubricating cream softens the cuticle, stimulates the growth of the nail at the root.

Convenient Cupboard

To make kitchen cupboards more convenient for the busy housewife, make cupboard shelves narrow so that packaged and bottled goods stand only one row deep.

A survey shows that in the average kitchen, 175 items often used, are kept on shelves in cupboards. For most of these items shelves only 4½ inches deep are needed. For the rest, the shelves need not be deeper than 6½ inches. This new type of shelving would make it easier to see things.

HOUSEHOLD MEMOS... by Lynn Chambers

Fruit Spreads Will Help Ease Butter Shortage

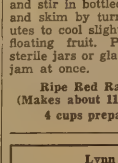
When making peach jam, use fully ripened fruit for best in flavor and color. The fruit is prepared as shown here, by chopping coarsely before being added to the other ingredients.

Lack of sugar need be no excuse for not putting up those mouth-watering jams and jellies this summer. If you look far enough ahead, these delectable fruit combinations can be the means of easing up another shortage—that of butter.

One of two ways may be used for maintaining the traditional time-honored jam and jelly cupboard. First of all, the limited sugar supplies can be stretched by using light corn syrup for sweetening. Or, secondly, fruit and berry juice may be pasteurized while the season is in full swing, and made into jams and jellies later in the year as sugar is secured.

What about the texture of jellies and jams made of pasteurized fruit and berry juice? It will not be affected, tests show. Color and flavor may not be quite as good, but is generally fair.

When corn syrup is used as a substitute for part of the sugar, the corn syrup should be added to the fruit along with the sugar. If directions for the substitution of corn syrup for sugar are followed as given in the recipe, the jams and jellies will set favorably. Also, when corn syrup is used, the recipe will yield from one to two additional glasses of jam or jelly.



Note: The corn syrup designated in the following recipes is white corn syrup.

Ripe Peach Jam
(Makes about 12 6-ounce glasses)

4 cups prepared fruit
5½ cups sugar
2 cups light corn syrup
1 bottle fruit pectin

To prepare fruit, pit and peel about 3 pounds of fully ripe fruit. Grind or chop very fine. If desired, 1 to 3 tablespoons spice may be added. If peaches lack tartness, ¼ cup lemon juice may be added to the 4 cups prepared fruit.

Measure sugar, syrup and prepared fruit, solidly packed, into a large kettle and mix well. Bring to a boil over the hottest fire stirring constantly before and while boiling. Boil hard 1 minute. Remove from fire and stir in bottled fruit pectin. Stir and skim by turns for just 5 minutes to cool slightly and to prevent floating fruit. Pour quickly into sterile jars or glasses. Paraffin hot jam at once.

Ripe Red Raspberry Jam
(Makes about 11 6-ounce glasses)

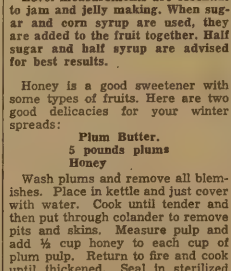
4 cups prepared fruit
4½ cups sugar
2 cups light corn syrup
½ bottle fruit pectin

To prepare fruit, crush or grind about 2 quarts fully ripe raspberries. Measure sugar, syrup and fruit into a large kettle and mix well. Bring to a full rolling boil over a very hot fire and stir constantly before and while boiling. Boil hard one minute. Remove from fire and add bottled fruit pectin. Stir and skim during the next 5 minutes, then pour quickly into glasses. Paraffin at once.

Ripe Blackberry Jelly
(Makes about 9 6-ounce glasses)

3 cups juice
2 cups sugar
2 cups light corn syrup
1 box powdered fruit pectin

To prepare juice, crush or grind about 2 quarts of fully ripe berries (not black caps). Place fruit in jelly cloth or bag and squeeze out juice. If the amount does not measure to 3 cups, add a little water to the pulp and squeeze out again.



Measure sugar and syrup into a dish and set aside until needed. Place juice in a saucepan (3 to 4 quart size). Place over hot fire and add powdered fruit pectin. Mix well and continue stirring until mixture comes to a boil. Pour in sugar and syrup and bring mixture to a full rolling boil, while continuing to stir. Boil hard ½ minute. Remove from fire, skim, pour quickly. Paraffin hot jelly at once.

Those of you who have enough sugar to spare will enjoy these cherry preserves which are such an excellent accompaniment to meats, fowl and other main dishes.

Cherry Preserves.

Use from ¾ to 1 pound sugar to each pound of fruit depending upon the sourness of the cherries. Mix cherries with sugar; let stand overnight. Heat slowly to boiling. Boil rapidly 15 to 20 minutes, or until cherries are tender. Let stand until cold. Pack cherries into hot, sterile jars. Boil syrup until thick. Pour hot syrup over the cherries; seal at once.

Level measurements are essential to jam and jelly making. When sugar and corn syrup are used, they are added to the fruit together. Half sugar and half syrup are advised for best results.

Honey is a good sweetener with some types of fruits. Here are two good delicacies for your winter spreads:

Plum Butter.
5 pounds plums
Honey

Wash plums and remove all blemishes. Place in kettle and just cover with water. Cook until tender and then put through colander to remove pits and skins. Measure pulp and add ½ cup honey to each cup of plum pulp. Return to fire and cook until thickened. Seal in sterilized jars.

Sweet Apple Pickles.
2 cups honey
1 cup vinegar
2 inches stick cinnamon
6 whole cloves
Apples

Combine honey, vinegar and spices. Have ready 8 to 10 cups quartered apples (pared or not, as preferred). Cook 2 to 3 cups apples at a time in the syrup, handling them gently so they do not mash. When transparent, lift out and place in a bowl or jar and continue until all are cooked. Take out spices, pour remaining syrup over apples and store until needed. These may be served with chicken or turkey, meat loaf, roast pork or baked ham.

Lynn Says:

When you make jellies and jams: Wash fruits and berries carefully, discarding bruised or decayed spots. Cut large fruits in quarters or pieces, or chop for making jams. Fruits like crabapples, apples or quinces are not peeled because the peeling contains much of the precious pectin content.

Hard fruits like apples and quinces should barely be covered with water. Currants, grapes and berries need only enough water to start cooking. Fruits should be boiled only until soft, otherwise they lose flavor and color.

Melt paraffin until it is smoking hot and pour over top of jelly after it has cooled. Rotate glass to make sure edges are coated with paraffin.

Play-Off

By WILLIAM RAINEY

McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Features.

LT. STEVE WESTWIN'S pass allowed him to leave the convalescent center at two-thirty p. m. He boiled. He'd be late. Ensign Davis, the paper on the bulletin board read, challenged the winner of the center's golf tournament. At two p. m. at the Level Hill Country Club.

Steve breezed out the gate and fumed until the bus came along and he clambered in. He griped about the situation to the bus driver as they rolled over the warm southern countryside. "Always you have to do business with some red tape winder behind a desk," he growled. "I won the tournament, fair and square. I accepted this Navy upstart's challenge for today at two o'clock. The recreation committee sent word I'd be there. Then they gave me a pass to leave at two-thirty! Don't they want the honor of the Army upheld?"

"Maybe it's part of the idea to keep you boys relaxed. Not in a hurry," the bus driver said, seeking soothing words.

"How's your boy?" Steve asked.

"Had a letter yesterday. Still in the Pacific," the man said.

Steve had had no experience in that theater of operations. He had eaten desert dust, and moved on until he was tagged for shipment in the other direction—Anzio. A pretty bad arm, but they did a neat reconstruction on it. He blessed them for that. When he won the tournament on the center's course, he knew he'd be going back some day to professional golf.

Now this Navy challenger, this pretender to the golf crown between the convalescent center and the Naval Hospital nearby — well, Steve was confident.

The bus ground to a stop at the country club. "Keep your left elbow straight and watch the ball," said the driver, whose loyalty was with the Army.

"I'll win even with a cannon ball," Steve assured him.

He wore brown flannels and hoped the Navy would be in exercise clothes too. He looked at his wrist watch. Three-fifteen. It might be too much to expect the Navy to be there at all.

Extensive inquiry at the clubhouse brought Steve no knowledge of the presence or whereabouts of Ensign Davis.

He decided the center would have to send a formal apology for his lateness and went out to the first tee alone. The course looked inviting.

He played good golf to the sixth hole. A girl, also alone, was leaving the green ahead. Steve holed out and walked to the next tee. The girl had driven. She was halfway down the fairway, searching the ditch against the fence. Steve waited. Then he skipped his own drive and walked down. "Lose something?" he called, grinning, as he approached her.

"The ball. The only one I had. One measly repaint job and I lost it!" She brushed long blonde hair from her face. Steve looked hard for the ball. He looked at the girl the same way. He stopped grumbling to himself about missing the play-off.

They couldn't locate the ball. Steve produced one and bounced it on the fairway. "Use this," he offered.

"Thanks," the girl said. "I was playing better than I expected. Then I put this drive into the fence. That's what happens when you stop concentrating."

"I know," Steve said.

"Play much golf?" she asked.

Steve said he did, but hadn't until lately. No use being a bore about his pro efforts. He couldn't completely suppress a curiosity about how this girl played the game, however. But the way she looked in a gray skirt and yellow blouse would justify any performance. It turned out that her game was up to her looks. That was apparent in the first shot she made with an iron straight to the green. She sank the first putt.

At the ninth hole she said, "I'll play you through to the eighteenth. That is, if I don't lose the ball."

"You'd better not," Steve jibed. It was Ellen and Steve between them now. Neither remained more than two strokes up on the other for very long. Steve was playing briskly and enjoying the companionship as well as the sport. At the seventeenth they were even.

Steve held out his hand. "Last hole, Ellen. May the best girl win." Her smile was very warm, and they played the final strokes carefully. Three apiece to the green. Ellen canned out in one putt. Steve watched her fondly. A great partner, he thought. He took two.

That's what happens when you stop concentrating, Steve thought, as they sat in the nineteenth hole with a pair of frosty glasses. But it had been a pleasure to see her win. He was wondering how to ask her for a date.

"It was fun," Ellen said. "I'm not angry at that soldier for not showing up. Ensign Ellen Davis had her game anyway."

"Who's that?" Steve asked, nearly dropping his glass.

"That's me. I'm a WAVE at the Naval Hospital." Steve decided he wouldn't tell Ensign Davis who lost the play-off until she saw him in uniform when they had the date she made with him then.

SNAPPY FACTS about RUBBER

Tires which were introduced to the public eighteen months before Pearl Harbor, to waken the nation to the necessity of mass production of synthetic rubber, were created after fourteen years of intensive research in synthetic rubber by B. F. Goodrich.

The Japs are reported to have reversed the process for making rubber out of oil and are making gasoline and oil out of natural rubber.

One of the largest tire repair shops overseas, operated by the Ordnance Tire Repair Company in Italy, turns out 534 repaired and recapped tires per day.

Care of Dogs Aid U. S. Soldiers in Convalescing

The army air forces convalescent hospital at Pawling, N. Y., is the only American establishment of its kind today in which the patients are encouraged to acquire and care for a dog of their own to hasten their recovery, says Collier's. In August, 1944, one of them had become so apathetic he was given a puppy in the hope that it might revive his interest in life. As a result, the man was discharged in four months, instead of the 10 months which had been estimated by the physicians.

Consequently, the staff and patients realized the convalescent value of such companionship, and requests were made for some 325 dogs. The first 175 to arrive were gifts, the majority from the ASPCA.

CHAPTER I

Elizabeth Herlong looked across the coffee-cups at her husband. "Feel better, Spratt?"

He began to laugh. "Yes, I do. Talking to you is such a relief. You're good to drop everything and drive all the way here just to listen to me."

"You know it's no bother," said Elizabeth. "I rather enjoy being a wastebasket for you to toss your troubles into."

"Call it that if you like," said Spratt. "Anyway, you're always there when I want you."

They smiled intimately at each other. They had been through this a hundred times in the past twenty years, since long before Spratt Herlong became a major producer of pictures at Vertex Studio. It was always the same, with minor variations—a picture that simply would not get itself made, actors who quarreled with the cameraman, writers who couldn't write, directors who antagonized everybody on the set, unexpected costs straining the budget, release dates creeping maddeningly closer, and Spratt desperately grabbing the telephone. "Elizabeth, if I don't get out of this place and see a reasonable human being I'm going wild. Meet me for lunch, can't you, and let me talk?"

She always responded. Since gasoline rationing began she had taken care to keep a few coupons in reserve, riding her bicycle on errands to the village, so she could always drive out to meet Spratt at the studio gates when he called her. She could rarely offer any concrete advice, for he knew his business a good deal better than she did, but she had a sympathetic ear and a sense of humor, and she knew how to keep silent about what he told her. She had, in fact, exactly what he needed, Spratt remarked.

"Now that I've got it off my chest to you, I'm beginning to see daylight. This new German writer ought to be a help. He's starting out like a pretty smart fellow."

"Can he write English dialogue?"

"Oh yes, funny expressions sometimes, but any competent collaborator can fix those. He's been in this country two or three years, in the New York office awhile and then on pictures here. I gave him this script to read and he's coming in this afternoon to tell me what he can do with it. Tough story. Also some scenes about motherhood that can be good if they're right and awful if they're wrong."

Elizabeth's eyes twinkled across at him as she sipped her coffee. "Don't expect any suggestions from me, darling. If you want somebody to get romantic about motherhood, ask a man who's never changed a diaper."

"I don't want him to get romantic," Spratt retorted, "and as for you—"

"—as for me, I'm no help whatever." Her attention caught by a sudden clatter of china, Elizabeth began to chuckle. "Spratt, on the way here I noticed a shop with the sign 'Henry K. Dishington.' Do you suppose it was Henry K. Dishington's wife?"

"What's that got to do with anything?" Spratt inquired.

"Nothing, except that I amused myself all the rest of the way by thinking what fun it would be to find a partnership, especially a restaurant, called Washington and Dishington."

Spratt laughed again. "You've never learned anything about pictures, but you do take my mind off them."

"Let's hope the German writer is more sympathetic. Oh, how do you do, Mrs. Farnsworth," Elizabeth broke off brightly, as Spratt sent her a Good-Lord-what-have-I-done-to-deserve-this look and the cushiony wife of one of the Vertex directors billowed down upon them. Spratt got up, trying to hide his annoyance, while Mrs. Farnsworth began telling them they simply must come to a party she was having at her house for the benefit of the Greek War Relief.

"And don't keep standing up, Mr. Herlong, I'll just sit down a minute and tell you about it," she exclaimed, spreading herself over an extra chair the waitress had left at their table. Spratt sat down again, politely assuring the lady that he expected to be working the night of her party.

"Oh, but don't you, either of you, want to do anything for the war?" she persisted plaintively, ignoring that they both wore silver buttons indicative of their having given three pints of blood apiece.

"I'm sorry, Mrs. Farnsworth," answered Spratt. "Of course I understand the Greek War Relief is a deserving cause, in fact, I've already made a contribution to it. It isn't necessary for me to attend a party to appreciate the need."

"But that's not quite the idea," urged the worthy creature. "It's what your presence will do for the cause, don't you understand? We want prominent personages to be there. And it will be a very good party — first-class bartenders, and professional entertainers—" She paused expectantly.

"Why don't you just give the war relief all it will cost for the liquor and entertainment?" Elizabeth inquired. She knew it was a useless question. But she was not always as good as Spratt about being polite to bores.

Aggrieved, Mrs. Farnsworth exclaimed, "But you don't understand!"—which Elizabeth reflected was quite true. She did not understand people who got drunk for the sake of the starving Greeks. Before she could say anything else, Spratt interrupted suavely.

"I'll tell you what I'll do, Mrs. Farnsworth. I can't come to your party, since I'm close to a shooting date and have to spend a great many evenings at the studio. But I'll be glad to give you—" he took out his wallet—"twenty dollars to be added to the funds raised by your entertainment."

"Why thank you, Mr. Herlong, how good of you!" she cried, beaming, accepting the bill he handed her. "I knew you'd understand the need when I explained it to you. And if it happens you don't have to work, I do hope you will come, you and Mrs. Herlong too. And couldn't you bring that dear boy of yours? We'll need some young men for the dancing, and it's so hard to be sure of servicemen these days, and anyway, you don't know who you might be getting," she added in a lower voice. "You know, it's all right at the USO, but when you invite them to your home, it's different. Couldn't you bring your boy?"

"—as for me, I'm no help whatever—"

"I'm afraid Dick is rather young for late parties," Elizabeth demurred. "He's only seventeen, you know, and he has to be up early to go to school."

"Only seventeen? Really? He looks older than that, because he's tall, I suppose. I'd wondered why he wasn't in the army. Does he still go to school? Seems almost useless, don't you think, when he'll be in the service so soon anyway. Where does he go?"

Elizabeth told her Dick had matriculated this fall at the University of California at Los Angeles.

"Oh, I see," said the fat lady dubiously. "Does he like it there?"

"Why yes, he likes it very much. Why shouldn't he?"

"Oh yes, it's a good school, I've no doubt of that," their tormentor conceded. "But the student body—oh, I know a good many nice boys and girls go there, but so many others—do you really think it's wise for him to mix up with all those people?"

"Why, what people?" asked Elizabeth. "They get good and bad in any big university, I suppose."

"Oh yes, but at UCLA—you know, all those Negroes, and—" again she lowered her voice—"I'm told the place is simply brimming with Jews. And when it comes to the colored students, they tell me that at UCLA they simply require the white students to treat them—well, you know, as equals—they insist it's democratic, and all that—"

She had touched Spratt at a point where he no longer felt it necessary to be suave. "Frankly, Mrs. Farnsworth," he said tersely, "I should not like to think my son was ashamed to be courteous to anybody God Almighty was not ashamed to create. I'm afraid we must leave you now—it's late, and I have to get back to work." He stood up.

"Oh, if you must. It's been such a pleasure to see you, and do come to the party if you can. Good-by now, Mrs. Herlong. Now that our husbands are in the same studio you and I will be seeing a lot of each other."

Elizabeth nearly answered, "Not if I can help it," but she lied brightly and said she hoped so, and added no, she couldn't possibly drive back to town with Mrs. Farnsworth, because she had called for Spratt at the studio and had to drive him back there. Spratt put a bill on the table top to pay the check, and without waiting for change he and Elizabeth got out to their car.

"Oh Lord!" he groaned as he sank into it. "Haven't I got enough to put up with without having to run into fools like that?"

Elizabeth got in under the wheel. "I was wondering," she remarked, "when you said Dick shouldn't be ashamed to be courteous to anybody, if we shouldn't be ashamed to be courteous to her. This town really has more than its share of overfed imbeciles. What sort of man is her husband?"

"A very good director, thanks to her," Spratt returned. "He works himself to death to keep from having to go home. That's why she'll believe any yarn about night work."

"Why on earth is he married to her?" Elizabeth wondered.

"God knows. Maybe she was cute and cuddly when she was eighteen, and now she's so excessively virtuous he can't get rid of her. And she cost me twenty dollars."

"It's not quite lost if any of it gets to the Greeks."

"It won't," said Spratt. "It will go to buy Scotch for her party. Don't you know how those things are run? They pay for the liquor out of the contributions, and if anything is left over it goes to the cause."

Elizabeth began to laugh. "Forget it, Spratt. Twenty dollars is a small price to get away from her. My Aunt Grace was like that. Right now she's probably having a lovely time in heaven, organizing a campaign to get brighter haloes for the lesser angels. Do you still feel better about the pictures?"

"Yes, in spite of that nitwit." He grinned at her as she guided the car along the boulevard. "Maybe I need a brush with some dame like that once in awhile to appreciate my own good fortune."

"That's a left-handed compliment, but thank you. I'll keep my fingers crossed for your refugee to have an inspiration."

"I rather think he will. He's a good fellow. You should meet him sometime."

"Bring him to dinner."

"I will, one of these days. I imagine poor Kessler could use a little amusement. He's a cripple—can hardly walk, and only one hand."

"What a shame. Did the Nazis do that to him?"

"I don't know. I suspect they did. He doesn't say so, but he turns a sort of furious greenish white whenever anybody mentions them. Anyway, he does have ideas. I hope he has one today." Spratt turned toward her and repeated, "And thanks for coming out."

"You know you're welcome."

She took her eyes from the traffic for an instant to give him a comradely smile. Spratt smiled back.

"We do have a pretty good time, don't we?" she said, looking down the road again.

"Yes we do. In spite of war, meat shortage and bores. Elizabeth."

"Yes?"

"You're not worried about Dick, are you?"

"I try not to be," she returned briefly.

"Don't be. He's got to go next year when he's eighteen, you know."

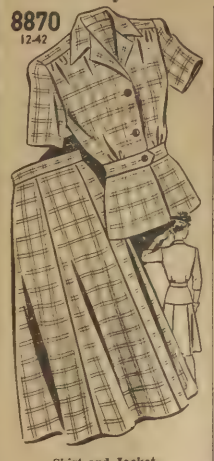
"I'm trying not to think about it until then."

"That's all right. Just remember this. He's had a good life, he's a mighty decent kid, we never did expect to keep him at home forever. Besides, this war is about something."

"Yes, it is," she answered in a low voice. "But I'm not going to pretend it doesn't hurt. I wish Cherry had been the oldest, so both the boys would be under age. That's cowardly, isn't it? I've had a good life too, and one reason I've had it is that I happened to be born in the United States. I ought to be willing to give something back to my country. But—well, I think I can promise that when it happens I won't be a weeping little mother, but you know how it is."

"Sure I know. I feel like that myself. But we might as well figure it this way. Nothing we can give up to win this war can be compared to what we'll give up if we lose it. Don't forget that."

"I won't. I really don't think about it very much, Spratt."



"Okay," Spratt said understandingly. "One day at a time. That's enough."

They were passing the high wall that surrounded the studio lot. Elizabeth turned the car in at the gate, stepped on the brake and changed gears while she paused a moment for the officer on guard to recognize them. He glanced into the car. "Oh, I see, Mr. Herlong. How are you?"

The Defense of American Freedom is our First Consideration

Why Live Longer?

New knowledge in the field of nutrition, according to specialists, can increase the average life span seven years and, in addition, ward off disease and senility.

This will be good news to persons in Clanton who are yearning for long life and anxious to remain on the globe as long as possible. All that is necessary is to understand the nature of foods and the needs of the normal human body and govern your appetite accordingly.

The question arises, however, why measure life by length of years. Some citizens live longer in three years than their neighbors in ten and others accomplish as much in two years as their competitors in twelve. The years of one's life are valuable, it is true, but we might as well begin to make full use of those that we enjoy. In so doing we will, very probably, assure ourselves of others that we might not otherwise have.

Invasion In Three Months

Admiral Daniel Barbey, who commanded the Seventh amphibious force in fifty-six successful landings against the Japanese, suggests that control of the seas now makes it possible for the United States to land soldiers "standing up" on the coasts of China and Japan.

The admiral says a small landing can be made within thirty days, a larger one in sixty and a "really big one" in [illegible]. He points out that the enemy has "just so many men, so many guns, so much barbed wire, so many mines" and that he "can't be strong everywhere.

Obviously, the Japanese do not know where the Allies will attempt a landing. They will have to wait for the attack before concentrating defensive power, and then it may prove too late. Complete control of the waters around Japan give the Allied high command the ability to select the point of attack anywhere.

What Will Clanton Do?

The men who fought for their country are coming home. Already they are reappearing in Clanton and it is just a matter of months before hundreds of them will be ready to enjoy the "way of life" they successfully defended.

What has the future in store for these men? It is hard to answer but it is not a theoretical problem to the fighting man who must find economic security to back up the national security he and his buddies established through bloody endeavor.

We talked to a corporal the other day. He was on his way home in another state. Two days before he had been in Italy, but thanks to the airplane, he was on a train, expecting to see his sick wife the next day. What was there ahead of him? He didn't know; we didn't know and the question is, did anybody know?

You can typify the problem of the returning veteran in this man. His sick wife made it imperative for him to find employment. They would both need money. What kind of work would he find and for how long would [illegible]

[illegible] corporal [illegible] situation [illegible] people of Chilton [illegible] him, and others like him?

From the thoughts of the town or city in the other state we reverted back to Clanton where other service men are coming and will come. So far as we know there has been little if any planning to provide opportunities for employment. There has been no community consideration of the obligation to "make room" for veterans home from the wars. the so-called brains of the community the so-called leaders, who draw down the big incomes, use the brains that they say entitle them to what they receive.

From a selfish standpoint it is to the interest of Clanton to retain these returning veterans, to make them self-supporting members of the population and to add them to those who help to make it possible for Clanton to grow and prosper. Cities and towns boast of their numbers and most of them would be delighted to anticipate the arrival of hundreds of new residents Here we have an opportunity to get additional residents, men who want to live here and will live here if they can find employment.

By this time some reader of this article is probably wondering what should be done and if there are any suggestions for community action Certainly, the problem should be studied and, we suspect, the first step should be the appointment of civic committee for the purp[illegible] organized, employ su[illegible] the community [illegible]

[illegible] are concerned this i[illegible]

While we're about it we will tell you of another visit made Tuesday. It was to Charlie Cox's new establishment in South Clanton. It is on the Will Reynolds property. Mr. Cox will make cement blocks for construction work. Things will be ready to move down there this week and according to "the Boss" the plant will produce two thousand blocks per day. Six men will be required to operate the machines for full capacity he said.

When Doyle joined the police force, the sergeant told him: "You're on the night beat—from here to that red light and back."

They didn't hear from Doyle for two days. Finally he showed up at the station-house.

"Where have you been?" thundered the sergeant. "I told you your beat was from here to that red light."

"Yeah," said Doyle ruefully, "but that red light was on the back of a truck."

Wifey: "When you were courting me you promised that if I accepted, you would never look at another woman."

Hubby: "Why, I thought you understood all about those campaign promises."

Both services at Mulberry were very well attended Sunday.

The Primary Department will have charge of the opening exercise next Sunday.

Be ready for the revival at Mulberry which will begin the second Sunday in August, with Bro. Frank Smith from Hartselle, doing the preaching.

The Daily Vacation Bible School closed last Friday night with a commencement meeting at the church. We had an average attendance for the entire week of 56 pupils, teachers and workers. The school was a very good success. We hope to have at least two weeks next year, that we still might have a better success.

Rev. R. W. Stuckey was principal; Mrs. Jessie Summers, musician; Prof. Weldon teacher of Intermediate and Junior boys handwork; Mrs. Coreen Stuckey and Mrs. Mollie Smith were teachers of Intermediates; Mrs. Leta Smitherman and Mrs. Leonard Lecroy were teachers of Juniors; Mrs. Flossie Wells and Mrs. Dixie Calfee were teachers of Primaries, and Mrs. Fannie Cummings, teacher of Beginners.

Don't forget the working at Mulberry church and cemetery July 8th, on Wednesday.

The Willie Kelly Circle will meet with Mrs. Berniece Cummings Tuesday, July 7th, at 2:30 p.m.

This community extends our congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Bryun Traywick, nee Miss Dot Oden, who were married Wednesday, July 25th at the home of the groom's parents, near Jemison, Ala.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Quit and Avert Ruin, Japs Told; Speed Approval of Security Pact; Petain Fights Charge of Treason

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Adding to destruction of Japanese cities, Superfortresses drop bevy of 70-pound incendiaries over target.

PACIFIC:
Peace Talk

First heard after Germany's collapse, Jap peace talk gained momentum at the Big Three conference in Berlin, with the latest impetus provided by the statement of Senator Wherry (Rep., Neb.) that a high military source had informed him that President Truman had been asked to outline specific surrender terms to bring about a cessation of hostilities.

Though Wherry did not reveal the identity of the persons involved, it was recalled that Capt. E. M. Zacharias of the U. S. navy in broadcasting an appeal to Japanese leaders to give up the fight, had declared that influential people in the U. S. hoped to avert the destruction of the enemy.

Speaking for the government, Zacharias sought to assure the enemy's military hierarchy that surrender had precedent in history as an honorable means of realistically acceding defeat, and that the alternative to quitting now and enjoying the self-determination of the Atlantic charter was prolongation of the struggle and national annihilation.

According to Wherry, the appeal to President Truman to "stop the slaughter of American boys and Japanese civilians" was couched in a letter urging him to assure the Nipponese that after unconditional surrender the integrity of the emperor would be preserved and he would be permitted to organize a government satisfactory to the U. S. Further, Jap social and religious freedoms would be respected.

While the letter stated that military occupation was not considered necessary, an Allied commission would supervise destruction of war industry. In conformance with the Cairo declaration, the letter said, the enemy should be compelled to give up Manchuria, Korea and Formosa and withdraw from other Asiatic and Pacific conquests.

Meanwhile, the Big Three meet in Berlin pointed up the peace talk, with Premier Stalin reportedly bearing Jap terms to the conference, and President Truman supposedly carrying surrender conditions demanding disbandment of Jap forces, relinquishment of Manchuria, Korea, Formosa and other conquests, and Allied supervision over enemy industry, shipbuilding and ports.

SENATE:
Speed Charter

Having hurried passage of the Bretton Woods monetary agreements and increased lending power of the Export-Import bank to aid postwar reconstruction and world trade, the senate moved just as speedily in ratifying the United Nations security charter.

The real battle over the charter was expected to develop later, when the senate worked out details concerning the U. S. delegate's power to order American armed forces into action, and the size of this country's contributions to the international organization's military establishment.

Along with Senator Vandenberg (Rep., Mich.), Senator Connally (Dem., Texas) led the opening discussions for passage, declaring that while the charter was no guarantee against war, it provides the machinery for the settlement of differences among the major powers capable of conducting hostilities. Averring the charter set up no super-state, Vandenberg argued that it preserved U. S. self-determination, permitting peaceful solution of global disputes.

EXPORT HORSES:
For Europe

Arrangements have been completed for the exporting of small horses of draft type to countries of southern Europe, with experienced dealers in the United States handling the purchases. A farmer will sell to the horse buyer in the usual way.

Mares are wanted, three to eight years old, from 13¾ to 15¼ hands high at the withers, of stocky conformation suitable for draft purposes.

FRANCE:
Historic Drama

Attired in a dress uniform of a marshal with seven stars on each sleeve, and wearing a single bronze military medal on a yellow and green ribbon, Marshal Henri Petain faced a French court on a charge of high treason in a trial that threatened to split the already war-torn country.

Marshal Petain

Famed as prosecutor of World War I spy, Mata Hari, aged Andre Mornet directed the state's case, accusing the marshal of plotting against the republic; abandoning Indo-China to the Japs; supplying Axis armies; contributing to the German war machine by furnishing French material and manpower; ordering the scuttling of the country's fleet, and opposing Allied North African landings.

Standing before a jury made up of former liberation leaders and prewar pariamentarians, Petain stoutly declared:

"I remained the head of the country under occupation. Can you understand the difficulty of a government in such conditions? I had a dagger at my throat every day. I fought the demands of the enemy. . . . While General De Gaulle pursued the struggle beyond the borders, I prepared the way for liberation by preserving a sorrowing but living France. . . ."

While Petain claimed to have negotiated the armistice after consultations with French military leaders, former Premier Paul Reynaud charged him with being responsible for cessation of hostilities despite a solemn pact with Britain not to make a separate peace.

HOME FRONT:
Ease Pinch

Due to cutbacks in army procurement, increased supplies of both meat and shoes are in the offing.

Though pork stocks will continue to remain tight, more beef, veal and lamb are expected to reach butchers' counters, with point reductions scheduled for August. Reflecting the increased supplies to civilians, federally inspected packers have been ordered to set aside but 25 per cent of their army-style beef in comparison with previous allotments of 65 per cent.

At the same time, it was reported that with the government's claiming most of the record holdings of 261 million pounds of beef in storage July 1, army purchases have slowed in recent weeks, adding to potential civilian supplies.

Because the army has cut purchase of combat and tropical boots and service and lend-lease shoes by 1½ million pairs monthly, almost 8 million feet of upper leather and an equal amount of sole leather have become available every month for civilian production.

As a result, 4 million more ration type shoes may be manufactured monthly, the trade predicted, with the increased stocks posing the question of easing rationing regulations. Because retailers' inventories of ration-type shoes are at a low point and they have substantial quantities of the non-rationed brand on hand, however, the government is expected to move slowly before loosening restrictions to prevent demand to surpass supply and leave merchants stuck with the wartime models.

Sports Sales

A digest of the 1939 census of manufacturers conducted by the bureau of the census reveals that sporting arms and ammunition and equipment for hunting and shooting accounted for approximately 39 per cent of the expenditures made by the American public for sporting equipment. Expenditure for all sports equipment was $121,855,304 at manufacturers' prices.

COAL:
For Europe

Declaring that Europe must have fuel this winter to avert undue suffering and social unrest resulting from cold and hunger, Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes announced that the U. S. would ship 6 million tons of soft coal to the continent by January 1.

Should the government send the full 8 million tons over, it will add to the already expected domestic shortage of 25 million tons of soft coal and 12 million tons of hard coal, with the probability that both industrial and home users may be cut back further in their purchases of fuel.

Despite the army's continued coldness toward releasing men to overcome occupational labor shortages, the interior department pressed its plea for letting out 30,000 of the 130,000 miners now in service for emergency production. Increased output by employment of additional men is the only sure way of relieving the impending scarcities, Ickes said.

RUSSIA:
Bigger Navy

Having already announced plans for the strengthening of the Russian army, Premier Stalin called for a mightier navy and declared ships and bases would be provided for it.

Praising the Red fleet for having protected the country's flanks on the Baltic and Black seas during the war, besides maintaining communications and hammering the enemy's surface forces, Stalin said it was the navy's duty to improve the caliber of the Russian seamen, utilize the experience recently gained and further elevate the discipline of the organization.

At the same time, Navy Commissar N. G. Kuzenetsov said that the termination of the European war presented the Russian navy with the task of assimilating all of the experience gained in recent operations in line with Comrade Stalin's repeated call for the strenghtening of the country's armed forces.

Britain to Welcome Duke

Long a family matter to be settled by the King of England, the virtual exile of the Duke of Windsor and his Duchess came in an unofficial announcement that the once heralded ex-British monarch and his U. S. born wife would return to the home land with their 20 servants.

Decision of the duke to come back was prompted by the assurance of King George VI that the couple would be welcome, thus allaying the duke's fear that his twice-divorced wife would be snubbed by court circles.

Virtual outcast of the royal family since abdicating his throne in 1936 for "the woman I love," the duke previously returned to England shortly after the outbreak of the European war in 1939 to offer his services to his country. Named as a go-between for the British with the French high command, the duke resigned in the summer of 1940 and fled to Spain with the French collapse.

EUROPE:
Mass Raid

Seeking to avert any trouble beforehand and at the same time test security measures, U. S. military forces in Germany searched every house in the American occupation zone over a recent week-end, arresting 80,000 persons and coming up with guns, ammunition and such loot as Yank uniforms, K rations, gasoline and vehicles.

Despite the mass arrests and confiscation of material, it was said, U. S. intelligence discovered no evidence of an organized underground, and less contraband uncovered than perhaps would have been found over a comparable area of this country.

Of the 15,000,000 Germans affected, only two tried to escape, it was said, with one being shot to death. Of the 80,000 persons arrested, many were former SS men sought as war criminals. Some posed as discharged vets of the regular German army.

TOBACCO:
Auctions Start

Starting in Georgia, the old South's picturesque tobacco sales got underway, with the auctions scheduled to gradually move northward into the Carolinas, Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee and Maryland and the chanting auctioneers disposing of the indicated 1,890,328,000-pound crop at a clip of thousands of pounds per hour.

Because of an upward boost in buyers' ceilings Georgia producers can obtain a penny a pound more for their crop this year with a limit of 40 cents per pound. In other parts of the tobacco belt the ceiling averages 44.50 cents per pound.

Because of the necessity for long aging and curing, the present crop will not be immediately available for smokers. However, with consumption at a record level, badly depleted stock piles now are being built up from matured supplies of last year's bumper crop of 1,950,213,000 pounds.

CONSTRUCTION:
Shows Gain

Estimated construction expenditures in the U. S. totaled nearly 2½ billion dollars for the first six months of 1945, approximately 10 per cent above the aggregate for the first half of 1944, but still about 20 per cent short of the prewar levels of 1939 and 1940, while volume of privately financed construction was 27 per cent greater than during the first six months of 1944. Public construction was 5 per cent below 1944.

Radar Magical Beam That Bounces Back on Contact

Lightning Calculator Estimates Distances Upon Deflection of Electrons; Study Of Apparatus Still in Infancy.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

(In a previous article Mr. Baukhage told some of the little known facts in the history and development of radar and recorded many of its possible peacetime uses. In this article he explains what makes radar tick and how it performed some of its marvelous feats in this war.)

"Impact," a publication of the office of the assistant chief of air staff, intelligence branch, for the first time lifting the veil which has covered descriptions of radar, says succinctly: "A radar set is nothing more than a machine for sending electrons out into space in a steady stream in a desired direction. These electrons travel with the speed of light in a straight line until their energy is dissipated, or unless they bump into something."

That bump is important. If a stream of electrons is shot into the air like a searchlight and a plane flies across the stream, the electrons which hit the plane bounce back. They bounce right back to a screen in the radar scope and are revealed in the form of a "blip" of light, just as an echo bounding back on your eardrum is reflected in the form of a sound.

The principle of the real echo is used in "sonic" location of obstacles—ships use it to locate shoals, for instance. And, recently, it has been demonstrated that bats use the same principle in avoiding obstacles (which they can't see since they are blind) by uttering a tiny "beep," the pitch of which is probably too high for the human ear to catch. Their beep bounces back in time to warn them to duck.

But radar's electronic "blip" is better than a sonic "beep." One reason is that an electron moves with the speed of light which is faster than sound.

'Echo' Caught On Radar Receiver

Perhaps at this point we ought to recall to your minds what an electron is. A short definition of an electron is "the most elementary charge of negative electricity." Electrons plus protons (the positive charge) are what atoms are made of and atoms are what molecules are made of and you and I and the universe and all it contains are, as we learned in high school, nothing but various groups of molecules.

Ordinarily electrons pursue the even, if rapid, tenor of their ways well within the bounds of their own atoms. But radar has changed all that. It has made it possible to project those electrons out into space and then, if they hit something and bounce back, to catch the "echo" on the "scope" of the radar set in the form of a "blip" or blob of light.

We can't go into detail as to how this operation takes place, but we can tell you in a general way. The scope of the radar set is round. It is like a map. North at the top, south at the bottom; east to the right and west to the left. So that you will know where you are a little light appears on the screen just where your set is located on the "map" you are looking at. By moving the instrument, you can keep yourself in the middle. If you see another spot of light on the screen up where 12 o'clock would be on your watch dial, you know there is a plane (or other object) north of you. If it should be a plane and it were coming toward you (which the instrument would reveal) and it finally appeared right on top of the light that showed your location, you'd know that there was going to be a collision.

Radar can "see" a ship 30 miles away—and see it in the dark, through a wall of cloud or mist, which no human sight could penetrate.

Different substances give stronger or weaker "echoes" on your screen, water little or none. Land more, built-up areas more than fields. Rocks more than softer surfaces.

In addition to locating an object in relation to the observer (the location of the radar set), the distance from the object can be calculated by the length of time it takes for the electrons to reach the object and bounce back. The elevation (angle of height from observer) and the deflection (how far to the right or left) are calculated just as a surveyor makes these calculations by observation from two known points. And you don't have to be an engineer to do it either—it is done automatically by a lightning calculator.

I have stood in awe before these calculating machines, which can "think" more accurately and a thousand times faster than I could figure, and watched how they direct the aim of the turret, waist and tail guns on a B-29.

As I said in last week's article, the enemy has radar, too. The Germans were working on it with investigation and experiment which paralleled ours and those of the British. In the early days of the war the Germans had receiving sets on high hills along the coast of France. The electron beam, like that of television, moves in a straight line and since the surface of the earth is curved, this curve gets in the way if the image and receiving set are too far apart. Therefore, land sets are placed as high in the air as possible.

We knew that the Germans had some kind of an electronic device and they knew we had one. One of the early commando raids, which the papers said was successful in destroying a German "radio station," really destroyed the radar installation.

Poke Out Japs' 'Eyes'

One of the reasons why Iwo Jima and Okinawa were so important, besides the fact that they make excellent naval and air bases, is because the Japs had their radar detection stations on these islands and were able to detect the presence of our bombers and intercept their flight. You will also recall that a number of little adjacent islands that hardly seemed of any importance were seized by our troops. In all probability it was because they had radar installations which could detect and give warning of planes leaving the larger island for Japan. As we put out her "eyes" one after another, Japan becomes more impotent. There have been many cases, you may have noticed, where the Japs, on land or on small ships, have been taken by surprise. I have no information on this subject, but in some cases it may have been due to the fact that they lacked radar euipment. It is believed that what radar knowledge Japan has came from the Germans.

Of course, there is one phase of radar detection which in the past has sometimes prevented use of data concerning the detection of a plane or ship. That is the fact that until the object is very close it cannot be identified. It is merely a "blip" of light. Therefore, it is impossible to tell friend and enemy apart. Some sort of identification has been developed, details of which are still, I believe, "top secret."

An example of how this worked to the disadvantage of the British was in the engagement in which HMS Hood was lost. On May 21, 1941, the Hood was lying in the strait between Iceland and Greenland when suddenly out of nowhere she was hit by a salvo from the 15-inch guns of the powerful Bismarck. The Bismarck had accurately located the Hood with radar equipment, the first reported successful use of radar in such a naval operation in the war. It is said that the Hood had likewise detected the presence of a ship at the spot where the Bismarck was, but knowing that a number of friendly warships were in the vicinity, did not dare to take the chance of attacking first.

Many improvements have been made in radar which are not as yet ready for the public eye and all those familiar with the subject say the study is only in its infancy. Scientific achievement seems limitless and the one virtue of war is that it spurs inventive genius to great strides of progress.

When peace comes radar will likewise open new vistas of which the layman hardly dreams.

Kidneys Must Work Well-

For You To Feel Well

24 hours every day, 7 days every week, never stopping, the kidneys filter waste matter from the blood.

If more people were aware of how the kidneys must constantly remove surplus fluid, excess acids and other waste matter that cannot stay in the blood without injury to health, there would be better understanding of why the whole system is upset when kidneys fail to function properly.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination sometimes warns that something is wrong. You may suffer nagging backache, headaches, dizziness, rheumatic pains, getting up at nights, swelling.

Why not try Doan's Pills? You will be using a medicine recommended the country over. Doan's stimulate the function of the kidneys and help them to flush out poisonous waste from the blood. They contain nothing harmful. Get Doan's today. Use with confidence. At all drug stores.

Jap Balloons Turn West Wild Again

Sheriff Finds Them Worse Than Bucking Bronco.

WASHINGTON.—Japan's fantastic balloon-bomb attack on this hemisphere is adding a new chapter to the lore of the West.

One sheriff will be able to brag that he has ridden something wilder and more dangerous than the most rambunctious bronco that ever threw a cowboy into the cactus.

The story of the sheriff's ride can now be told although details as to time and place must be withheld. It started when a rancher reported what he thought was a big parachute coming down in the foothills.

The sheriff knew what it was. He called an FBI man and sallied forth to his great adventure. When they came to the place, the balloon had settled to earth. While they looked a gust of wind sent it into the air again.

The sheriff chased it. The first time he got close enough to grab at its mechanism he deliberately let the opportunity slip by: Life was sweet and he had no desire to take leave of it.

But the call of duty won out. After a 200-yard sprint the sheriff got hold of a shroud line. From then on he couldn't have let go if he had wanted to—which he did.

For 55 minutes the balloon pulled him over hill and dale. Once it carried him bodily across a 35-foot ravine. He tried to climb on top of the balloon and hold it down, but it threw him off. Finally, he was able to throw a hitch around a tree and bring the bag to a halt. With the FBI man's help, he tied it fast.

"I was plumb tuckered out," the sheriff reported. "I felt like I was in the middle of a nightmare."

Another sheriff got the biggest game of his life when he potted one of the balloons with his rifle.

Soldier Is Alive; Wife Now Sorry She Wed Again

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Another wife who was remarried after she believed her soldier-husband dead is sorry now and hopes to return to him.

The latest case is that of Mrs. Thelma Hammond Nelms, who has filed suit for annulment of her present marriage. Mrs. Nelms said she had received no word from her first husband, S/Sgt. David E. Hammond of Sharpsburg, Md., after May, 1943, and had assumed that he had been killed. His sister had been notified that he was missing in Europe.

Mrs. Nelms' present husband is William R. Nelms of Pennington Gap, Va. They were married last August.

"I don't know why I did it," she said, "except that I felt Dave had died, and—to tell the truth—I was so awful lonesome."

Mrs. Nelms learned three months ago that her first husband had been liberated from Stalag 30 by the Red army.

Swims 20 Hours, Gets Planes to Save 5 in Lake

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—Five members of a fishing party whose boat capsized on Lake Pontchartrain were rescued by air after a sixth member swam more than 10 miles in 20 hours to get help.

William Hayes, New Orleans, reached West End at 2 p. m. after the exhausting swim and the five others were picked up by a PBY (Catalina) patrol bomber two hours later. They had spent 23 hours in the water and suffered burns from gasoline which spread in the water when their boat sank. All were equipped with life preservers.

Kills Armed Japanese With a Pair of Pliers

OKINAWA. — A Kentuckian, Pfc. Eurie E. Legates, killed a Japanese with a pair of pliers — and he's got witnesses to prove it.

Legates and two other soldiers were stringing a telephone line near the 7th infantry division front when they spotted an armed Japanese asleep in the brush.

The Japanese awoke and started to run. He was shot in one leg. As the Jap fell, Legates sprang on him and beat him to death with his pliers, although the Japanese still had six grenades and a bayonet.

Chant of Moro Girl Gives Clew To Heroic Yanks

Her Song Reveals How Japs Killed Two American Airmen on Jolo.

JOLO.—The chant of a Moro dancing girl at a festival in the village of Parang attended by officers of the 163rd infantry, 41st division, revealed to the American authorities the story of a heroic attack by navy patrol planes on a Japanese convoy in the early days of the war, says the Associated Press.

After an elaborate feast the girl, wearing elaborate combs of gold in her braided hair and rings of pearls on her fingers, appeared before the army officer guests and to the accompaniment of the pulawtas (native cymbals) she began her chant.

An interpreter told Lt. Col. Leonard A. Wing, Bozeman, Mont., regimental executive officer, that she was singing the story of how the Japanese had come to the island, and of the fight of the Moros and of two American fliers who had been captured and executed by the Japanese with Samurai honors.

Natives Tell of Incident.

The Americans became greatly interested in the story of the fliers and from many native sources were able to piece together an account of what happened.

Three days after the Japanese landed at Jolo on Christmas eve, 1941, six navy patrol bombers raided Jolo where a large concentration of enemy shipping stood off port.

The Catalinas attacked at low level, December 27, and succeeded in sinking one crowded Maru type enemy transport and a cruiser. But anti-aircraft fire was intense. Two of the Catalinas were shot down.

Moros who had watched the action said a number of men bailed out. The figure varies but the most reliable accounts indicated that at least nine men were helped by natives to reach the small island of Siasi in the Sulu group and from there taken by vinta sailing boat to Tarakan, Dutch Borneo. They escaped.

Three more fliers were killed in the crash. Their bodies were buried by natives at night without the knowledge of the Japanese. And there were two fliers whose parachutes brought them down near an enemy warship. These were the men who became heroes in the Moro legend.

As the story is told now on Jolo, the captive Americans were taken before the Japanese commander, Commodore Sizaki, who demanded that they reveal their base and the number of planes still operative. The Japanese air blitz of the Philippines still was under way at this time.

The Americans refused to tell the enemy anything but their names and serial numbers. Questioning went on for several days but the two fliers did not betray any information of value.

Then the Japanese commander called a dress parade of all his forces on Jolo. Standing at attention at Jolo air field with the Japanese flag fluttering overhead, Nip soldiers looked on stolidly while the two Americans were brought before them with their hands bound behind their backs.

Pointing to the prisoners the Japanese commander extolled them for their bravery in refusing to reveal information to an enemy. He told the Japanese troops that these Americans should serve as an example to them if they were faced by similar circumstances. Then the two fliers were given the "privilege" of dying for their country.

Their heads were cut off.

The bodies were exhumed on May 4, 1945, by Chaplain Graves and reburied in the little American cemetery near Jolo.

55 Dollars a Pound Is Price of Sugar in China

CHUNGKING, CHINA. — Despite government efforts to check China's runaway prices, some commodities in Chungking cost more than 10,000 times the prewar level.

The Chungking retail price index April 30 was, by government acknowledgement, 1,250 times the level before the war broke out in July, 1937.

A pound of badly refined sugar, which used to cost 10 Chinese cents, now brings 1,100 Chinese dollars. Calculated at the official exchange rate of 20 Chinese dollars to one American dollar, the cost would be 55 American dollars a pound. At the unofficial rate of 600 to 1,000 Chinese dollars to one American dollar the cost in American money would be over $1.80 a pound.

A good American shirt costs 35,000 Chinese dollars; an orange 200; a refrigerator 1,000,000 or more and a lipstick 10,000.

Reversed Helmet Saves Life of American Soldier

MANILA. — Pfc. Joseph Montanez of Pasadena, Calif., put on his helmet backward. A Japanese bullet struck the rim and penetrated the helmt, but lost its force. Pfc. Montanez escaped injury.

Backside forwards, the helmet sat low enough to catch the bullet, which otherwise would have struck the soldier's forehead. He continued fighting throughout the night, during which his company killed 61.

PARAMOUNT'S studio press bureau reported an unusual number of requests from servicemen to visit the Betty Hutton-Sonny Tufts sets for "Cross My Heart." They couldn't figure out the reason for that avalanche of requests, till some bright boy came up with the answer. Seems that somebody had anounced in print that Betty had posed for photographs on the set with two air corps lieutenants, Robert Drew and Bruce Shaw, P-38 pilots stationed at nearby Van Nuys—and Betty had sat on one officer's lap while the cameras clicked!

ISAAC'S HERITAGE

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 24:10, 15-20, 34-36, 61-67.
GOLDEN TEXT—I have a goodly heritage. —Psalm 16:6.

The ordinary things of life become extraordinary when we recognize in them the outworking of the plan of God. Our lesson presents one of history's sweetest love stories. It would be worth reading just for that reason, but it is also the account of God's hand in the carrying forward of His promised blessing on the seed of Abraham.

For a long time it seemed that there could be no fulfillment at all, for Sarah and Abraham had no child. Then by a miracle, God gave them a beloved son.

Isaac's remarkable deliverance in the hour when it looked as though he might be taken from his father (Gen. 22:10-12) was like bringing back one who was dead (Heb. 11:18, 19).

He grew into manhood, and Abraham, good father and faithful servant of the Lord, determined that his son must have a godly wife. So in accordance with Oriental custom he sent a most trusted servant back to their homeland to choose a bride from their own kindred.

The altogether charming story unfolds in our lesson as we see

I. A Faithful Servant (v. 10).

Full instructions from Abraham and an oath that he would not take a bride for Isaac from among the Canaanites, prepared the servant for his journey. Taking with him a goodly caravan and rich presents from his master, he set out on his journey.

There is much to learn here about the need of parental concern, and their interested action in helping young people to find the right mate. We see the importance of avoiding "mixed" marriages, especially those between a believer and an unbeliever.

We see the need of constant dependence on God, for only He has the wisdom and the knowledge of human hearts which can properly join two lives together. In our day when marriage is so carelessly and casually contracted, these matters need special emphasis.

II. A Fair Damsel (vv. 15-20).

To be good to look upon is certainly a desirable thing in a woman, but it has been far too much exploited in our day. Notice that while Rebekah was very fair, she also had those qualities of character and of experience which prepared her to be a good wife for Isaac.

She was kind and willing to serve; not only did she offer water to the servant of Abraham, but promptly watered his camels. Such an attitude of heart and mind is a great asset to a woman in marriage.

She was instructed in the domestic arts. The fact that she had come to draw water indicated that, and her ability to draw the water showed that she had experienced the duties of woman in the household.

Here is wise counsel for the young man who is interested in marriage, and for his parents as they guide him. Let him look for the girl with the fair countenance if he will, but let him be sure that there is something really worthwhile behind the pretty face.

No woman, no matter how extensive her culture or how rich her family, is ready for marriage until she knows something of the responsibilities of family life and has a will to do what she can for the care and comfort of others.

III. An Honorable Proposal (vv. 34-36).

Abraham's trusted man, perceiving that God had led him to the one of His choice, at once stated his errand. There was no trickery, no smooth double-talk. This was a straight-out proposal that Rebekah come with him to be the bride of Isaac.

Notice that he made known his master's financial position, and made clear the place Rebekah would occupy as the wife of Isaac. That is as it should be. There is a contractual basis for marriage which calls for complete candor and honest dealing.

But there was more here, for Rebekah ultimately responded to the dictates of her own heart when she said, "I will go" (see v. 58). It was

IV. A Love Marriage (vv. 61-67).

Isaac, meditating in the twilight, presents a fine picture of a man spiritually ready to be a good husband. He had more to offer than riches. Let other young men follow his example.

The tender scene of their meeting, and of the love which welled up in their hearts at first sight of one another, needs no comment.

We do need to say that unless America gets back to real love marriages, our nation is destined for disaster. Matrimony based on physical attraction, improper emphasis on sex, or on convenience, will never be able to meet the stress of modern life. Love can and will do it, especially where those who thus love one another first love God.

It's very restful to your feet if, when ironing, you will stand on a large piece of corrugated paper or a heavy rug.

Successful cleaning depends chiefly on taking a little extra care—on using clean cloths and plenty of clean water.

For the best possible fit in making slipcovers, cut each section of the cover on the grain of the material.

Since the heat is most even in the center of the average oven, that is the best place for a cake while it is baking.

The World, the Peace and Andy Gribbin

An important thing about Andy Gribbin's education is that his whole early life is spent in learning the essential business of co-operation, of getting along with fellow-beings.

First, he has to learn how to fit into his immediate family, learn the give-and-take necessary to get along with brothers, sisters, elders.

Then, after a few years, his world enlarges, he is sent to school. Pretty soon he learns how to spell C-A-T. But about this same time he learns something much more valuable, which is that he mustn't pull the cat's tail because a cat is a being, and therefore entitled to certain inalienable rights.

He also learns that 1 plus 1 equals 2. But much more useful is learning that 48 equals 1, that 48 states make 1 nation, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

As Andy grows up his world will continually expand. At church, at school, in business. And through it all will run the theme of cooperation, of getting along with people of different religious, political and economic beliefs; with people some of whom he doesn't even like.

But—the tragedy of world history is that the Andy Gribbins have not learned that in a constantly shrinking world, cooperation must extend beyond the borders of the country; that just as it is necessary to get along with neighbors and neighbor states, so is it necessary to get along with neighbor nations.

And today, with no spot on earth more than sixty hours away by plane, with oceans shrunk to the width of rivers, with the age of rocket-travel upon us, all nations are neighbor nations.

There are hopeful signs that finally we are awake to this.

Even so, a lack of determination, of responsibility, of effort could again ruin the peace and set the stage for World War 3.

What can you do to help make sure that war will never come? You can . . .

First, get and keep yourself informed about the specific proposals for peace and international cooperation which are now before us.

Second, interest your friends in these questions. Get them discussed in groups to which you belong.

Third, write what you think to your Congressman and Senators, to your newspaper. Declare yourself.

MORAL ECHOES

Rev. D. W. Haskew, D.D.

Well do I remember those days when I was a cotton-picker, along with my brothers on the farm. The rows of white cotton would stretch out before me, and my arms would reach for the fleecy bolls, and soon my sack would be full of the gatherings of my fingers. Many a time have I prayed that God would make my soul as white as the cotton I gathered in.

I knew that my soul should unfold itself in purity, and it was the passion of my spirit that God would make me as white as cotton. If God can grow the cotton then, if God can make the snow so white, can He not wash our spirits and make them clean? Lord make my soul as white as the cotton as the snow.

The keper of the long bridge known as "THE GOLDEN GATE" bridge in California, saw a poor woman as she strolled toward the centre of the bridge He feared that she anticipated self destruction, and he followed her as closely as he dared. She made a dash for the side of the bridge, and the man did his best to stop her, but over the side she went. In reporting this to the authorities, this is what he said, "I did my best to prevent her destroying herself, but she would not listen to me." This deluded woman of just a few days ago, made the 46th suicide by leaping to destruction from that one bridge. How devotedly God is following every deluded sinner. He is doing all that a God can do to prevent him from plunging himself into outer darkness, but not even God can save when the sinner refuses to heed His warning. At the judgment God is going to say every lost soul,"I did my best to save you, but you would not let Me"

An old seaman told me of the fierce storm through which his ship had passed. Said he,"The waves were like mountains and the wind was fierce. Parson when a ship meets a storm like that, there is only one thing that a captain can do,and that is to set the ship to meet the storm and to hold her there." My Christian friend that is all you can do when you run into the fierce storms of life Reason may help you some, and your experience may give aid, but these will not save you. Like Paul, you may go for days and weeks without seeing the sun and stars. Your only hope is to pull your soul in position to meet the storm and hold her there. We cannot understand the why of these storms of life,but we can trust in God and go through.

A native of Finland holds the record as the fastest runner, having attained the speed of 14 miles per hour. On the plains of Texas I have seen a Jackrabbit and was told that he could run 35 mi. per hour. Also I saw a Texas Greyhound and I was told that he could run 42 mi. per hour Men have invented machines that can run into the hundreds of miles per hour. The human mind is the swiftest thing known in the world. It can outstrip the speed of light that is estimated to travel at the rate of 186,000 miles per hour. Our minds can circle the globe in a fraction of a section. Indeed, our though can reach the most distant star in a fraction of a second, and yet we are told that it takes light a million years to come from that star to the world. It has the speed of the Eternal God at it's command.

The pastor of a little country church met with a severe affliction and he and his family were in great need. The community decided to hold a prayer meeting at the pastors home and pray that God would help their sky pilot while one of the group was down praying there came a knock at the door. On there came a knock at the door. On opening it they found a little freckled faced boy who announced in a cheerful tone, "Here is my Pop's prayer". He was told to be quite, as they were praying for their pastor. Then the boy spoke again saying "Yep, my Pop prayed for the preacher too, and sent his prayer over by me and if some of these men will give me a lift, we will bring in his prayer." Soon they found out that the boy's dad had prayed and that the answer was in the form of a load of potatoes, flour, corn meal, hams, turnips, apples ,a few warm comforts and a lot of delicacies for the sick. When the prayer ,God has a way of asking Him to answer our prayers.

Federal Land Bank Now Owned By Farmers

The Federal Land Bank of New Orleans, Wednesday, August 1, reached its most coveted goal — complete ownership by the farmers who use it.

The last act in reaching the goal of farmer ownership was taken Wednesday morning in the Farm Credit Administration building in New Orleans, when R. L. Thompson, President, signed the necessary papers and check transferring $2,951,000 to the Federal Treasury, the final payment on money made available to the bank by the U. S. Government during the depression when many farmers were unable to make their regular payments to the bank.

Commenting on the payment, President Thompson declared that "the bank is now owned entirely by the 128 national farm loan associations and direct borrowers in Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana."

The land bank president said that "the repayment to the Government was made possible by the recovery of agriculture in the Fifth Farm Credit District from the effects of the depression, the fine cooperation received from national farm loan associations and the sound guidance given the bank by its district board of directors.

"During the depression years many extensions of regular payments were granted to farmers in order to assist them over the difficult times. These extensions have been paid in the past few years because of higher farm prices and improved farm income.

"During distressed years when farmers could not pay the annual installments on their loans, the bank was assisted by the U. S. Government in extending a credit service to farmers by subscribing $18,880,760 to the bank's capital stock and making available $16,376,741 of paid-in surplus, thereby making it possible for the bank to grant extensions on loan installments that could not be paid by the farmers. This represented a total of $33,257,501 the U. S. Government had invested in the financial structure of the bank. This amount has been gradually returned to the U. S. Treasury and the payment Wednesday completed the transaction."

When the bank was established in 1917, the Government bought stock in it to give it initial working capital. Under the land bank system each farmer who obtained a loan from the bank bought stock in a national farm loan association equal to 5 per cent of his loan. The associations in turn purchased an equal amount of stock in the Federal Land Bank. Under this plan, the bank ultimately retired all Government-held stock.

So, the Federal Land Bank of New Orleans, a cooperative farm credit institution, is now wholly owned by its farmer members, has capital stock of $3,300,000; surplus and reserves of $17,056,330; and total assets of $66,000,000.

"The farmers of Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, and the directors and officers of The Federal Land Bank and national farm loan associations in the three states are proud of the fact that time has proved that the Government was fully justified in helping our farmers during a great national crisis when they needed help and when they couldn't get it anywhere else. Of all the money invested by the Government in the bank, not a dollar was lost. The last penny has been repaid. We believe that this is a tribute to both the faith of our Government in the inherent soundness of the land bank system and in the innate honesty of our farmers," President Thompson concluded.

It is not safe to buy land or to lend money and accept land as security without first investigating the Title of the land. Often there are unpaid mortgages and judgments or other liens, affecting the Title, which an Abstract would set out. Therefore, when buying land or lending money thereon, it is important that an Abstract of Title be furnished. A few dollars spent for an Abstract is cheaper than going ahead and having a law suit a little later on.

Clanton Public Schools To Have Bible Teacher

The Chilton County Bible Study Committee, Inc., was organized last Spring for the purpose of having the Bible taught in our public schools here in Clanton. This Bible Committee has been working during the summer months securing a teacher who will teach Bible this year in the Clanton schools. The program has been working fine in some other cities, viz., Selma and Chattanooga, Tenn., and we feel confident that it will prove a great blessing to the children of our own city and county. If others can have this Great Book taught in their schools, so can the people of Chilton County.

A fine young woman from Rome, Ga., has been employed by the Bible Study Committee to teach Bible this year in our city schools. She will be present the first day of the opening of the Fall term of school. All children who plans to take Bible as one of your subjects this year should contact Rev. Owens or Miss Camp as soon as possible. We are asking that all parents who would like for your children to study Bible, the Word of God, along with other subjects' in school get behind this program and let us put it over in a big way. If there is something about the program you do not understand we will be glad to explain it to you. Some are thinking it to be one of the greatest steps taken yet to better our schools and to greatly benefit the youth of our county.

Wherever the Bible has been taught it has sweetened the home, sactified the cradle and has blessed humanity. Because it is a Book of Laws, it shows the right from the wrong. It is the Book of Wisdom that makes the foolish wise. It is the Book of Truth, which detects all human errors. It is the Book of Life which shows how to avoid everlasting death. It is the most authentic and entertaining history ever published. The Bible contains the most remote antiquities, the most remarkable events and wonderful occurences. It is a complete code of laws; a perfect body of divinity; and an unequaled narrative. It is a book of biography and of travels. It is the best covenant ever made, the best deed ever written. It is the best will ever executed, the best testament ever signed. It is the learned man's masterpiece, the young man's best companion, the school boy's best instructor. It is the ignorant man's dictionary and every man's directory. It promises an eternal reward to the faithful and believing; but that which crowns all is the Author. He is without partiality and without hypocrisy. With whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.

Can anyone fail to take the advantage of this opportunity of having the Bible taught to you, or to your child right in public school? I don't think so. Inform yourself concerning this great move, and help support this work. We hope to have a mass meeting of all concerned before the opening o the Fall term of school. So keep reading your County papers for further announcement.—Rev. A. T. Hickman, Secretary.

Final Dates For Dog Vaccinations

A word to a few individuals and to a few communities in the county who have failed to vaccinate your dogs. Your neighbor expects it of you, and you, as a good citizen, ought to be interested in keeping down that deadly disease — Rabies. Vaccinating every dog yearly is the only means known to modern medicine to keep rabies away from the human family.

Your State and County appointed me as your Rabies Inspector and have asked me, and made it mandatory, that we vaccinate, so I am asking your cooperation.

I am still anxious to help you by coming to your community if you will bring the dogs out. The fee is still 5c cash, but after the following dates have been filled, the Deputy Inspector will take over and the price will be $1.25.

The Places—

Jesse Little (Poor Jesse, West End) —Monday, August 20th—5 to 6.

Jemison (McNeill's home) — Tuesday, August 21—3 to 5.

Maplesville — Wednesday, August 22—3 to 5.

Clanton (McCain's barn)—Thursday, August 23—3 to 5.

MRS. ADDIE NOAH DIED

Mrs. Addie Noah, age about 68, died at Tuscaloosa Wednesday of last week. Services were held Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock at Pates Chapel, conducted by Rev. Rabie Crumpton; Martin directing. Pallbearers were: C. B. Baggett, Sam Hubbard, R. C. Hayze, N. Hays, Arnie Barnett, J. B. Oglesby.

Surviving are five daughters—Mrs Flora Reynolds of Birmingham, Mrs Virginia Scott, Mrs. Viola Gibson, Mrs. Elizabeth Ray, Mrs. Gertie Mae Burnett, all of Thorsby; two brothers Jack and Morgan Lauderdale, Alexander City, Mrs. Z. M. Yerby of Mississippi.

CLEAN YOUR OWN CEMETERY LOT

It has been rightfully said that the condition of a city or village cemetery is a true criterion of the character of the city or village.

If each resident of Verbena who owns a grave lot in the cemetery would keep his or her lot decently cleaned, those faithful residents who always come or send a hand to a public working would only have to clean a small portion of the cemetery.

We are glad the Verbena cemetery is not located on or near the State paved highway, where hundreds of passing motorists could see how Verbena feels toward her "City of the Dead."

It would seem that pride and sacred memories would prompt grave lot owners to keep their lots decently clean.

If Gabriel's horn were to toot today, many souls sleeping in the Verbena Cemetery would get lost trying to reach the Final Judgment seat through weeds and trash.—Rip-S.

MRS. NANCY MARTIN

Mrs. Nancy Martin, age 86, died at Thorsby, Ala., Tuesday a.m. The remains were shipped back to her former home, Anniston, Ala., for burial. Funeral services were held at 10:00 a.m. Wednesday from Mt. Zion church, conducted by Rev. L. N. Clacton; interment in church cemetery.

She is survived by four sons—Murdock of Anniston, Lonny of Oxford, Arthur of Thorsby, J. E. of Oxford; four daughters—Mrs. G. L. Almorod, Chaccolottas, Mrs. George Watson, Anniston, Mrs. C. M. Watson, Birmingham, Mrs. J. W. Lusk, Thorsby Route 1.

EXPERT SEWING MACHINE REPAIRMAN MOVED HERE WITH HIS FAMILY

Mr. R. B. Miller, who has been in the Sewing Machine Repair business for thirty-two years, has moved here with his wife, son and daughter.

Coming here from Linden, Ala., Mr. Miller, who had several years training at Rockford, Illinois, has opened up his Repair Shop across the street from the Dixie Cafe.

The people of Clanton welcome this family and wish them much success here in their business.

Rural Areas In Need Of Better Health Services

Farmers of the country are deeply concerner over the lack of medical and health facilities in rural areas. According to the survey made by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Four out of five farmers think more public clinics are needed in farm areas and more than 75 percent of the farmers included in the survey say they would like to subscribe to some flat-rate prepayment plan that would take care of hospital bills and also cover the cost of doctors, and nurses, services.

That there is an urgent need for doctors and health services among rural people is rather forcefully indicated by the fact that farm youth, 18 and 19 years old, have shown the highest rejection rate in the Selective Service for physical, mental and educational defects of any occupational group—41 per cent compared with an average of 25 per cent for other groups.

One possibility for improving the rural health situation is the amount of war surplus medical and hospital supplies that might be placed within reach of farm communities. The availability of such supplies at low cost would likely stimulate the construction of health centers where badly needed and would perhaps help to modernize and improve existing facilities.

Another advantage that could well result from the allocation of war surplus medical supplies to needy rural communities would be that it would attract physicians, dentists, and nurses to such communities, particularly those demobilized from the armed services and also more graduates of medical schools who are just entering medical practice.

MR. AULEY C. GILES

Mr. Auley C. Giles, age 50, died August 6th, at Mobile, Ala. Remains were shipped to Clanton for burial. Funeral services were held Sunday at 4:00 p.m., at Clanton Cemetery, graveside services conducted by Rev. Hickman.

He is survived by three sons—John and Alfred of Foreign service, Earl of Birmingham, Ala.; two daughters, Mrs. T. E. Evans of Birmingham, Mrs. Mildred Cody of Birmingham; two brothers, G. C. and Y. L. of Birmingham.

Pallbearers were: Ed Wagoner, B F. Massey, Thomas Evans, Vernon Evans, W. L. Each and J. A. Mahan.

SOUND ADVICE

For the Second World War Veterans:

After you are discharged from service, several times during the first year, go to physicians and have every part of your bodies examined and have the physicians to give you an affidavit of all of their findings of these examinations.

Put your affidavit away in case you need them for future references, for they may be of great help to you 25 years later in life.

Cut this article out and hang it up in your church for this is the true experiences of thousands of long suffering veterans who failed to go the first year after discharged, to the physicians for a thorough examination of our past work.

Don't Forget, Mother and Dad

To all that read this article: To inherit eternal life, ask and believe: ask and it shall be given you: for everyone that asketh, receiveth. Your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that asked Him.—Luke 11:9-13. "Have FAITH in God, whosoever believeth in Jesus, should not perish but have everlasting life."—John 3:16 Put your "FAITH" into action.—James 2:26.

Listen, friends, your everlasting life started when you ask and believe in Jesus with all of your heart, soul strength and mind.—Luke 10:28.

It's now your next move.

Sincerely,
ERNEST E. WATKINS.
First World War Veteran

PROCLAMATION

WHEREAS, August 14th, 1945, will mark the Tenth Anniversary of the Social Security Act; and

WHEREAS, during the past ten years many notable achievements in Social Security have taken place in our nation, state and city in which we can take pride, for practically all the working population is protected by the Social Security system; and

WHEREAS, it is hoped and expected in our city that the future Social Security will fill an even greater need as time marches on: and

WHEREAS, the security of men women and children of the nation should be placed first; now, therefore:

I, Cooper Green, as President of the Commission of the City of Birmingham, do proclaim the week of 13 to 18, 1945, as Social Security Week. During this period of time I urge all our citizens, who came under the protection of the act to visit your Social Security field office, to which you are cordially invited. There you can obtain any information relative to the great law passed by Congress for your benefit; you can ascertain your rights and benefits under the great humanitarian program inaugurated by our late beloved President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF I have hereunto set my hand as President of the Commission of the City of Birmingham and caused the seal of said City to be hereto affixed, on this first day of August, 1945.

Officially Signed:
COOPER GREEN.
President of the Commission of the City of Birmingham.

MOORE ASK AID IN CANNING FOR ORPHANS

Kathleen Norris Says:

Blessed Are the Meek

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

"I adore my Bill, but that doesn't mean that I want to swallow his family whole."

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

TODAY'S letter comes from a bride of only a few months; Marjorie married her flier when he came home, honorably discharged, after 22 months of hard service. They were engaged for a year, but in that year saw each other only twice, for a few days interval.

Bill is handsome, clever, devoted—and rich. Marjorie didn't know how rich until now, when they are going to his home city, Philadelphia, to live.

"This is my trouble," she writes. "My people are poor, but we come of good stock. My mother for many years supported my grandmother and myself by teaching. She is not strong now, lives with my grandmother, and there is almost no money, but for fineness and goodness there never were two more genuine saints.

"Bill and I are to have 'one of the family houses' to live in. We are to have 'Uncle Phil's house,' which he says is filled with old revolutionary junk, or 'Grandpa's house,' which is handsomer but smaller. His mother writes me that 'old Emma' will come to us at once as cook, and bring two granddaughters to 'make themselves useful.' Aunts and cousins of Bill's write him that they want to know when 'dear Marjorie' would like to be entertained—would I like a tea or a formal reception?

Too Much 'Class.'

"All this appalls and annoys me. I hate that sort of thing. Bill takes it all seriously; he has three brothers, one sister, and countless cousins and other relatives. He hopes his grandmother will give us the Reveré porringers, and wants me to be painted by 'the feller that has painted us all.'

"I begin to feel that no wealth or position will make up for the independence I have enjoyed for years as a newspaper woman, and am sure already that I want my mother and grandmother to go East with me. I will be lost and strange in that big family, obliged to grin and bear all sorts of things that are absolutely unnatural to me, and I'll need support—and confidantes. I adore my Bill, but that doesn't mean that I want to swallow his family whole. This business of having a house picked out for me, and servants, too, is a little thick. Bill says we'll have plenty of room for Mother and Gran, but is afraid they won't like it. Mother is dubious, but Gran says she'll do anything I want. They both love our San Diego cottage, and their life here, but neither is young, and I simply can't bear to leave them. Bill won't promise to come back, and altogether I don't know what to do."

My dear Marjorie, I say in answer, you are trying to pour old wine into new bottles, and it won't succeed. More than most young wives, your place is to follow Bill's lead now, and accept the situation in Philadelphia wholeheartedly. Go on there determined to be good-natured, adaptable, friendly in every way. Don't have much to say, listen and watch and make them like you by sweetness and amiability. Give this experiment a year, in which you criticize nobody, agree to all arrangements; take this new sort of life as if it were a book you are reading, with yourself as heroine.

Lucky in Many Ways.

Heroine you are, of course. The young western wife of a person whose wealth and family connections make him important, beloved and lovely, rich and socially secure—there is a position many girls would envy you. That you are smarter, quicker, more amusing, more independent, than the men and women you are going to meet, I am taking for granted. Those fine old long-established families have wonderful characteristics, but they can be dull! Only, if you'll be patient enough to endure the surface dullness for awhile, you'll find under it a wonderful dignity and integrity, characteristics that you'll be glad someday to hand on to your children.

As for taking your mother and grandmother with you, that would be a fatal mistake. To move from the fresh sea air and riotous gardens of San Diego, where the climate is the most equable in the whole world, to eastern snows and summer storms, might seriously affect the health of them both. They would both feel intruders—in fact, they would actually be intruders, and in attempting to reconcile their claims and those of the big family you would jeopardize your married happiness, perhaps irretrievably.

Play your part with dignity and patience, always remembering that blessed are the meek, and you'll find yourself most enviably placed one of these days, in the heart of the very finest of our American culture. Your children will have a background as fine as any in the world, and opportunities and advantages worthy of a good name. Don't throw these things away because of the shallow satisfaction that assertiveness, sensitiveness, pride, resentment will give you now. Make your new family love you, and you'll presently find yourself loving them.

"Be good-natured, adaptable, friendly."

WEALTHY FAMILY PINS HER DOWN

Most girls would envy Marjorie's position. She is married to a man she "adores." He is handsome, clever, rich. He loves Marjorie devotedly. After two years of service in the air corps, he is coming home for good.

The trouble is, Bill has too much. Marjorie, who is accustomed to a simple life, is not willing to adapt herself to the customs and traditions of a proud old Philadelphia family. Every detail of Marjorie's affairs is taken care of before hand—a house, furnishings, servants, all are provided. What Marjorie doesn't like is this paternalistic system—she is just expected to fit into her place, and like it. Nobody seems to think she might not care for the social mold in which Bill's family exists.

Soap From Coconuts

Possibly 40 per cent of the 1945 imports of copra into the United States will go to priority uses, but most of the remainder will probably be used in making soap. Glycerine, in great wartime demand for the making of explosives, is a by-product of soap-making. Coconut oil yields about 40 per cent more glycerine than domestic fats and oils.

Soap-making is now a highly technical process. For instance, tallow gives body to soap, but it takes coconut oil to make it lather freely.

One Dessert—Many Variations
(See Recipes Below)

Variations on a Theme

I have often thought that most of us would be better cooks if we learned to make a few dishes well instead of gathering hundreds of recipes without ever learning how to do any one of them well enough to set in front of company. Then, if these few dishes get monotonous, there are always good variations to use to make them seem entirely different than the basic recipe.

One woman whom I know frankly admits that the only dessert which she can be certain of turning out "right and proper" is a bavarian cream. But is it monotonous to have bavarian cream whenever we go to have dinner with her? No, indeed. Sometimes it turns out to be maple flavored, garnished with pecan nutmeats. Another time she will cleverly flavor it with chocolate and coffee, a most intriguing combination. Then during the fruit season, she has a spree by adding delicious combinations like pineapple and apricots.

Basic Bavarian Cream.
(Serves 6)

1 envelope plain, unflavored gelatin
¼ cup cold water
2 egg yolks
½ cup sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 cup thin cream
2 egg whites

Soften gelatin in cold water. Scald milk in top part of double boiler, then gradually add the combined egg yolks, sugar and salt. Return to the double boiler and cook until custard-like in consistence. Remove from heat, add gelatin and stir until dissolved. Add vanilla and cream. Chill, and when mixture begins to thicken, beat until fluffy with rotary egg beater. Fold in stiffly beaten whites. Pour into mold or molds that have been rinsed in cold water. Chill until firm. When ready to serve, unmold and garnish as desired.

Bavarian Cream Variations.

Maple Bavarian: Make above recipe using shaved maple sugar in place of white sugar. One dozen cut marshmallows may be added or ½ cup chopped pecans or walnuts.

Butterscotch: Omit white sugar. Cook ¾ cup brown sugar with 2 tablespoons butter and add this to hot custard.

Chocolate Rice: Beat 3 tablespoons cocoa into 1 cup cooked rice and fold into bavarian mixture.

Fruit Bavarian: Fold 1 cup diced fruit into bavarian cream after it starts to thicken.

Chocolate Bavarian: Add 2 squares melted, unsweetened chocolate or 6 tablespoons cocoa to scalded milk. Continue as directed. If a slight flavor of coffee is desired with the chocolate, substitute 1 tablespoon cold, boiled coffee for 1 tablespoon of the milk.

Coffee Bavarian: Substitute ½ cup cold, boiled coffee for ½ cup milk and add 1 tablespoon lemon juice.

Ice cream comes in for many delicious variations, too, if you have a good basic recipe:

Custard Base Ice Cream.
2 cups milk
⅔ cup sugar
2 tablespoons cornstarch
3 eggs
1 cup heavy cream
1 teaspoon vanilla

Scald 1½ cups milk and add all but 2 tablespoons of the sugar to it. Add cornstarch and salt to remaining ½ cup milk. Add to milk which has been heated in top part of double boiler, stirring occasionally. Beat 3 egg yolks and 1 white, add the hot custard and return to double boiler to cook for 5 minutes. Chill. Beat 2 egg whites with the remaining sugar until stiff and add to chilled custard with vanilla. Finally add cream which has been beaten until thick but not stiff. Freeze without stirring.

Ice Cream Variations.

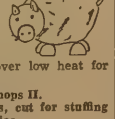
Banana: Crush three bananas through potato ricer, adding 2 tablespoons lemon juice. Add to custard before adding egg white.

Caramel: Heat the sugar of the above recipe in heavy skillet stirring until melted and light brown in color. Add ¼ cup water and stir until smooth. Cook the cornstarch with the milk and salt and add the caramel plus 1 tablespoon of sugar. Proceed as directed above.

Chocolate: Melt 1½ to 2 tablespoons of chocolate over hot water adding to custard while hot.

Coffee: Scald ½ cup finely ground coffee in the milk, then strain through three thicknesses of cheesecloth. Proceed as above, adding ½ teaspoon almond flavoring.

Mint: Add ½ teaspoon mint extract for vanilla. Tint the ice cream a delicate green. Or, if mint extract is not available, melt 1 cup crushed or ground mints in milk. Tint pink or green, as desired.



Peach: Add 1 cup crushed peaches, ½ cup sugar and ¼ teaspoon almond extract. Omit vanilla.

Now we come to an interesting variation in the meat department. When you want to dress up pork chops for company, here are two excellent suggestions. They are stuffed to stretch the meat.

Pork Chops I.

6 thick pork chops (cut pocket alongside bone)
2 cups toasted bread cubes
Salt and pepper to taste
2 tablespoons parsley
4 tablespoons fat
1 can tomato soup

Stuff pork chops with toasted bread cubes and parsley. Pin together with a toothpick. Sear chops on both sides in skillet. Season with salt and pepper, add tomato soup, cover and cook over low heat for 45 to 60 minutes.

Pork Chops II.

6 thick pork chops, cut for stuffing
1½ cups cooked rice
2 pimientos, shredded
Salt and pepper to taste
2 tablespoons lard or substitute

Stuff pork chops with a well seasoned mixture of rice and pimientos. Pin with toothpick. Sear chops until golden brown. Season with salt and pepper, and add ½ cup water, cover tightly, and cook until tender.

How to make good pastry: The proper proportion for pastry is 1 cup flour, salt to taste and ½ cup shortening or substitute.

The important points are: have ingredients as cold as possible; never over-mix shortening and flour. The mixture should be "lumpy," about the size of giant peas.

When the shortening is not thoroughly mixed with the flour, it "streaks" and makes for flakier crust.

Too much water makes the pastry a "toughie." Use just enough to make the dough stick together. On damp days, less water is required, on sunny days, more.

They're All Alike

By RUBY PROCTOR

McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Features.

THE train whistled shrilly at a crossing and thundered on through the night. Pfc. John Whitcomb Morely slouched in his seat, his eyes closed, but he wasn't sleeping. He was calling himself all kinds of a fool for inviting the two fellows in the opposite seat to spend a week-end leave with him.

It was just as well, he thought gloomily, that their plane reservations had been cancelled in favor of more important travelers. There wouldn't be so much time. Of course, when he had first asked them, he hadn't realized how queer his home and his folks would look to Pete and Frank.

It had happened in a reckless little burst of gratitude the time they had insisted that he accompany them to their own town to spend a few days. They'd felt sorry for him, he guessed, because he never received any packages, and almost never any mail.

Just that long, official looking envelope once a month with his father's business address in the corner. There was always a check enclosed which he didn't need, but which his father insisted on sending because he couldn't understand how anyone could possibly get by on only fifty-four dollars a month. Usually there was only the check, but sometimes he inclosed a little note: "If there is anything you need, son, just let me know. Your mother is pretty busy these days—Red Cross, selling War Bonds—you know how she loves that sort of thing. She'll write later."

Those visits had opened his eyes to a lot of things. Their parents had treated the boys as if they were returning heroes. They had accepted John without question as one of themselves, had gone all-out to show him a good time.

He'd have to think of something to explain why his folks were different. His father would be silent and preoccupied at dinner, if he was home at all, and his mother would be coldly polite to Frank and Pete, and vaguely critical of all three of them. John had had a sick, shamed feeling ever since this morning when he had sent the telegram announcing the change in the time of their arrival.

"What's the matter, John?" Frank asked. "You look kind of sick."

"I was just thinking," John said with false animation. "We'll have to get over to the Servicemen's Center. There's nothing like it. They really do all they can for you."

Pete shook his head. "That's for the fellows without local ties. Your mother will have something planned. I know, they're all alike."

"Yeah," Frank said, stretching, "mothers are all alike."

He'd go nuts, John thought, if they didn't quit saying that. Mothers were definitely not all alike, and Frank and Pete would find that out soon enough.

He'd tell them the truth. He could say it casually as if it weren't important, just an interesting study in human nature. He'd put it something like this: "Mothers are not all alike, fellows, and I can prove it. Meet mine, Exhibit A."

"I don't expect that the folks will be at the station," John said as they moved into the crowded aisle. "It's an awkward hour to meet a train."

"They'll be there all right," Frank laughed confidently.

Surprisingly they were, both of them. John could hardly believe it His mother kissed him, not caring what it did to her make-up. Good Lord, he couldn't remember when she'd done that! And his dad, gripping his hand hard, and then blowing his nose loudly. This was a bad time of year for colds.

Pete bought a paper as they were leaving the station. "Gosh, fellows, did you see this? That plane we planned to come on crashed!"

Frank sucked in his breath. "Golly, I'll bet your folks were worried!"

John's mother bit her lip and nodded.

Dad mopped his forehead. "We were mighty relieved to get your second telegram," he admitted.

Late that night as the three were undressing Frank said sleepily: "Your folks sure treated us swell, John. The best leave we've had yet. Your mother is really super."

"Yeah," John agreed happily, "they're all alike."

SNAPPY FACTS about RUBBER

By drastic planning, production and supervision of current supplies, the equivalent of 900,000 tires was saved in one year in Britain.

By an arrangement of overlapping rubber lips, a zipper has been developed by B. F. Goodrich that effectively seals liquids, air and gases. Now being used in pressure-sealing doors for airplanes, waterproof supply kits and aviation fuel cells, its post-war uses are numerous.

Automatic tire inflation such as now used on the Army's amphibious "Duck" is a post-war possibility for passenger cars.

Yankee Cussedness Was Still Strong in Sylvester

Two Yankee brothers, John and Sylvester, had not spoken to each other for ten years. A neighbor persuaded Sylvester to greet his brother, who was coming along the road. "I'll do it to oblige you," said Sylvester, "but he won't answer me."

As the second brother approached, Sylvester spoke: "John," he said, "when are you going to bring home that iron bar you stole from me, you low-down thief?"

John walked on without a word. Sylvester turned to the peacemaker, and said triumphantly: "I told you he wouldn't speak to me!"

Tomorrow is Forever

by GWEN BRISTOW

WNU FEATURES

THE STORY THUS FAR: Spratt Herlong had become a successful major producer of motion pictures. When things were not going just right at the office he would call his wife, Elizabeth, and have her join him at lunch. He liked to talk matters over with her—not to secure her advice—but for the sympathetic interest she displayed. After one such meeting, the talk turned to their oldest son, Dick, now 17, who would soon be entering service. They both decided that when the time came, they would face it bravely. Spratt said that giving their son to their country was little compared to what they would lose in case we were defeated in the war.

CHAPTER II

Elizabeth laughed at him. "Are you coming home for dinner?"

"I certainly am. Why the query?"

"It may be pretty noisy. Dick and Cherry are having a couple of youngsters in."

"What on earth are you feeding them with?"

"I was very lucky. I got some short-ribs of beef. And shrimps to start with."

"Better than anything I could get at the commissary. I'll be there. If Kessler turns up with an idea worth talking about, I may be a bit late."

"All right. But I'll have to feed the children. We'll start at seven-thirty whether you're there or not. How's that?"

Elizabeth had a high opinion of marriage, because it was an institution in which she had found a great deal of happiness. She had been married twice, the first marriage joyous but brief, for it had been ended in 1918 by a shell at Chateau-Thierry. Strange to remember now that she had thought her life was over, for she was only twenty when it happened, and nobody could have told her she was going to meet Spratt. She had had no children by her first husband and there was nothing concrete in her present life to remind her of him. But it was her memory of Chateau-Thierry that made her more frightened than Spratt when they spoke of their son's approaching military age. Spratt loved Dick as much as she did, but he had not had a personal experience of the price of war. Though Spratt was an eminently practical man, his mind simply did not accept the possibility that Dick could be killed. Her mind did accept it, because she had been through it once and knew it could happen. But she tried sincerely not to think about it, and for the most part she succeeded. Dick would inevitably be eighteen; what took place after that was up to him and his country. Horrible as it was, this war was nevertheless a battle against evil that must be stopped or it would make the world unfit for Dick to live in. There was no use letting herself get useless and shaky with dread. "I won't have to face it for nearly a year," Elizabeth said to herself for the thousandth time. "Anything can happen before then." So she let it go. Dick was still seventeen, and she had everything she had ever wanted—a congenial marriage, three children, and days full of worthwhile occupation. "It's a good life," she thought as she turned into the canyon road and the fragrance of sage blew up to her from the glens. "A very good life. I like it."

In the driveway she paused to give some directions to the gardener. Her youngest, Brian, aged eleven, appeared with his bicycle. She called to him.

"Where are you going, Brian?"

"Scout meeting." He looked up and down the street. "Peter's supposed to come by and go with me. I said I'd wait in front for him. He ought to be here now."

"All right." She nearly added, "Be careful of the traffic," but stopped herself. Brian was as expert with a bicycle as she with a car. He had never got himself hurt riding, and there was no sense in being overly fussy with him. From scanning the street he turned to look up at her.

"Mother, can I stay for dinner with Peter?"

"Has he asked you?"

"Not yet, but I'm going home with him after Scout meeting to see his lepidoptera—" Brian got out the word importantly—"and he might, I mean if he does, can I stay?"

"Not unless his mother asks you," she answered gravely. "You mustn't ever go to dinner with any of the boys unless their mothers ask you, Brian. If Mrs. Stern invites you to stay, tell her you aren't sure, and ask her to call me up."

"If Mrs. Stern calls you up, can I stay?"

"You won't say anything about wanting to stay unless she suggests it first?"

"No, I won't. Honest. I promise."

"All right then, if she calls me."

"Okay," said Brian, with confident satisfaction. "Oh, there he is. Hi, Peter!" He swung to his bicycle and was off.

"How busy they are," Elizabeth thought as she looked after the two little boys whisking down the street. "Everything they do is so important. I wish life was always like that. Oh, fiddlesticks and fury, I don't either. Getting wistful about childhood is a temptation, but how dreadful if childhood lasted sixty years. Living always on the top of things, with no idea what goes on underneath."

Laughing at herself, she started the car again and drove toward the garage at the back. The children did not notice her at once, so Elizabeth pressed the brake and paused a moment to watch them. Her two older children, Dick and Cherry, were there by the pool with their two friends. One of the latter was a leggy freckled girl named Julia Rayford, whom Dick for some obscure reason considered beautiful. Elizabeth could not see that the child had any beauty except what went with health and high spirits, but she was glad Dick admired her, for Julia was a nice girl and as she was Cherry's best friend, they all got along amiably together. Cherry, now, was a really adorable creature, all curves and a cascade of dark hair, and her two-piece bathing suit, clinging wetly to her luscious person, did more to emphasize her hips and her round young breasts than to conceal them. Elizabeth suddenly thought, "Good heavens, how that when I was her age! But she's really lovely."

"But she's really lovely."

fast I'd have been arrested if I'd gone swimming as nearly naked as

Since Cherry was his sister, Dick rarely paid much attention to how she looked, but it was quite evident that the fourth member of their party was aware of her charms; he was a classmate of Dick's, who, since his name was Herbert Clarendon Whittier, was known to his intimates as Pudge. At the moment Pudge was shaking the lemon tree while Cherry scrambled around gathering the lemons as they fell. Dick stood poised on the diving-board, evidently about to perform some marvelous feat for the admiration of his girl friend, who sat with her legs dangling into the water at the shallow end, watching him. What a healthy-looking creature he was, Elizabeth thought, and how he was growing up. He really looked more like a man than a boy now, and she suddenly thought of Dick as he had been when he was so tiny she could carry him on one arm, and he was soft and warm and smelt like talcum powder. "That's how it goes," she thought. "Strange, and of course it isn't strange at all, it's been happening like this for ten thousand years, but it still seems strange when it happens to yourself. Now before many years more he'll marry some immature little girl like that Julia Rayford, and she'll have a baby, and he'll come in and bend over it with that same expression that Spratt had the first time he saw Dick. If it's a boy they'll name him Richard Spratt Herlong III and if it's a girl they'll argue about every name from Amaryllis to Zillah and compromise on some prosaic family name like mine, and I'll get a smug matriarchal air about me, and we'll all have a grand time and be just as excited about it as if it hadn't happened to anybody else. Of course, before that we'll have to get through the war. Oh, why should any group of power-mad scoundrels have the power to send the world into a holocaust? Boys like Dick—I will not think about it now. He doesn't think about it. Or I wonder if he does?"

She recalled Dick at the radio the day of Pearl Harbor. She came into the living room, as stunned as everyone else was that day, to find him listening, his lips drawn back from his teeth in an expression of horror almost grotesque on so young a face. As she entered he looked up at her and said deliberately, "The yellow-bellied bums." She gave an exclamation, shocked to discover he had such an expression in his vocabulary, but all he did was grin mirthlessly and reply, "I know some worse words than that and if you don't want to hear them you'd better go out and listen to the portable in the garden with the boss, because I feel like saying them." Elizabeth was astonished, not only at his words but at his vehemence. It was the first time Dick had ever seemed to her like anything but a fun-loving little boy. The news from Pearl Harbor had shocked him into a strange and sudden maturity. She went out to the garden and told Spratt what he had said. Spratt answered tersely, "I know just how he feels." "So do I," said Elizabeth, "I couldn't have scolded him with any conviction." They listened awhile to the enraging radio voices, and suddenly she exclaimed, "Spratt! We're in the war. That means that before long—it means Dick." Spratt said, "Yes. I wish it meant me." Elizabeth got chilly all over, but she told herself that day for the first time, "I don't have to face it yet!"

She wondered how Dick felt about it now. She was not sure. Dick spoke of the inconveniences, with the matter-of-fact assumption that when he came of age he would get into it, but right now it seemed less important to him than campus affairs, probably because by the reckoning of seventeen anything a year ahead was too remote to be of pressing concern. "Good heavens above!" she broke off her thoughts, for Dick rose up from the board, turned over twice in the air and cut like a knife into the water, reappearing just in time to hear Julia exclaim, "Dick, that's wonderful! Do you think I could learn to do it?"

Pudge saw Elizabeth first. He called, "How do you do, Mrs. Herlong?" and the others turned to wave at her. Elizabeth waved back as she drove the car into the garage. When she had put it up she walked across the grass toward the pool.

"Hello, all of you. Cherry, what on earth are you going to do with all those lemons?"

"Make lemonade," said Cherry, and Pudge added, "You don't mind, do you?"

"Of course not, but you've shaken down enough to make about four gallons. Pick up the rest of them in a towel or something, Cherry, and bring them in; we can use them."

"I'll get the ice," Dick offered, scrambling out of the pool. "Julia, you and Pudge wait for us here, you don't know where things are." He took up a towel from the grass and began scrubbing his lean brown legs. "The trunks are drippy, but I won't go anywhere but in the kitchen," he promised before Elizabeth could give him any orders.

"All right," she agreed, and started for the house. Crossing a balcony that ran along the back she entered the den which the children were allowed to use as their own, and paused to glance with curiosity at some disreputably dusty old magazines stacked up against the wall. They looked like the accumulation of years from an attic; what the children meant to do with them she could not imagine, unless one of the schools was having a drive for the Salvation Army.

The door leading to the kitchen burst open and Dick put his head in.

"Mother, do you want a glass of lemonade?"

"Why yes, I'd love one."

"You'll have to come and get it, unless I'm allowed on the rug."

"I'll come get it," she said hastily, and went into the kitchen before he could bring his dripping trunks into the den. Dick and Cherry were making a great racket with ice cubes and glasses, their suits leaving puddles on the linoleum and bringing unhappy glances from the cook. "What are all those old papers doing in the den?" Elizabeth asked as she accepted a glass from Dick.

"They're ours," Cherry answered, "Julia's and mine, I mean. We've got to write an essay for costume design about the evolution of twentieth-century clothes. Julia found those old magazines up in the attic at her house and we're going to get some ideas from them."

"I see. Don't bring them into the living room unless you dust them off."

"Okay," said Cherry. She disappeared with the pitcher of lemonade, and Dick held up a box of cookies he had found on a cupboard shelf.

"Can we have these, mother?"

"Such appetites! Very well, take them."

"Thanks." He followed Cherry out to the pool. When she had conferred with the cook about dinner, Elizabeth went upstairs.

She glanced into Spratt's room. Everything there was in order—cigarettes in the boxes, matches and ashtrays beside them, Time and Newsweek on the table, along with a couple of novels from an agency and a notebook in which Spratt could scribble ideas about their picture possibilities. She made sure his pencils were sharpened, drew a curtain across one window through which the sun was pouring in to fade the rug, and went through the communicating doorway into her own room.

This was her favorite spot in the whole house. Much as she loved her family there were times when she was glad to be alone, and this was the only place that was entirely hers. Here everything was arranged to please herself—the bed with its monogrammed blue cover.

FOLKS & THINGS ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

Rumors we've heard: That George McCain is moving his mule barn to the property now occupied by M. L. White Coal Company and will build modern tores along the highway to the Gulfpride Service Station; that Dr. Charles Moore will do the same on the property now housing Dr. Bennett's Chiroprattic offices; that the State Highway Department surveyors have started work on building a highway from the Selma Highway to Billingsley; that John Page will build a modern brick building on his property at the Selma Highway and Birmingham Highway. We believe to house an automobile agency, display rooms, etc.; that the Dog and Cat Hospital is nearing completion and that Dr. T. A. Hayes will be in charge We said to start that its all rumors so if it doesn't come to pass, don't blame us.

"No Soap" these days means just that. "No Soap." It's got to where when you go into a grocery store now the clerk starts wagging his head when he sees you coming and starts mumbling, "I'm sorry, but we're out." He knows without your asking that you want either sugar, soap, washing powders, toilet tissue, lard, but why go on, you know as well as we do how 'tis.

Welcome to Clanton Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Miller, son and daughter. We're glad to have you, and hope you like our little city. For the benefit of you who haven't met the Millers, we'll tell you who they are: Mr. Miller has opened the Clanton Sewing Machine Repair Shop here. They hail from Linden, Ala., and Mr. Miller has had 30 some odd years experience in this type of work. They will be an asset to Clanton.

Our old friend, Lawrence Duffey, writes from Germany that he enjoys the News very much and especially "Folks & Things." We're sorry we haven't had time to write a better column for the "boys" while they are away from home, and inform them about more of the "goings-on" here but we will probably do better from here on out.

We're very sorry to hear of the critical condition of Willie Mims. For the past several months, according to reports reaching us, his condition has grown steadily worse. We hope that something can be done to "bring Willie out of it."

"I beg your pardon, but what is your name?" the hotel clerk asked.

"Name!" echoed the indignant guest, who had just signed the register. "Don't you see my signature there on the register?"

"I do," answered the clerk. "That's what aroused my curiosity."

INDIAN GRAVE CHURCH

Bro. Dewey Hughes, our pastor, will preach Sunday morning, starting a revival August 12th. Bro. Lazell Gray will do the preaching for the revival.

We cordially invite each and every one to come and bring someone with you. You have a hearty welcome.

CANE CREEK

The revival meeting came to a close Friday night. We had some mighty good Gospel messages brought by Bro. Carroll. The Word of God was sowed in our hearts. We hope that it will not be in vain and good will come from the messages in years to come. We are glad and thankful for such a man of God to be with us. The crowds were not as large as they were years ago, but where a small crowd is gathered together God meets with us and we have wonderful services. We want to thank each and every one for cooperating with us in any way. We invite visitors here at any time.

Uncle Sid Willis was taken sick last week and couldn't attend services, but a few times. We missed him as he is a regular attendant at our services. We hope for him a speedy recovery; also one of our deacons, Curtis Parrish, was sick and unable to attend the service. We missed both of them and hope they can come back to Church again soon.

Pvt. Hershel Giles was at home last week and attended service; also another one of our boys, Byron Traywick. We are always glad for the boys in service to come back home to church.

Sunday School next Sunday and preaching the third Sunday. Come to church and feel welcome here.

While in Auburn this past week rural women from all Alabama counties studied rural recreation, world peace, and how to make talks and assume leadership in rural communities. The study was designed to encourage the women to assume leadership in improved farm and home practices throughout Alabama.

ODEN - WELLS

The marriage of Miss Mary Ann Oden, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Oden, of Robertsdale, Ala., formerly of Isabella, and Joe James Wells, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Wells, of Isabella, took place at 3:00 p.m. Saturday, August 4th, at Mulberry Baptist Church, with the pastor, Rev. R. W. Stuckey, officiating, using the double-ring ceremony.

The church was decorated with ferns and floor baskets of white gladiolas and was lighted with candles in branched candelabra.

Preceding the ceremony Mrs. Kirby Summers played nuptial music while the candles were being lighted by Miss Annie Laura Oden, sister of the bride, and Miss Marianne Wells, sister of the groom.

1st Lt. O. F. Davenport sang, "I Love You Truly," accompanied by Mrs. Summers. The wedding party entered to the strangs of the Wedding March.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a blue dress, with white accessories, carrying a bouquet of white roses and white carnations. Little Charlotte Oden, sister of the bride and little Glenene Jones, neice of the groom, carried the rings in on white satin pillows.

Mrs. Margaret Flanigan, sister of the bride, was matron of honor and wore a white dress, carrying a bouquet of pink carnations.

Pvt. Hansel Grooms was the best man.

After a short wedding trip to Birmingham, Mr. and Mrs. Wells will stay a few days with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Wells, at Isabella, after which Mrs. Wells will return to her work as clerk in the Post Office at Robertsdale, and Mr. Wells will get a ship for overseas duty from Mobile.

Mr. and Mrs. Wells are graduates of Isabella High School. The groom finished in May, 1943, and entered the Marchant Marines in September of the same year. He has made several trips to foreign ports.

The bride graduated in May, 1944, and has been employed as Clerk in the Post Office at Robertsdale for the last eight months.

To save time on dishwashing, keep a liberal supply of clean tea towels and dish cloths on hand.

ISABELLA

Both services of Mulberry were very well attended Sunday and Sunday night.

We had several songs sung by a quartet, composed of O. F. Davenport, Prof. Yielding, R. C. Veasey and James Veasey, and a solo by Miss Marcelee Davenport, accompanied by Mrs. Jessie Summers.

The general assembly of the W.M.U. met at the church Wednesday with the regular business meeting. Plans were made to have a mission book taught at the church soon after the revival.

The revival will begin at Mulberry Sunday morning, running through Friday night, with Rev. Frank Smith of Hartselle, as our visiting minister doing the preaching.

Rev. Smith will spend each night and have his breakfast in the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. White, but will have his dinner and supper in the homes of others for the week.

Kirby Summers, who works in Birmingham, is spending his vacation at home this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Oden, Annie Laura and Charlotte and Mrs. Margaret Flanigan and Patsy, of Robertsdale, visited relatives and old friends in this community for several day; last week.

Miss Sara Matthews of Siluria visited friends in this community for the week end.

Mrs. Cecil Oliver and children spent several days with her mother, Mrs. Emma Manning, here last week.

J. H. Camp of Montgomery spent the week end in this community.

Mrs. Andrew Jones and children spent two days last week with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Wells here. She left Glenene to stay a while.

Mr. and Mrs. Traywick and Bell were among the visitors at church Sunday.

Mrs. Fred Metz (nee Mildred Oden) is visiting her sister, Mrs. Maxine Oden, here for a while.

Plan and prepare for your family's needs. And do what 'beforehand food preparation you can - for example make cookies that keep - sandwiche spreads and quick mixes for biscuit, cream sauce and the like.

Plans to extend and improve farm telephone service

Rural telephone service is more highly developed in this country than anywhere else in the world. There are more than four times as many Southern Bell-operated farm telephones in the South today as in 1935. Southern Bell now has underway a wide-range program to further extend and improve telephone service to rural areas.

Our first job will continue to be to help win the war in the Pacific, but as soon as conditions permit, the necessary manpower and equipment will again be put to work on the job of expanding rural service—just as we were busily engaged in expanding this service before the war.

The goal is to bring the telephone to the greatest possible number of farm families.

OUR GRATEFUL THANKS

To our customers for a most successful hatchery season, which has just closed. Your demands for our quality chicks were even greater than we were able to meet. You were most patient in waiting many times when orders had to be postponed for a month or more.

We have purchased two new Incubators for Fall installation. These, together with large flocks for egg production, will enable us to give you prompt and efficient service.

You may place your order now for chicks to be hatched in the next hatching season.

PROMOTED TO CAPTAIN

Mrs. D. H. Wilder, of Clanton, Alabama, Route One, recently received word of her son, D. H. Wilder's promotion from the rank of 1st Lieut. to that of Captain.

Capt. Wilder, who entered the Service November, 1941, is now in Frankfrut, Germany, with the Army of Occupations.

He graduated from Chilton County High School and was employed with the Humble Oil Company in Goose Creek, Texas, before entering the service.

His many friends here congratulate Capt. Wilder on his promotion and wish for him a speedy return to his loved ones in the states.

Elbert H. Hinson, holder of the Purple Heart, son of Mr. and Mrs. Percy Hinson of Maplesville, Ala., has been promoted from Private First Class to T-5.

Cpl. Hinson, wounded while at a forward position during the battle for the Villa Verde Trail in Northern Luzon's Carabello Mountains, is a communications Corporal in the telephone wire section of Headquarter Battery, Division Artillery, which is a part of the veterans 32nd "Red Arrow" Infantry Division.

S-Sgt. Ira F. Farmer, 20, son of Mr. and Mrs. John S. Farmer of Route 1, Clanton, Ala., has been assigned to the occupational air force in Europe as a member of the 2nd Bombardment Group, a veteran B-17 Flying Fortress unit with the 15th Air Force.

Sgt. Farmer has served 19 months as an aircraft mechanic overseas with the Air Force.

Where they are and How they are

Pfc. Claude L. Blackwell, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Blackwell of Route Three, Clanton, Ala., is en route home from the European Theatre of Operations, where he served with the "Bloody Bucket" Division, which in eight months saw vicious combat action from Normandy's Hedgerows to the heart of the Reich.

Blackwell holds the Good Conduct Medal, Purple Heart, Combat Infantry's Badge, the ETO Ribbon with 3 Battle Participation Stars (Ardeness Rhineland Campaign and Central Europe.

Raymond Edward Nelson, S 1-C, who is serving aboard a destroyer in the Atlantic Fleet, recently aided in the rescue at sea of a Naval Aviator, one of several which is unusual incidents in his months of patrol duty at sea.

Nelson's wife, the former Nina Hines, lives in Clanton, while his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Nelson, reside at their residence in Mt. Creek, Ala.

James P. Powell, Boatswain's Mate Second Class, USN, whose wife, Mrs. Lula Mae Powell, lives on Route One, Thorsby, Ala., has arrived at the world's largest Naval Receiving Station at Shoemaker, Calif., a unit of the U. S. Naval Training and Distribution Center, for reclassification and further assignment.

S-Sgt. Hilman E. Mims, whose parents, Mr. and Mrs. Virgil M. Mims, live on Route One, Clanton, has arrived at the Redistribution Station in Miami Beach, Fla., for reassignment processing after completing a tour of duty outside the continental United States, where he flew fourteen missions in the European Theatre as a gunner.

Pfc. Homer K. Gwathney, who just returned from some time in the European Theatre of Operations, is now spending a 30-day furlough here with his mother, Mrs. Mary Gwathney, before leaving for the South Pacific. He has to report to Atlanta, Ga., the sixth of next month.

M-Sgt. and Mrs. Morris Johnson and little daughter, Jennifer, from Little Rock, Ark., have been spending several days here with Sgt. Johnson's parents and in Birmingham with Mrs. Johnson's parents and other relatives and friends.

Mrs. Charles C. Jackson, of Billingsley, Ala., Route One, was made very happy last week, when she received a phone call from her husband, Pfc. Charles C. Jackson, whom she had not heard from in six weeks.

Pfc. Jackson is now in North Carolina and says he will be home to spend a furlough with his wife and son in about two weeks.

He has been in the Army since last August, going overseas in January of this year.

Mrs. W. P. Champion, who now resides in Tacoma, Wash., writes that she recently had an interesting letter from her husband, Pvt. Woodrow P. Champion, who is now stationed somewhere in Holland.

In this letter he stated that he wa in an ice cream parlor with another G.I. pal when another soldier walks over to his table and asks to share it with them. When he sat down he began reading a letter presumably from his home town or folks. The letter contained some pictures that he willingly let the boys see. Upon looking at the pictures Pvt. Champion recognized pictures or scenes of his own hometown, which happened to be Verbena, Ala.

All in all it turned out that this soldier was also a former friend of Pvt. Champion's. His name was Ward Fike. In the end it seems the two G.I.'s had quite a visit over the occasion.

1st Lt. and Mrs. Guy McKee visited their parents here a few days this week, en route from New Orleans to Dallas, Texas, where Lt. McKee will be stationed as an instructor.

Paul Holley S 2-C returned recently from sea duty where he spent two and one-half years. He is spending his 30-day leave here with relatives and friends.

CCC Payments Set For Sheep And Lamb Sellers

Program just announced authorizes CCC payments to all sellers of sheep and lamb who sell directly to legally authorized slaughterers: Sales on and after August 5 through June 30, 1946, will be covered.

Payments to be made by AAA county communities will be $1.50 to $2.50 per hundred weight for lambs weighing 65 to 90 pounds, $2.15 to 3.15 for lambs over 90 pounds and $1.00 for all other sheep and lambs. August rates will be $1.50 for 65 to 90 pound lambs, $2.15 for lambs over 90 pounds and $1.00 for all other sheep and lambs. Sellers are advised to retain invoices and receipts of sales.

Alabama farmers had a million less laying hens on June 1 this year than they had the same date last year. Figures show that last year they had 6,244,000 laying hens compared with 5,148,000 June this year. During the first six months of the year they had laid 402,000,000 eggs compared with 464,000,000 during the first six months of last year.

Allied Pressure Grows on Japs; Rip Lag in Reconversion Program; Move 800,000 G.I.s from Europe

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Air force chieftains in Europe, Lt. Gen. James Doolittle (left), and Lt. Gen. Nathan F. Twining (right), discuss new assignments in Pacific with Deputy Commander Lt. Gen. Barney M. Giles (center), on Guam.

PACIFIC:

Talk Back

Premier Suzuki's declaration that the Allied surrender ultimatum would in no way affect the government's fundamental policy to prosecute the war was met by a continuing hail of U. S. and British fire on the enemy homeland and shipping.

While the harassed Nipponese did not burn all of their bridges behind them and still hoped for a modification of Allied terms, U. S. and British policy called for a continuance of the heavy pressure to bend the enemy will in the face of mounting destruction to cities, transport and industry.

Though the Jap leadership maintained a resolute front, there were rumblings within the country, the influential newspaper Asahi calling upon the government to give priority protection to enemy cities; concentrate on the production of more important munitions, and prepare for construction of wooden planes now that parts of the islands have been isolated from metal supplies from the Asiatic mainland and the southern regions of Japan itself.

The plea for priority protection of enemy cities followed the AAF's promised assault on 6 of the 11 secondary industrial centers marked for extinction.

With enemy plane and anti-aircraft opposition remaining slight, 600 Superforts fired Tsu, Aomori, Ichinomiya, Ujiyamada and Ogaki on Honshu and Uwajima on Shikoku, with the B-29s flying to the northern section of the islands refueling at bitterly won Iwo Jima.

> Despite Clement Atlee's displacement of Winston Churchill as Great Britain's ranking representative, and Premier Stalin's sickness, the Big Three meeting hurried to a finale in Potsdam, with substantial agreement reported on Germany's fate, Poland's eastern border, control of the vital Dardanelles straits leading to the Black sea, and the Pacific war.

At the same time, U. S. and British carrier planes and General MacArthur's Far Eastern air force continued to rake the enemy homeland, with the carrier planes concentrating on Japanese airfields and the FEAF ripping Nipponese shipping. As a result of Allied control of the far eastern sea lanes, it was reported that the enemy was seeking to maintain connections with the Asiatic mainland by land routes to Korea and the short water jump to Japan itself.

RECONVERSION:

Hit Lag

Replying to charges of the senate war investigating committee that the government's reconversion program was lagging and it was necessary to revitalize it if serious dislocations are to be avoided, a former War Production board official charged that the services had slowed up the switch to civilian output by materials control and excessive buying.

Recently resigned as a chieftain in the civilian requirements branch of the WPB, Lester P. Doidge asserted that while the services' insistence on curbing wider use of material and manpower was justified in some instances to protect munitions output, it was unwarranted in others. "With aluminum as free as air for the last six, seven or eight months," he said, "some firms had to lay off men because of inability to get that metal."

As an instance of the services' excessive buying, Doidge said, the army has been claiming large allotments of refrigerators each quarter from restricted production despite its comfortable stockpiles. Whereas the WPB felt 4½ million freezers were needed each year, the present production rate is only 1,000,000.

In ripping the reconversion lag, the senate committee headed by Chairman Mead (Dem., N. Y.) declared that it has fallen so far behind that a sudden end to the Japanese war would find the U. S. in a serious economic situation. As corrective measures, the committee recommended:

Productive capacity not needed for the war be immediately converted to civilian goods; key industrial men be released from the services to aid the switch-over; wider disposal of surplus material to help reconversion and prevent post-war market gluts; and dissemination of information to workers and employers alike about the national labor situation.

REDEPLOYMENT:

Moves Fast

With 800,000 men scheduled for redeployment from Europe to the Pacific theater by the end of July, an additional 1,000,000 men will be shifted during the last half of 1945, leaving 900,000 vets to be cleared during the first four months of next year, the army revealed.

Up to mid-July, over 635,000 G.I.s had embarked from Europe, it was revealed, with 532,258 arriving in the U. S. by that time, with 407,978 traveling by boat and 124,280 by plane. Others were routed directly to the Pacific.

At the same time, more than 1,226,000 tons of war material have been shipped from Europe and the Near East since V-E Day, with approximately 300,000 tons sent directly to the Pacific.

As a result of the speedy redeployment program, troop rail traffic jumped from 504,000 men moved in groups of 40 or more in April to an estimated 1,250,000 in July. Some vets shifted from Europe through the U. S. already have completed furloughs and been sent out from the West coast to the Pacific.

VETS:

Job Rights

The question of postwar job rights for G.I.s has come to the fore with the efforts of World War II vets to get the United Automobile Workers CIO union to modify its policy relating to the subject by counting war service as a seniority credit in applying for employment and having one in every four positions go to a fighing man who has not worked before.

Under the UAW-CIO so-called "model clause," vets employed by a company prior to induction would be entitled to count up their war service as seniority, but vets not previously employed would be permitted to include war service as seniority only after they had obtained a job.

With the United Veterans of World War II spearheading the attack, it has been charged that the UAW-CIO policy amounts to a virtual lock-out of the previously unemployed vets, since a company must first give consideration to workers who have gained seniority rights through the course of World War II. The UAW-CIO, on the other hand, states that the policy protects workers who might otherwise be displaced.

CONSERVATION TEST

Waterfowl restoration efforts of Ducks Unlimited face their greatest test in 1945, officials of the organization declare. An area of about 170,000 square miles in south - central and southern Saskatchewan and Alberta is reported drouth-stricken, with small water areas completely dried up. Breeding waterfowl in this area are crowding the waters stored by Ducks Unlimited and the Prairie Farms Rehabilitation administration.

RAIL PROFITS:

Railroad profits in May for the third consecutive month were larger than a year ago and the total gain in this three-month period was more than sufficient to offset the drop which occurred in January and February, according to the Alexander Hamilton institute. As a result, profits during the first five months totaled $264,000,000 this year as compared with $258,000,000 last year. This increase interrupted the downward trend of the past two years it was said.

FRANCE:

"Evil Genius" Reappears

With Marshal Petain fighting for his life in the historic treason trial in Paris, defense attorneys moved to bring dusky Pierre Laval before the court as a witness for the former Vichy chief of state.

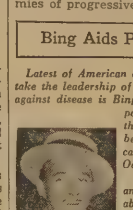
The move was taken as French authorities flew Laval back to Paris following his surrender to U. S. military forces in Austria after a flight from Spain. To stand trial himself for treason, Laval has been charged with the principal responsibility for close collaboration with the Germans, being called Petain's "evil genius."

Meanwhile, with over 1,000,000 words already written into the record, Petain's trial continued apace, with Gen. Maxime Weygand, head of the Allied armies at the time of the French defeat in 1940, assuming the responsibility for cessation of hostilities, in asking for a negotiated armistice rather than total surrender as advocated by Premier Reynaud, he said, he took into account France's inability to maintain organized resistance.

Declaring Petain's government consistently refused to give the Nazis bases, ports and territories in North Africa, Weygand disclosed that he and U. S. Diplomat Robert Murphy had signed an agreement for delivery of American supplies to North Africa on condition the Germans be kept from the French possessions.

RED REVIVAL:

In U. S.



Having been dissolved in May, 1944, as a gesture of unity, the Communist party was re-established in the U. S. at a special convention in New York, with William Z. Foster replacing Earl Browder as leader.

Ripped for having soft-pedalled the historic class struggle of the Communists, Browder held his ground, declaring that there were joint policies which could be accepted by employers and workers alike regardless of their motives in the face of Big Business' progressive search for expanding markets.

The convention also marked the Communists' break with the "Roosevelt-Labor-Democratic" coalition, the Reds charging the Truman administration with veering toward the less liberal elements in the Democratic party and even trying to conciliate the reactionary enemies of progressiveness.

Bing Aids Polio Drive

Latest of American celebrities to undertake the leadership of a nation-wide drive against disease is Bing Crosby, newly appointed chairman of the $5,000,000 Elizabeth Kenny Institute campaign to begin in October.

Bing Crosby

Crooner, comedian and producer, but above all father of four children, Crosby's decision to lead the drive to raise funds for promoting the new system of infantile paralysis treatment was prompted by a tour of hospitals, where he saw withered little victims of polio. "No little child on earth should be asked to suffer pain, humiliating deformities and complications unnecessarily," he said.

Tentative plans call for both movie and radio appeals for funds by Bing, and close state-wide organization of collections. States will retain half of the proceeds for establishing local clinics and combatting communal epidemics, with the remainder remitted to national headquarters for new facilities at the Elizabeth Kenny Institute at Minneapolis, Minn., and increased patient capacity.

PROBE CRASH:

With 13 dead, 24 injured and property damage estimated at $500,000, the army undertook an investigation of the crash of an 8-ton Billy Mitchell B-25 bomber into the 78th and 79th floor levels of the Empire State building in New York, tallest structure in the world.

Piloted by Lt. Col. W. F. Smith, 27, of Watertown, Mass., the B-25, with its three occupants, smashed plumb into the north side of the building in the foggy atmosphere after the officer had determined to make the run to Newark, N. J., despite advice to land in New York because of the murky weather prevailing in the area.

Before crashing into the building where office employees were busy at work at the time, and either killed by the hurtling plane or burned to death by the fires touched off by gasoline, the B-25 was seen roaring through sky-scrapered Manhattan at a 38-story level. Completed in 1931 and valued at $52,000,000, the Empire State building's vaulted tower stands about a quarter of a mile above the street.

FARM LAND:

Farm real estate values continued to rise during the four months ended July 1, 1945, with an increase for the country as a whole of about 3 per cent for a total of 57 per cent above the 1935-39 average and less than one-fourth below the 1920.

The volume of voluntary sales decreased 8 per cent during the year ended March, 1945, after having increased for six consecutive years, reaching a peak almost 15 per cent above that for the "boom" year 1919.

Domestic Problems to Test Truman's Mettle

Harmonious Relations on Foreign Policy Soon To Give Way to Contention Over Difficulties of Reconversion.

By BAUKHAGE

News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

The political armistice in Washington will end shortly after the President's return from Berlin. The Big Three meeting followed so closely on the heels of the San Francisco conference that foreign affairs have dominated the scene almost to the exclusion of domestic matters, which sooner or later must test the mettle of the new administration.

Another reason, perhaps, why President Truman's honeymoon has been extended is the fact that the main issue before the country, the United Nations charter, has been robbed of its partisan flavor. This is largely due to the long and arduous efforts of former Secretary of State Hull. He built up a working understanding on foreign affairs between the administration and the congress, which resulted in the only a former senator, but a former Supreme court justice. Byrnes provides an understanding link with the judicial branch as well as with the legislative. The secretary of the treasury, Fred Vinson, is a former member of congress as well as an ex-judge. Secretary of Agriculture Anderson is not only a former member of congress, but was head of the house food committee, which directed some of the most serious criticism against the former administration's handling of the food situation. This committee is now working closely with the new cabinet member.

While Secretary of Commerce Wallace does not bring to his department the close associations of the men over whom he presided as president of the senate, the scope and function of his office has been considerably reduced by the reorganization of the department and so is not a source of friction. In his secretary of labor, President Truman has a man who was exceedingly popular in the senate—another judge—Lewis Schwellenbach.

whole-hearted co-operation of most of the leaders of both parties, sturdily supported by public opinion.

Secretary Hull was able to achieve this harmony because of the confidence in which his former colleagues held him and also because of his experience as a member of the legislative branch of the government. Roosevelt could never have been as successful in this endeavor and, because he realized that fully, he left the matter largely in Hull's hands.

Chief Still One of the Boys

In the first place, President Truman stepped directly from the upper house to the vice presidency, and ever since he left the legislative branch for the executive, he has been acting as liaison between the two.

Shortly before President Roosevelt's death I had occasion to interview the then vice president. I talked about the forthcoming San Francisco conference with him (as well as the field artillery, of which we are both alumni). He indicated that he was holding aloof from any public participation in the discussions of international affairs but was attempting to carry on and to complement the work of Secretary Hull in promoting a sympathetic discussion of the Dumbarton Oaks agreement with members of the senate foreign relations committee, the house committee on foreign affairs and others.

One of his first unorthodox acts was to take lunch with some of his old colleagues at the Capitol. This was almost as if the king of England were to attempt to enter the City of London without first having a formal parley with the lord mayor. But it was a perfectly natural act on Truman's part—like his spontaneous remark to the effect that there was a certain Chinese restaurant where he would like to eat while he was on the West coast. On second thought he realized that, as President, he couldn't do such a thing and admitted it with a smile.

The President's informal visits to the Capitol haven't hurt him. Nor his formal ones. After his last appearance, when he delivered the charter, he lingered so long in the senate chamber, shaking hands and patting backs, that an aide had to hint gently that he wasn't a senator any more and must hurry back to his work.

His cabinet appointments are highly significant. Truman's secretary of state, James Byrnes, is not

Secretary Hull was able to achieve this harmony because of the confidence in which his former colleagues held him and also because of his experience as a member of the legislative branch of the government. Roosevelt could never have been as successful in this endeavor and, because he realized that fully, he left the matter largely in Hull's hands.

Fear Influence Of Party Bosses

Of course, when it comes to questions like the poll-tax and the fair employment practices act or any other measure in which the race question is involved, the old friction arises with the southern congressmen and any Republicans they can attract to their cause. Also, while there are those who say that the President is steering a course much farther to the right than President Roosevelt did, he nevertheless is committed to a number of the so-called New Deal "reforms," both because of his record in the senate and because of his natural leanings. However, since Truman is known to be a strong party man, it will be easier for him to keep the southern Democrats in line.

Of course, some of the radical New Dealers are doing a lot of eyebrow raising behind the bushes and a remark (perhaps written with tongue in cheek) which appeared in the Wall Street Journal sent shivers down some spines. That newspaper, which hardly depends on Democratic support for its circulation, said recently: "Not since the short-lived administration of Warren Harding has there been the prospect of teamwork as exists today."

If the results of the Berlin meeting are such that they reveal a marked improvement in Big Three relations and a harmonious settlement of some of the difficult international problems, the President's prestige will be greatly increased. However, by that time domestic discontent will be crystallizing, the honeymoon will be on the wane and the President will need all the "teamwork" he can muster.

If the Japanese war should, by any chance, end suddenly—before another year—it would mean that reconversion, threats of inflation and unemployment and a hundred other problems will be upon us and President Truman will be stripped of his protective authority as Commander-in-Chief. Then the slings and arrows which even Roosevelt's enemies were wont to deflect to congress and other government agencies will be aimed squarely at the man in the White House. Peace will not be too peaceful at 3200 Pennsylvania avenue.

Under the able direction of Harold McGrath, superintendent of the senate radio gallery in Washington, radio men were taken care of to the queen's taste. The big chains built excellent temporary studios at conference headquarters and all the separate stations were well taken care of, too. Hundreds of recordings were made and shipped out by airmail.

Field offices of the Federal Housing administration are now accepting from private lending institutions applications for the insurance of principal loans supplemented by loans under Section 505 of the G.I. bill. The veterans' administration guarantees an equity on such loans not to exceed $2,000 where the principal loan, which must comply with FHA regulations, is insured by FHA.

The crack was occasioned by the fact that out of eight pictures Walker has made, six have had him in uniforms of the armed forces. In real life he was turned down because of defective eyesight. Increased Crime Is Predicted by Criminologists

War Experiences Will Lead To Growth in Delinquency, Experts Say.

BOSTON. — The shocking wartime experiences of soldiers and civilians will increase postwar delinquency and crime, Prof. Sheldon Glueck and Dr. Eleanor T. Glueck, Harvard law school criminologists, have predicted.

The husband and wife, who have been making comprehensive studies of the lives of hundreds of criminals since 1925, said that entirely new types of correctional techniques and establishments, in which regimes of mental therapy will predominate, will be found necessary.

Certain modifications of existing research techniques will probably be called for, they said, "certainly planned and skilfully conducted follow-up studies should contribute a great deal of value."

Their latest report and recommendations were contained in "After Conduct of Discharged Offenders," a summary of all their conclusions, published for the department of criminal science of the faculty of law of the University of Cambridge.

See Need of Study.

"It is probable that many persons are now committing and will continue to commit all sorts of crimes who, in normal prewar times, would never be numbered among the delinquent and criminal classes," they said.

It is clear, therefore, that the follow-up studies to be made in postwar Europe will have to take into account some factors in the background and make-up of offenders not ordinarily included in such researches. It is probable that certain psychological factors will be found highly predictive of future behavior which in normal times are not so.

"Specific shocking war time experiences of soldiers such as the horrors of Dunkirk, of various campaigns, and of ship wreck, soul stirring experiences of civilians, such as mass evacuations from cherished homes," the Gluecks said, "are bound to result in an increase in postwar delinquency and criminality."

Tell of Specific Tests.

The criminologists said that one of their prediction tables dealing with the behavior of civilian delinquents in the armed forces had been validated by a study of 200 American soldiers now confined to an army rehabilitation center for military offenders.

The results of the research "indicated that we would have been able definitely to determine that 85 per cent of the men were such poor risks that they should not have been inducted." Another 10 per cent showed there was a 50-50 chance of committing military offenses and "in only 5 per cent of the cases would our prediction at the point of induction have been in error."

Flaming Youth Arouse City; Like Bit of War

PUEBLO, COLO.—Gunfire echoed along Main street. Spectators scrammed as pistol-packing girls shot at two men and threw their "bodies" into waiting automobiles, police raced about looking for the killers. Pueblo thought the gangster era was back.

But it was all a prank by three young men and two girls who staged fake shootings just for the thrill of it. Twice, when they had a good audience, one of the girls pulled a pistol and fired point-blank at one of the men. The victim would fall and his body would be thrown into a car and hurried away.

Police cars, ambulances and emergency cars from the Pueblo army base were kept on the run looking for the killers until police traced the car to a suburban tavern and arrested the quintet. Charges of disturbing the peace were filed.

Boys Return When Tired, 300 People Hunt Them

HEBER SPRINGS, ARK.—Three small boys straggled in from a river camping trip near Heber Springs, Ark., to find that 300 men and women had spent nearly 24 hours looking for them. They had caused banks and business houses to close, and the sheriff's office to marshal Boy Scout troops and squads of high school students for the search. The three campers, Hugh Seifert, 10, his brother, Paul, 6, and Bobby Houston, 9, encountered one of the searching parties, explained they were tired out and homeward bound.

Army Will Release Docs As Early as Possible

WASHINGTON. — Secretary of War Stimson said that the army will release doctors with all possible speed consistent with military needs.

Senator Mitchell (Dem., Wash.) had written Stimson that what he saw on a recent trip to Europe indicated an oversupply of doctors in the European theater.

Stimson said the surgeon general has set up a special board to determine essentiality of doctors in his departmen›

Mayor Catches Hotel Cheater in the Act

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M.—From his city hall office, Mayor Clyde Tingley heard someone shout "Throw it!" And spied a man stuffing clothes into a bag in an alley behind a hotel.

Police, crediting the mayor with a quick assist, checked the departing lodger into new quarters—the city jail.

Knife Takes Jap Leaders to 'Glory'

Traditional Hari-Kiri Rites Strictly Observed.

OKINAWA. — The Jap army commander on Okinawa and his chief of staff ate a hearty banquet, dressed in their best uniforms and then killed themselves in traditional hara-kiri fashion, a prisoner said.

The bodies of Lt. Gen. Mitsuru Ushijima and his chief of staff, Lt. Gen. Isama Cho, were found in shallow graves, Col. Cecil W. Nisstaffer, Salem, Ore., said his identification of the corpses was "positive and unquestionable."

The only flaw in the ceremonial suicide rites was that the two did not face north. The ledge on which they knelt was too narrow for that.

Ushijima's cook said the two generals decided to kill themselves on June 21. He was ordered to prepare an elaborate dinner in their cave.

The generals ate quietly. At 11:30 the guard at the cave entrance was told by the general's aide that he was "no longer needed."

At three the next morning, the cook was getting breakfast when the general's orderly whispered that the general and his chief of staff were going to commit hara-kiri.

It was near four o'clock when the two generals left the cave. They were dressed in full field uniform, their boots gleaming with polish, their medals sparkling on their tunic fronts.

The two generals, talking in low tones, walked to a narrow ledge outside the mouth of the cave. Heavy comforters were spread on the ledge. Over each was put a white sheet to symbolize death.

Ushijima knelt on the sheet, with General Cho on his left. Both faced the ocean. Then the commander's aide brought two knives with half of each blade wrapped in white cloth. He handed one to each general.

The general's adjutant stood directly behind Ushijima, his saber drawn. Both generals had opened their uniforms to bare their abdomens.

Ushijima thrust his knife deep inside himself and at the same instant the adjutant slashed him across the back of the neck with the saber to cut his spinal cord. A moment later General Cho died the same way.

Family Fails Her, Robin Deserts Treeling Nest

CHICAGO. — A robin which, with no privacy whatsoever, tried to raise a family on a railroad coach which didn't stay put, apparently has flown away from her traveling nest.

A short time ago a nest appeared on an air brake cylinder beneath a coach of North Western train 645. Two weeks later an egg appeared in the nest and the next day there was another egg and a mother robin sitting on both.

But mother robin's expectant family didn't get her full time attention. Each morning when the train left on the 72-mile trip to Chicago, the robin left the nest. Each night when the train returned the robin was waiting to return to the nest.

The routine ended when no robin appeared. Dr. Albert Wolfson, associate professor in the zoology department of Northwestern university, had an explanation. He said the normal incubation period for robin's eggs is from 10 to 12 days and if eggs do not hatch in that time the mother robin abandons both nest and eggs.

Boy Takes Live Grenade Into Picture Theater

ATLANTA, GA.—A youthful patron of an Atlanta theater was discovered recently nonchalantly viewing a western thriller — and at the same time toying with a hand grenade.

Theater officials called in the police, who in turn summoned military authorities.

The boy said he had been given the grenade by a paratrooper, who told him it was "dead." Far from being "dead," military authorities reported the grenade was one of the most deadly now in use—powerful enough to kill 75 or 100 persons.

Why Her Sewing Machine Didn't Work, Just a Snake

ST. HELENA, KY.—When Mrs. Zilla Lovelace discovered why her sewing machine didn't work with its customary efficiency, it scared her to screams.

Inside the machine, with its tail entangled in the shuttle, was a six-foot cowsnake wriggling to free itself.

Attracted by Mrs. Lovelace's screams L. & N. Railroad Operator Jim Griffin rushed to the house armed with a .22 caliber rifle and a goose necked hoe and aided by his dog. Total casualties: one snake.

ISAAC'S TESTIMONY TO GOD

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 26:19-33.
GOLDEN TEXT—Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things.—Psalm 72:18.

A man of peace in a wartorn world may seem to be a bit out of place, but he assuredly is not if the peace he has and promotes is the peace of God.

Our world has seen anew a demonstration of the awful results of the philosophy that might makes right. Violence and bloodshed have been man's way of asserting his supposed or assumed rights. One could hope that we are now ready to recognize that we need a new viewpoint, that patience and meekness are not weakness, that kindness and love are Christian virtues worth emulating and cultivating.

That result can come only if men will recognize Christ as the King of their lives and nations will receive His Word as their law. Let us proclaim His truth and the gospel of His grace anew, and win all we can to Him.

Isaac was a man of peace. He was a rather ordinary man, one of the common people, but his life is both interesting and instructive. He had come through varied experiences of victory and defeat before the time of our lesson. Fearing a famine, and apparently not trusting God at the moment, he had gone down from the promised land to the country of the Philistines, there redigging the wells which his father Abraham had dug. The result was that he prospered. Ere long, however, envy on the part of his enemies taught Isaac that one may expect

I. Strife in the World (vv. 19-21).

Isaac had prospered, but he was still out of the promised land, and while he was in the land of Philistines he could expect no permanent peace.

We are in the world. We long for peace, and would throw all our influence and service into the cause of bringing a righteous peace to the troubled peoples of the world. But let us not be misled by that desire into the support of unscriptural and impossible peace programs. This world is a sinful world, and as long as that is true, there will be strife and war.

Our business in such a world is to preach the gospel of grace, winning men to Christ, that they may become men of good will. Isaac was such a man, willing to yield even what seemed to be his right, rather than cause contention.

Undoubtedly there are times when one must defend his name and his possessions, but all too often those who do "stand for their rights" have wrecked homes, churches, and nations, and have gained nothing but an empty victory.

The peace of this world is temporary. Is there then no real abiding peace and joy?

II. Joy in God's Fellowship (vv. 22-25).

When Isaac came up into Canaan, the land which God had promised to him, he found real peace and an abiding joy in renewed fellowship with God. Even so, the Christian man and woman who will step out of a spiritually destructive fellowship with the ungodly world and come over wholeheartedly into the spiritual Canaan of full consecration and separate living, will find true peace and satisfying communion with God.

III. Testimony in Right Living (vv. 26-31).

These men were wicked men, even speaking falsehood in their claim of friendship toward Isaac (v. 29). Now that they perceived that God was continually blessing Isaac in spite of their repeated injustice toward him, they decided it would be well to make a covenant of friendship with him. Even those who follow the way of war and aggression cannot deny the effectiveness of true Christian testimony.

Observe also that by his patience and kindness, Isaac ultimately made friends out of his enemies. "It is better to turn enemies into friends than to beat them, and have them enemies still." And so this man with the patient, self-sacrificing spirit brought peace not only to himself, but to those about him, because he believed and trusted God. "When a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him" (Prov. 16:7).

IV. Blessing in Service (vv. 32, 33).

The thing to do when the selfishness of others is about to cause strife is to go and "dig another well." If we will do that, we will find that God has been there ahead of us and prepared a rich flow of fresh water with which we may refresh and encourage ourselves.

Isaac's men said, "We have found water," and he then named the place Beersheba, which means "the well of the oath," referring undoubtedly to God's fulfilled promise to bless him. He had found the way of peace, fellowship and blessing, because he had gone God's way.

THERE'S no business institution more thoroughly American than the General Store.

Yet, do you realize that America is not even self-sufficient enough to keep that General Store running efficiently and prosperously?

For instance, its delivery truck was made in America; but 300 products, from 56 countries, went into its making. The telephone over which the orders come is American-made. But 18 of the telephone's important materials came from outside the country.

The coffee, the tea, the sugar, the tin in the cans, the cocoa and chocolate . . . these and many more of the things the store buys and sells came from overseas. Take them away and business languishes, becomes more difficult to operate. Take them away, and the community's standard of living declines, life itself becomes less pleasant.

No country can build a fence and hide behind it these days. For lasting prosperity, as well as for durable peace, we must cooperate with the rest of the world. Truly, planes, radio, rockets, have made of this shrunken earth, one world.

Cooperation means getting along even with peoples whose beliefs do not jibe with ours. It means contributing our share toward world order. It means making the effort necessary to understanding. It means every citizen must accept the responsibility of making international cooperation work.

You can do these things:

First, get and keep yourself informed about the specific proposals for peace and international cooperation which are now before us.

Second, interest your friends in these questions. Get them discussed in groups to which you belong.

Third, write what you think to your Congressman and Senators, to your newspaper. Declare yourself.

LEAD AND SILVER

Discovery of gold attracted the Nation's attention to Idaho in 1860 but the surrounding "worthless rock" that gold hunters spurned 25 years later became the foundation of an enterprise that brought the state into first place in the production of lead and silver. Elimination of waste, big-scale operations and new scientific processes of milling, smelting and refining have enabled the industry to provide livelihood for 50,000 people. It has added to the Nation's wealth that will be enjoyed by holders of War Bonds.

INDIANA'S MINERALS

Indiana might not be expected to add mineral assets to the Government resources that will stand behind the War Bonds we buy yet that state produces $107,000,000 worth of coal, clay products, lime, peat and petroleum each year. Vast supplies of rock wool to insulate buildings will be made from the maristone still imbedded under the limestone in Lawrence county. Thousands of employes probably will be added by these industries when the war ends and output will soar to assure income to Indiana and the Nation whose shareholders are the buyers of War Bonds. *U. CHEESE

American cheese will add to the Nation's post-war prosperity that War Bond buyers will share. Expansion of the business is predicted. Almost half the Nation's cheese is Wisconsin-made. In 1942 the state turned out 513,399,000 pounds, most of it American cheese. Swiss, Munster and Italian cheese are made in impressive quantities. This department of the dairy business helps build our national income and helps make War Bonds the best investment in the world.

POST-WAR FLYING IN YOUR HOME TOWN

By C. C. CAMPBELL, Member, Aviation Writers Association, Washington, D. C.

Post-War Flying Previewed

More than five million people, including folks from practically every town and community in the country, have become "inoculated" with the idea of flying. These in turn will probably influence thousands of others within a few years.

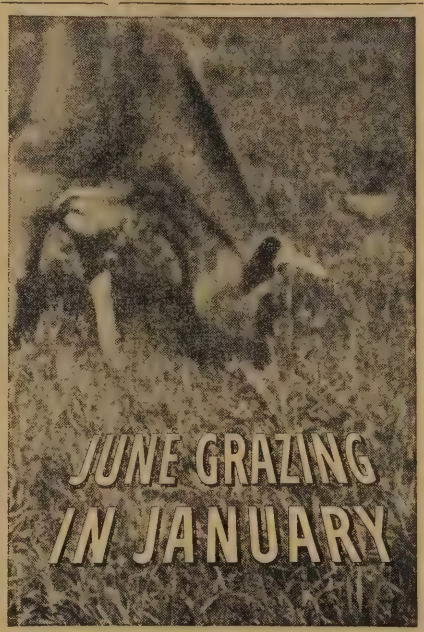
Wm. A. Burden

"There is little time to lose. American communities must get ready and plan now for this coming nationwide interest in personal flying."

Thus warns William A. M. Burden, Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Air. To indicate that the five million estimate of flying enthusiasts may be conservative, Mr. Burden offers the following figures:

More than 300,000 pilots in uniform and 150,000 others in civilian life will want to continue to fly. Then there are two and a half million men trained by the armed forces in other aviation skills; two million more —men and women—who are working in the aviation industry; 250,000 youngsters who are taking aerial courses in high schools each year.

While there are only approximately 25,000 civilian aircraft in the United States today, he predicts that there will be 400,000 civil airplanes in this country within ten years after the end of the war.



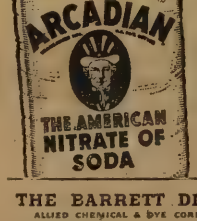
The national significance of this cannot be overlooked, but the real success of personal flying in the active peacetime world of tomorrow will depend directly upon each of our 16,752 communities, aviation authorities point out.

Just as the automobile could not become generally useful to every American who wanted to own, or drive one until good roads were built, so personal flying will be grounded until suitable landing facilities are available everywhere. Planes in the air can land in safety only on level, prepared surfaces. Planes on the ground need smooth runways and space to "take-off."

However, these facilities need not be extensive or costly, many communities are now finding out. With the advice of both Federal and State aviation groups, as well as non-government aviation organizations such as the Personal Aircraft Council of the Aircraft Industries Association of America, Inc., Washington, D. C., plans are under way in many sections of the country for the construction of inexpensive airparks, flight-stops and air harbors. These are fitted to the size and needs of the individual community and usually can be expanded later if conditions warrant.

What seems to be more to the point, many town officials expect that their proposed landing facilities will become income producers and perhaps pay off the costs of construction and operation in time. They feel that the development of community personal flying may prove to be good business in more ways than one.

This is the first of a series of articles on post-war flying and its effect on community life. The next article, "Freedom of Personal Flight," will appear in an early issue.



AUBURN RECOMMENDS planting 1 to 2 acres of oats and vetch or oats alone, per cow, about September 1st.

On many farms, it is easier and more profitable to have good grazing in January than it is to have good grazing in June.

In winter, the demand for milk is greater than production. Good fall and winter grazing will help your dairy herd produce more high-grade milk at lower cost.

JAPAN SURRENDERS

San Francisco Hit Hardest So Far In War-End Celebrations

Twenty-eight persons were injured Tuesday in San Francisco in celebrating the end of the war with Japan. That, according to latest reports, is the worst damage suffered by any city in the United States to date.

Jap Surrender Does Not Mean Boys To Start Home Now

The surrender of Japan does not mean that the boys will get a booking home immediately. Acording to latest radio reports it will be anywhere between six and eighteen months before they will get to start homeward.

Asked for an interpretation of the Selective Service Act in this regard, legal authorities said, "This will come upon the conclusion of a peace treaty, upon a presidential proclamation ending the war, or by a joint peace resolution of Congress.

CLANTON WOMAN WILL RECEIVE THE BACHELOR OF ARTS DEGREE

Mrs. Gertrude Popwell Calloway will receive the Bachelor of Arts Degree at Alabama College on Monday, August 20, at the Summer Commencement Exercises in Palmer Auditorium at 8:00 p.m.

After the Commencement Exercises the graduates will be honored with a reception in Reynolds Hall.

EXCLUSIVE DRESS SHOP OPENING IN CLANTON

A ladies ready-to-wear dress shop will open this month in the old location of the Exchange Barber Shop, across from Fullen's Cafe. Mrs. B. E. (Mattie) Wilkins and Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Fullen have just returned from an extensive shopping tour of the style centers of the South and Southwest, where they purchased a complete line of ready-to-wear. They state that stocks were low and some items were scarce, but that by traveling many hundreds of miles they were able to obtain a good stock for their initial opening.

Mrs. Wilkins has appointed special purchasing agents in these centers so a to enable ladies in this vicinity to receive the latest styles, colors and fabrics shortly after they are released from the manufacturers. She expects to carry a line of moderately priced dresses that will fit the school girl to grandma.

Mrs. Willie Bean enjoyed a short visit from her niece, Miss Charlotte Gibson, who is in the Waves and her nephew, Weldon Gibon, and her sisters, Mrs. Tom Cost of Jemison, and Mrs. Proctor Nix from Birmingham last week.

Miss Ruth Atchison from Birmingham has been visiting Miss Marilyn Bean recently.

Will Ask Halt On Drafting More Men

Senator Langer of North Dakota announced yesterday that as soon as Congress reconvenes next month he will introduce legislation to put an immediate halt to the drafting of men.

The measure will provide that those already inducted who have not already been sent abroad shal be returned to their homes and that those on furlough not be sent back overseas.

MONEY SAYS HE'S DEFINITELY IN

JAMES E. FOLSOM

Reports, frequently heard over the state lately, that Cullman's James E. Folsom might drop out of the governor's race drew an emphatic denial from the Folsom camp this week.

Vociferated Birmingham's Joe Money (head of the Joe Money Machinery Company): " 'Big Jim' is positively going to run for governor, and in my opinion he will be elected. He is definitely not considering any other public office."

Money ought to know all about Folsom's political plans. He has long been one of the elongated upstarter's principal backers, probably comes nearer to being his No. 1 adviser than any man in Alabama.—Alabama Magazine.

THOMAS V. COKER

Thoma V. Coker, age 29, of Clanton, died Sunday morning from wounds in a car wreck. He died about 5:00 a.m. on the way to a Birmingham hospital in Spigener's Ambulance. Funeral services were held Monday at 3:30 p. m., from Poplar Springs Church, conducted by Rev. Bennett of Montgomery; interment in church cemetery.

He is survived by his father, Arthur Coker, of Clanton Route 3; four brothers—Napoleon of Clanton Route 4, Jack, Route 3, Roy, Route 4, Jeff of the U. S. Army; one sister, Mrs. Vivian Edwards, Clanton.

Pallbearers: Eugene Hughes, Russell Tatum, Sam Edwards, Floyd Ellison and Carl Snider.

CHILTON COUNTY CANNING PLANT

The community canning plant is one of the vital places of Clanton during the Summer months. Food preservation on a large scale in less time with less work is one of the favorable features of the plant.

During the month of August around 78 families took advantage of the canning plant, canning around 4,000 cans fruit, meats and vegetables.

The plant is open on Tuesdays and Thursdays of each week.—Plant Supervisors.

ACCEPTS POTSDAM DECLARATION

Reply Comes Tuesday Afternoon At Six O'clock President Truman Makes Statement

CLANTON AND CHILTON COUNTY BLOWS LID OFF IN WILDEST CELEBRATION IN HISTORY

A celebration that started shortly after six o'clock Tuesday afternoon and lasted most of the night marked the news received here of the surrender of Japan to the Allies. Everything from a punkin stem to a silver bugle was used to add to the noise and the gayety of the occasion. The streets were lined by hundreds and the automobile horns blew incessently throughout the night. Pent-up emotions that had been controlled throughout the long years of war were unleased and everyone seemed to "blow-off steam."

In comparison with the importance of the occasion conduct was mighty good and except for a bit of thoughtlessness here and there everyone conducted themselves nicely. There was no rowdyism shown in the excitement of the crowds and the citizenry of Chilton County are to be commended on their actions on Tuesday night when word was received that Japan had surrendered unconditionally.

Here is a report of the news as it was received via radio Tuesday afternoon at six o'clock:

Radio Announcer: "I am reporting as directly as I can from the White House" was interrupted by the voice of President Truman.

I have received this afternoon in reply to the message forwarded to the Japanese Government by Secretary of State on August 11th and I deem this reply a full acceptance of the Potsdam declaration which presages the unconditional surrender of Japan. In the reply there is no qualification. Gen. Douglas MacArthur has been appointed the Supreme Allied Commander to receive the Japanese surrender. Meantime the Allied forces have been ordered to suspend offensive actions. Arrangements have now been made for the surrender terms at the earliest possible moment. Proclamation of V-J Day must await formal signing by Japan. It has accepted our terms of the Potsdam ultimatum. The communication of Japanese came on August 14th, 1945, addressed to the Governments of United States, Great Britain, the Soviet Union and China. This is a full surrender from the Japanese without reservation, with reference to the Japan Government's note of August 11 regarding their considerations of the provisions of the Potsdam declaration and reply of the Government of the United States, Great Britain, Soviet Union and China sent by American Secretary of State Byrnes under date of August 11, the Japanese Government has the honor to communicate to the Governments of the four powers as follows:

"His Majesty, the Emporer, has issued an imperial rescript regarding Japanese acceptance of the provisions of the Potsdam declaration.

"His Majesty, the Emporer, has prepared to authorize and insure the signature by his government and the Imperial headquarters of the necessary terms for carrying out the provisions of the Potsdam declaration.

"His Majesty is also prepared to issue his commands to all the military and navy authorities of Japan and all the forces under their control, wherever located, to cease active operations, to surrender arms and to issue such other orders as may be required by the Supreme Commander of the Allied Forces, that is, Douglas MacArthur, for the executive of the above mentioned terms."

President Truman:

One of the hardest working group of war workers during the past four years and perhaps the least appreciated by the public have been the Federal Employees in Washington and throughout the country. They have carried on the day to day operations by the government which were vital to our fighting men and of the carrying on of the war and in behalf of the nation I formally express thanks to them. As a token of this feeling I hereby ask all the heads of departments to excuse the employees for tomorrow and Thursday. This action is to be without charge against the annual leave of the employees. Only a skeleton force need be retained. All employees will enjoy this well-deserved but inadequate holiday.

Don't Destroy Your Ration Books

Persons were warned yesterday by District Director Irby A. Jones, not to destroy ration books, either food or gasoline, while celebrating V-J Day.

These books will be needed until rationing agencies make sufficient supplies of rationed commodities available, and there has been a delay of 60 days in the issuance of replacement books with the local War Price and Rationing Board having the right to refuse to replace a book where the Board Members believe that it was destroyed.

"We are convinced," Mr. Jones said, "That rationing will be stopped just as soon as supplies are available, but with the present drastic shortage of sugar, people should remember that next sugar stamp is in No. 4 Ration Book."

Bus Drivers To Rest V-J Day

The Bus Drivers at the Cain Lines look like they will take a Holiday on V-J Day. In some of the larger cities the drivers will not be called on that day.

THE DOBBS' REUNION

On Sunday, August 12, the annual Dobbs Reunion was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Dan Williams. This reunion is held each year in memory of the Rev. and Mrs. N. A. Dobbs and honoring their three living children. They are Mrs. Sarah Wyatt 92 years old, Mrs. Emma Culp 82 and Mr. Bud Dobbs 77.

The morning was spent talking and laughing and greeting each relative. At noon a bountiful dinner was spread under a large pecan tree. Everyone enjoyed the many delicious eats.

In the afternoon more visitors came and the evening was enjoyed with much laughter and talk of the good old days.

In all there were around forty-seven relatives present. They were:

Mrs. Sarah Wyatt, Mrs. Emma Culp, Mr. Bud Dobbs, Mr. and Mrs. Tommie Dobbs and daughter, Mr. Willie Dobbs, Mr. and Mrs. Alpha Dobbs and son, Mr. and Mrs. Reedie Dobb and family, Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Dobs and family, Mr. and Mrs. Fate Driver and son, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Mims, Mrs. Lee Arthur Murr and children, Mrs. Oscar Baker and son, Mrs. Myrtle Hudson and children, Mrs. Josie Fulmer, Mr. Leon Fulmer, Mrs. Tommie Easterling and children, Mr. and Mrs. Dan Williams, Mrs. Audrey Mullins, Mr. and Mrs. McKinley Johnson and children, Mr. and Mrs. Willie Hamilton and daughter.

The visitors for the day were: Rev. and Mrs. E. C. Hand, Miss Myrtis Cowart, Miss Willie Jean Gray, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Culp.

The day was enjoyed by all and as each one departed there was a prayer in his heart that all the sons, brothers and husbands may be back next year to join with us.

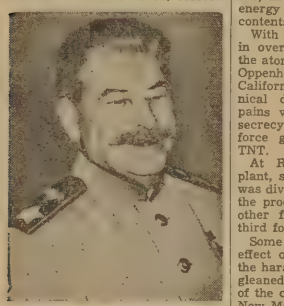
Double-Barrel Action:

Russia's Declaration of War And Atomic Bomb Combine To Stagger Collapsing Japs

Coming on top of the American introduction of the earth-shaking atomic-bomb, Russia's declaration of war on Japan raised high hopes for an early finish to the Pacific conflict, raging in bloody island-to-island fighting since recovery of U. S. strength following Pearl Harbor.



Having previously disclosed the dropping of the mighty new explosive on Japan, President Harry S. Truman also was the first to reveal Russia's entrance into the Pacific war to the U. S., putting him in the position of having made two historic announcements within a few days.

In declaring war on Japan, Russian Foreign Commissar Molotov stated that the Reds had decided on hostilities as a means for restoring peace quickly in the Far East after the Nipponese had turned down the U. S., British and Chinese demand for unconditional surrender at Potsdam, thus ending Moscow's role as an intermediary in the conflict.

With the Russians possessing large forces along the Siberian border, and excellent locations for air bases for short-range bombardment of the Japanese homeland, the Reds decision to cross swords with the Nipponese was expected to prove of invaluable assistance in shortening the war. Of the 4,000,000 men constituting the Japanese army, 1,250,000 have been reported massed in Manchuria opposite Russian territory, with another 900,000 stationed throughout China.

Having first come to grips over 40 years ago in the Orient, Far Eastern relations between the two powers have always remained touchy, with border clashes between Russian and Japanese troops in 1939 threatening to explode in major conflict. At that time, Marshal Gregory Zhukov, who was later to lead the Russian smash into Berlin, commanded Red soldiers in Siberia.

All through the German-Russian war, a Japanese attack on Russia's rear in Siberia was feared, with the Nipponese reportedly prepared to take the jump in 1942 before the Nazi setback at Stalingrad inspired caution. On the face, Japanese-Russian relations were guided by the neutrality pact of 1941 which the Reds signed with the Germans threatening their European front; but with the Nazis licked, Moscow then found itself free to take a stiffer stand in the Far East.

With Russia's entrance into the war, the Allied world speculated on the price Premier Stalin would exact for Red participation in the drive to overthrow the Nipponese and end the conflict quickly. A shrewd bargainer, interested in material advantages rather than idealistic attainments, the mustached chieftain of the Kremlin reportedly had an eye not only on Inner Mongolia, but on Manchuria and Korea as well.

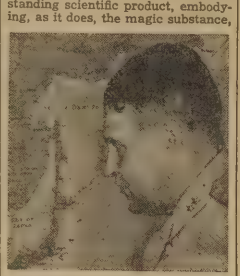
Historians were quick to point out that Russia has always had a rough and rugged time in the affairs of the Far East. There are some old scores which she had to settle with Japan.

Pushed out of her once-important place in Asia after the Russo-Japanese conflict of 1904-05 because of the loss of the Manchurian railway empire—and the southern half of the island of Sakhalin with its rich timber and oil resources, Russia has been smarting ever since.

Even the Russian revolution which saw the end of the czars did not change this feeling. In fact, under the Soviet, Russia's interest in the Far East suffered even more. Chinese pressure forced her to lose control of the Chinese Eastern Railway. The Japs pressed for additional concessions in oriental waters.

They got them. Valuable fishing privileges were granted to them by Russia. Tokyo enjoyed these for years.

Meanwhile, by 1931, Japan was spreading its power with full strength, and reached out to grab Manchuria. Russian strength in that area was reduced still more.



Japan continued to rule Manchuria and parts of China with ever-increasing violence until the outbreak of the war with China. Grabs of power and land finally led to war with Britain and the United States, the great powers of the west.

ATOMIC BOMB:
Earth Shaking

Best kept secret of the war, the sensational atomic bomb electrified the Allied world with its possibilities for bringing the Japanese soon to their knees and revolutionizing postwar life, while staggering the enemy with its terrible destructive potentialities.

Armed with the new weapon, which promises to outmode all existing forms of armaments on land and sea and air, the U. S. was in a position to deliver another unconditional surrender ultimatum to the Japanese, this time threatening to wreak even greater ruin than that being wrought by the swarms of Flying Forts now bombarding the empire.

In a war already noted for the remotely-controlled buzz bomb and rocket developed by the Germans, the atomic bomb remains the outstanding scientific product, embodying, as it does, the magic substance, uranium, known as U-235—the 235 representing its weight in atoms, the smallest particles of matter. First isolated in 1789, uranium is a metallic element found along with radium in pitchblende and carnotite ore, and possessing great powers of energy through its explosive atomic contents.

With Maj. Gen. Leslie R. Groves in overall charge of production of the atomic bomb, and with Dr. J. R. Oppenheimer of the University of California responsible for the technical development of it, special pains were taken to preserve the secrecy of the explosive, packing a force greater than 20,000 tons of TNT.

At Richland, Wash., the huge plant, sprawling over 400,000 acres, was divided into three parts, one for the production of the material; another for its refinement, and the third for storing raw materials.

Some idea of the terrific explosive effect of the new atomic bomb on the harassed Japanese cities can be gleaned from the results of the test of the charge in the desert lands of New Mexico.

With U-235 giving off heat, light and power, the explosion lit the countryside for miles around with a brightness even greater than day, with the flash seen 520 miles away at Needles, Calif., and a blind girl near Albuquerque, N. M., noting the presence of a flash shortly before the detonation.

The explosion itself set off a heavy pressure wave, which knocked down two men at a control center 10,000 yards away, and completely vaporized the steel tower upon which the atomic bomb rested. A huge multi-colored cloud surged upward to over 40,000 feet, commanding the sky.

In dropping a single 400-pound charge on the rail and industrial center of Hiroshima, one B-29 wiped out 60 per cent of the once thriving Honshu municipality, army air force reconnaissance reported. Fires swept extensively over the stricken area and only a few concrete structures remained standing in the heart of the city, with the interior of these even scorched.

In the welter of excitement over the atomic bomb, the tremendous possibilities of harnessing U-235 to peacetime uses commanded popular attention. Any hopes that the material might be immediately available, however, were spiked by war department reports that much additional research was needed for designing machinery for producing peacetime energy.

Realization of the terrific destructive potentialities of the atomic bomb sobered jubilation over President Truman's announcement of its usage to bring the enemy to his knees.

Comment ranged from the statement of Senator Capper (Rep., Kans.) that "I hope we can control it" to the declaration of Representative Lea (Dem., Calif.) "This emphasizes the necessity of the nations providing some method of settling disputes without recourse to war. Otherwise, it might mean the end of civilization."

MANPOWER:
Charge Army Hoarding

In the face of severe congressional criticism over maintenance of 7,000,000 men in uniform for a one-front war following Germany's defeat, the army revealed that it would not revise its point system for discharge as previously planned for July.

With about 1½ million troops scheduled for release by next June, the war department stated that consultations with General MacArthur and his commanders resulted in the decision that the present discharge rate is the maximum that can be afforded to permit efficient operations in the Pacific and prevent unnecessary losses of men through inexperienced combat leadership.

Despite the army's stand, Senator Johnson (Dem., Colo.) repeated his demand that the nation's military forces be further pared, asserting that shipping facilities will permit utilization of only 3,000,000 men in the Pacific before January, 1947, and the hoarding of manpower will cause unnecessary unemployment in the postwar period.

In the midst of the argument, the army revealed that replaceable Pacific vets with 85 or more points are being discharged as rapidly as shipping permits. Specialists with 85 or more points who cannot be immediately replaced, however, are being retained.

PACIFIC:
Realign Commands

In line with the joint chiefs of staff assignments of April 5 putting him in charge of all army forces and resources in the Pacific theater, Gen. Douglas MacArthur revealed extension of his command to the Ryukyu islands, stepping-stones to his announced goal of Tokyo.

At the same time, it was disclosed, Adm. Chester Nimitz, who had been given the leadership of all naval forces and resources in the Pacific theater by the chiefs of staff April 5, retained his control over the fleet in the Ryukyu area. Gen. Carl Spaatz' army strategic air forces also will remain independent of the MacArthur command.

With the announcement of the realignments, it was revealed that a mighty invasion force was being forged under General MacArthur, with the Ryukyu and Philippine islands serving as a semi-circular base.

POULTRY:
U. S. Procurement

Moving to ease the burden of supply on eight eastern, southern and midwestern states, and obtain sufficient stocks for military canning, Secretary of Agriculture Anderson announced that the government would extend poultry purchases to 12 other principal producing states.

At the same time, it was revealed, the government has been purchasing all turkeys marketed in 23 producing states for storage for popular, morale - building Thanksgiving and Christmas day service dinners. Despite the heavy U. S. procurement, the bumper 1945 turkey crop of from 575,000,000 to 600,000,000 pounds will assure each civilian of 3.55 pounds.

Under the government's new poultry purchase programs, the U. S. and civilians will share equally in output of processing plants with over 20,000 pound capacity weekly in North and South Dakota, Minnesota, Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa, Missouri, Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Oklahoma and Texas. The government is now taking 70 per cent of broiler production in Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Georgia, North Carolina, Oklahoma and Missouri.

REPARATIONS:
Russ Share

As a result of the Potsdam agreements, Russia will receive the lion's share of surplus movable German industry as reparations payments, studies revealed.

Russia's advantage partly stems from the fact that about 45 per cent of German industry was located in the eastern part of the country now under Red occupation, and the U. S. and British with great productive plants of their own have little use for enemy facilities.

Under the Potsdam agreements, the Allied powers are to take surplus movable German industry as reparations for Nazi war damage after the economy of the defeated nation has been readjusted to permit only manufacture essential to an agricultural state. In addition to having a free hand in the eastern zone, where 45 per cent of German industry was situated, the Russians also will obtain 10 per cent of the equipment in the U. S. and British zones, plus another 15 per cent paid for with food and coal.

WAR SHIPPING:

In the five years and eight months of the European war, 75,000 merchant slips were escorted across the Atlantic by the British, Dominion and European navies, the British admiralty revealed.

Despite the large number of ships escorted — involving some 2,200 convoys, the largest made up of 167 ships — only 574 ships were lost in all, or the equivalent of 1 in every 131 which sailed, the admiralty further disclosed.

Plans Reorganization Of Labor Department

New Secretary Undertakes Task to Knit Activities of Over 20 Agencies; Seeks to Avert Vet-Union Row.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

It took Hercules just one day to clean the stables where one wealthy but not too sanitary man had kept 10,000 oxen. At least that is the way I heard it at my father's knee. Since my father pioneered in Washington state in the early '90s, I wish he were here now to witness another Washingtonian doing a Herculean job which he hopes to finish by September 1.

I refer to Secretary Schwellenbach, whose assignment is to put the department of labor in order. He isn't going to have to do much cleaning out, but he has been tidying up so that he can bring back under his aegis most of a score of prodigal agencies, all having to do with labor, which are scattered all over the District of Columbia and points north and west.

Most of the labors of Hercules were decidedly thankless ones and were given him for spite because his stepmother, Juno, didn't like her husband's extra-curricular children. Schwellenbach's job is thankless enough, but it wasn't given to him for spite. It was given to him by his old friend, Harry Truman, because the President believed that, like Hercules, Schwellenbach could deliver. He was a popular, hard-working senator. He was a popular, hard-working judge. The requests of goddesses and presidents are commands, so the judge laid aside his robe, rolled up his sleeves and started in.

The first thing he found out when he reached the palatial "stables" on Constitution avenue was that taking care of administrative matters would keep any labor secretary as busy as Augeas should have been with his 3,000 oxen. No wonder nobody quite dared to try to corral the 20-some agencies, rightly under the authority of the department. To administer them would under the present set-up be an impossible job. And so they grew up with their own public relations departments, their own statistical services and legal advisors, separate entities all going their own sweet, if sometimes conflicting, way.

So the first thing that Schwellenbach did was to get together a small group who knew the department, who knew organization and who knew Washington, to find out if something couldn't be done to knit the functions of the department more closely together so the head man wouldn't have to sign all the travel orders and decide whether there was enough ice in the iced tea in the cafeteria; and attend to other trivia which might better be delegated.

This was the first step in preparing the old home to absorb its prodigal children. When the new secretary arrived in his paneled office, he called the staff of the department together and said he knew that everyone agreed that there had to be a reorganization and that each division head also probably agreed that his own group didn't need to be tampered with. Then he went ahead.

As this is written it is hoped that the report of the crew of investigators and a similar study of the extra-mural activities will be completed soon so that a comprehensive report will be laid on President Truman's desk by the first of September.

Reorganization Touchy Problem

The next step would logically be an executive order from the President embodying the Schwellenbach report to make the suggested changes. With his war powers, the President wouldn't have to ask the pleasure of congress. But President Truman doesn't want the changes he makes to be temporary affairs. Like every other president since Grover Cleveland, he has requested powers to reorganize the government and never has congress offered a carte-blanche go-ahead. Such a bill is pending in congress now. However, if the suggestions made by Secretary Schwellenbach were considered reasonable, they might be put into a bill and passed. In any case they will probably be presented before the other measure authorizing wider presidential authority is considered.

In the meantime, labor itself is tending to cloud the atmosphere insofar as acceptance of any efforts to restore full, free, collective bargaining, which the no-strike pledge and various wartime restrictions have virtually suspended. The public is getting very irritated with violations of the no-strike pledge and what many feel to be union demands which, whether or not they appear fair as between labor and management, do not take the consumer into consideration.

Much of the antagonism is due to the feeling of the men who resented strikes while they were in the service. Schwellenbach managed to smooth out one of the toughest veterans versus unions troubles the country ever witnessed back in his home state of Washington after the last war. He admits there is no doubt that such antagonism exists now. "We may as well face it," he says. But he thinks he can handle it.

One habit which Schwellenbach wants to break up, and it is assumed the President wants him to break up, is having labor disputes leap-frog right into the lap of the White House. Some of the old-line labor department officials used to writhe every time a long, hot telegram went out such as some of those addressed to John Lewis while the coal strike was going on, which were signed by President Roosevelt, but dictated by the War Labor board, which labor and management had snubbed. These old-timers felt that many of the questions could have been settled with the machinery which already existed within the department.

Of course, the War Labor board, which has had all the tasks complicated by the war to perform, will die with V-J Day.

Vows Impartial Labor Department

Other separate agencies dealing with labor will continue. The United States Employment service and the apprenticeship and training program are now part of the War Manpower commission. Social security is run by the social security board. If the movement to create a new department of welfare succeeds, this new set-up might conceivably absorb social security and also the children's bureau, now under the labor department.

The National Labor Relations board, which administers its quasi-judicial functions under the Wagner act, now independent, would have its "housekeeping" done by the department—that is, its financing, personnel and such matters would be under the secretary of labor.

Since Schwellenbach has been in office he has talked to a whole string of labor men and a whole string of management men, too.

"I am not a labor official," he says, "I am a public official."

That pretty well sets up his position and, as I said, it makes his job, so far as the lobbies of labor and management go, about as thankless as the labors of Hercules. Congress feels that the labor department is supposed to look after labor interests and what Judge Schwellenbach is shooting at is to have it operate with the impartiality of a court. But his chief concern now is to consolidate under one head all government activities pertaining to labor.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes slip in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength.

Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a nation-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!

THE STORY THUS FAR: Spratt Herlong, a successful motion picture producer, had married Elizabeth, after her first husband was reportedly killed in World War I. They had three children, Dick, Cherry and Brian. Dick was 17 and would soon be available for service. Whenever Elizabeth thought of Dick entering the service, the old agony of her first husband's death would return. She was determined to face it bravely. Returning from a luncheon appointment with her husband, Elizabeth found Cherry, Dick, and their friends, Julia and Pudge, at the swimming pool. Cherry and Dick shook down some lemons and brought them into the house to make some ade.

CHAPTER III

For a moment she stood turning the radio knob. The radio mourned that there were no flowers in its garden of love, offered her a remedy for acid indigestion and inquired persuasively if she was troubled by nagging pains in the small of her back. With a wrinkling of her nose, Elizabeth switched off the voices and decided to read until it was time to get out the makings of the dinner cocktails. If she started now she could probably finish her novel. Stretching out on the chaise-longue, she took up the book and found the place where she had left off last night. It was not an intellectual treat, but it was interesting—after reading All This and Heaven Too she had learned that the English author who wrote under the pseudonym of Joseph Shearing had published, several years before, another fictionized version of the Praslin murder, and Elizabeth was well enough acquainted with the sinister Shearing heroines to be sure that the governess as portrayed here would not be a fit companion for anybody's children. She had not been disappointed. Having begun an evil career on page one, the damsel was now behaving most wickedly, demure in her bonnet and shawl while she dreamed up yet more sins. Absorbed in the lady's beruffled iniquity, she was annoyed when she heard the buzz of her telephone. This phone was not connected with the others in the house and its number was known only to her best friends, so she call could be for nobody but herself. She pulled her attention out of the book, put her cigarette into the ashtray and reached reluctantly for the phone. Spratt's voice greeted her.

"Elizabeth, are we having anybody to dinner tomorrow night?"

"No, do you want to bring in somebody?"

"Kessler. I've just been talking to him. He's got an idea for clearing up this story. So don't have anybody else around. I want to go into it with him after dinner."

"All right, tell him tomorrow at seven-thirty. Has he got Hollywood ulcers, or can he eat anything?"

"He can eat anything, so far as I know, but remember what I told you—only one hand. Have something that won't be too awkward."

"Oh yes, I'm glad you reminded me. Soup to start with, and what about chicken patties? Then' he won't have to use a knife and fork at once."

"Sounds fine to me."

"And one thing more—has he got a wife or anything that I should call up and invite with him?"

"No wife—come to think of it, though, I did hear him mention a daughter, but I don't know how old she is. I'll find out if she's grown and let you know. You'd better tell Dick to stay around and take her out of the way after dinner so Kessler and I can talk."

"Oh dear," exclaimed Elizabeth, "oh dear. Does the girl speak English?"

"I've no idea," Spratt laughed penitently. "Tell him my heart bleeds for him, but this is the way I make a living for my family and there's no way out."

"You'd better start your heart bleeding for me. I'm the one who'll have to break the news to him. All right, I'll do my best, dinner, Dick and everything."

"I know you will. I've got to go now, three people waiting for me. Thanks," said Spratt, and hung up.

Elizabeth screwed up her face as she reached for her desk calendar to make a note of tomorrow's dinner. She did not mind it, for she was used to entertaining Spratt's colleagues, but she felt sorry for Dick. He could take the girl to a show, if she understood the language well enough. She ought to, Spratt had said something at lunch about Kessler's having been two or three years in this country. Elizabeth hoped Miss Kessler would at least be pretty. Flipping the leaves of the calendar, she tried to remember what the date was. Sunday, Monday, Tuesday—today was Monday, so here was the page for tomorrow, blank but for a note reminding herself of an appointment with the hairdresser. She was scribbling "Kessler to dinner 7:30," when the date at the bottom of the page leaped up at her, and struck her and glared at her and made her start backward to put the calendar down quickly, but she could still see the date and she put her arm over her eyes as though by doing that she could shut it out of sight of her mind. October 6, 1942. Her imagination was making such a fierce effort to adjust itself that even with her eyes covered she could still see it, October 6, 1942. For though the figures did not resemble each other, there had been a fraction of a second when by some trick of the light or of her own mind it had looked like October 6, 1918.

She was remembering that day, and nothing she could do or think of could make her stop remembering. It was just about this time in the afternoon, and the autumn sun coming in by the front door glittered through the hall and fell on the yellow telegram she held in her hand, with its letters blue-black against the shining sheet of paper. ". . . regrets to inform you . . . Sergeant Arthur Kittredge . . . killed . . ."

There was no reason for this, Elizabeth was telling herself angrily. She had fought and conquered it years ago, she had rebuilt her life in the knowledge that she had conquered it, she was a perfectly rational woman and a very happy one, there was no reason why every now and then some incident of no importance should strike her down and leave her as she was now, quivering under an assault of pain. Lying on the chaise-longue, her arms crossed over her eyes and her hands pressing against her temples, she fought it with all the strength she had. But it did no good and she had known it would not. She might as well have tried to argue with an earthquake as with these rare but terrible relivings of the days when she had been put to the torture. Every time she thought it would be the last. But a year later, or two or three years later, some occurrence too small to be otherwise noticed would stir up the fire that she had been so sure was finally out. There was no escaping it; that day came back as though it had been that day and not this that she was living in.

It was such a cool, shining day, the trees reddening, and it seemed that nearly every house in Tulsa had a flag rippling from its front porch. After spending the day rolling bandages at the Red Cross headquarters, Elizabeth came home with her knitting-bag on her arm. There was very little she could do to win the war, but if knitting sweaters and rolling miles of bandage was of any value she was glad to do it. Anything that might shorten the war by five minutes would bring Arthur back that much sooner, and for five minutes more of his presence she would give up all the years she had to spend without him. She ran up the steps, singing. It was a silly song, but everybody was singing it about that time, "I'd like to see the Kaiser with a lily in his hand." Their little house welcomed her brightly as she ran in. She and Arthur had lived here for the year before he went to the army, and she now shared it with a girl friend who was releasing a man for war by working for the telephone company.

As she opened the door the sun fell in a long rectangle on the floor of the hall. Dropping her knitting-bag on a chair Elizabeth turned by eager habit to look at the table where the colored maid always put the mail. Arthur wrote her often, but the ships from France were not regular, sometimes she would go weeks without a letter and then get a pile of them at once. Wonderful letters he wrote, mirthful even in the blood and dirt of the trenches, telling her very little about the awfulness of the war but describing every amusing incident he had observed and only now and then changing to wistfulness when he told her how much he missed her. Only once, when she wrote to him saying the war could not be only what he told her, he answered: "Please, Elizabeth, don't ask me to write about what I've seen. When I write to you I can forget for awhile that I've seen it. Let me keep it like that. I love you so. Haven't you got any new pictures of yourself?" She sent the pictures, but never suggested again that he write her anything but what he wanted to.

There were no letters on the table today, nothing but the telegram. She picked it up and slit it open, wondering vaguely who could have anything to say to her important enough to be sent by wire, and then she saw that it came from the War Department. The message was mercifully brief. It merely told her that Arthur was dead. She did not know then that he had died of wounds received at Chateau-Thierry. They told her that later, in a letter from the Red Cross.

She did not understand even the little they had told her. She stood still, staring at the sheet of paper in her hand, all her instincts of self-protection rising up to prevent her understanding what it said.

She folded up the telegram and put it into her purse. She picked up a vase of flowers on the table and straightened the cloth under it, looked at the picture on the cover of a magazine lying near by, brushed a speck of dust from a chair, picked up her knitting-bag and went upstairs to the bedroom she had shared with Arthur before he joined the army. The windows were open to the afternoon sun. Arthur had said, "Let's find a house that has the bedroom on the west side. There's no sense in inviting the sun to come in and wake us up at four or five o'clock all summer long. Any time we have to get up at dawn we can use an alarm clock, so why not let ourselves sleep late when we have a chance?" Elizabeth had never thought about it, but once he called her attention to it she wondered why everybody didn't make allowance for such an obvious fact. It was odd, she had thought at first, that Arthur should be so much intercsted in dwellings, for he knew nothing about architecture; he was a research chemist employed by one of the oil companies. But Arthur was interested in everything. He had never been bored in his life, and never understood how anybody could be, with a perpetually fascinating world to be enjoyed and the longest lifetime too short to enjoy all of it.

Even in his ordinary little house he had arranged their room perfectly—the bookshelves within reach of the bed, the light excellently placed for reading, her dressing-table between the windows, the long mirror so she could see herself from hat to shoes when she got dressed. "You have such fine ankles," he said to her, "imagine your having to dress in a room where you haven't a chance to see whether or not your stockings are on straight." He had planned everything for her. She had let him do it, without realizing that since they could not afford everything, he would get what she needed and take what was left. So she had not noticed until later that his shaving-glass did not turn properly and he had to stretch his neck to get at those hairs around the angle of his chin. She was saving part of her army allowance now to buy him a new mirror when he came back, and a better light for his writing table, should she be going to let him pick out the latter for himself. Arthur was not, thank heaven, a sentimental goose. He might have worn a hideous necktie if she had given him one, but if she should give him an inadequate gadget for his work he would not use it any longer than it took to buy a better one. So she was going to give him the money she had saved for the lamp and let him select it, as soon as he came back and got to work again.

A hundred hammers started to beat on her head. She dropped her knitting-bag in the middle of the floor and grabbed at the catch of her purse to get out that thing inside, which she seemed to remember had said what it could not possibly say. But it did say just what she recalled. It told her Arthur was dead.

Then all of a sudden she knew what had happened. The purse dropped out of her hand and fell softly on the half-made army sweater that was tumbling out of her bag. The telegram dropped with it, and a little wind from outside picked it up and began blowing it merrily around the room. Her legs went down like strips of macaroni. She caught at the nearest solid object, which happened to be the bed, and then at the nearest object on that, which happened to be a pillow, and she clamped the corner of the pillow between her teeth and heard herself making fierce choking noises down in her throat, like an animal strangling.

At first she was not thinking of anything. The world was simply full of a wild pain that had clamped on her and crushed out of her everything but consciousness of the pain itself. Then after awhile she began to recall everything she had read or heard about what those explosions did to men in battle. She wondered if it had hurt him very much. It did not seem possible that anything could have hurt him. He was never sick. He never complained of anything. Arthur was strong as an athlete. She could remember his arms around her and herself saying, "Arthur, you're hurting me!" and when he said "I'm sorry dearest," and relaxed his grip she was sorry she had spoken.

JACOB REALIZES THE PRESENCE OF GOD

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 28:10-22.
GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon Him, to all that call upon Him in truth.—Psalm 145:18.

Crises bring out the real qualities of man. When they lead him into the very presence of God, they become an experience, the remembrance of which can bring blessing all through life.

Jacob had such an experience in our lesson, and it is the more remarkable because he was a man whose life was far from commendable. His mother, Rebekah, had determined that Jacob was to have Isaac's blessing, even though she had to use falsehood to get it.

Jacob shared the deception planned by his mother, and thereby he received the blessing of Esau. Not willing to wait God's time for the carrying out of His purpose, they sinned to gain an advantage. Then to escape the wrath of Esau, he had to flee.

I. A Revelation of God's Grace (vv. 10-15).

The fugitive was overtaken by darkness on the second night of his journey, and made his bed in the open. Then came the magnificent vision of the ladder to heaven.

Heaven and earth are not separated. There is a way to reach the throne of God, and there is a way for God to reach and bless His people. The vision of the ladder reassured Jacob.

God renewed to Jacob the covenant with Abraham and with Isaac. He does not forget. Men make treaties only to break them. God says, "I will not leave thee, until I have done that which I have spoken" (v. 15).

In His matchless grace God relieved Jacob's fear by assuring him of His protection; his loneliness by His divine presence; and his uncertainty regarding the future by the promise of blessing.

Jacob's heart was deeply moved by his dream, and as he awoke to full consciousness, he came to

II. A Realization of God's Greatness (vv. 16-19).

Full of holy fear and awe, Jacob realized the presence of the infinite God. It is a proper and wholesome reaction when a man, realizing himself to be in God's presence, is overcome by the awe-inspiring experience.

Theologians, preachers and teachers have dared to speak swelling words of disrespect concerning His miraculous power, and have questioned the authority of His Word. Having sown the wind of unbelief, they have reaped from the people the whirlwind of irreverence, a belittling of God, and a rejection of His authority (Hos. 8:7).

Jacob was reminded of God's immediate presence, "the Lord is in this place." The place of his vision of heavenly things had special meaning to Jacob.

The thing that Jacob "found out that night was not that God visits man, but that God is with man wherever he is. We expect to meet Him in the sanctuary, but He is near us in the market place. Not alone in the sanctuary, but where the multitude gathers in defiance of His law, He is there" (G. Campbell Morgan).

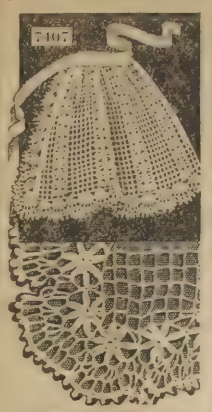
This rich experience led Jacob to

III. A Recognition of God's Goodness (vv. 20-22).

The God who would supply his every need, who would watch over him and keep him, was recognized by Jacob as being worthy of his devotion, and he made a vow that He should be his God (v. 21).

The grace and goodness of God are intended to bring men to faith in Him and devotion to His service. Yet men can go on year after year, the beneficiaries of all His bounty, and never so much as say, "Thank you," let alone recognize Him as Lord.

Jacob made a very practical and workable decision to demonstrate the reality of his vow. He promised that one-tenth of all God gave him should be returned to Him.



Many have followed his example and found blessing in giving a tithe for the Lord's work. Some who count themselves far better than poor, weak and tricky Jacob have done far less to show their appreciation of God's blessing.

Note also that Jacob raised a stone of remembrance, and gave the place a name which forever after would recall not only to him, but to posterity, the wonderful blessing of that night. It is a great thing to keep fresh the memory of the occasions when we have met God in special blessing.

Trickery and deception were changed to truthfulness and devotion when Jacob met God face to face. The same blessed transformation awaits those who meet our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ in faith. Have you met Him?

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Try a dash of cinnamon on cold watermelon.

Add a few chopped ripe or green olives to either plain or lemon sauce served with fish.

Peanut butter mixed with a little cream makes a good filling for white or graham cracker sandwiches.

Linoleum can be cleaned easily if it is kept waxed. A dry dust mop is generally all that is needed. Scrub only when dirty.

Never use waxed thread in stitching wools. In pressing, heat of the iron melts wax and leaves a greasy line. This gathers dust and may attract moths.

Before starting to polish leather-seated chairs, wipe off the seats with a cloth dipped in sweet milk. You will be surprised at the dirt that will come off. Polish as usual.

If you are reshingling your house, think about color. A thoughtfully chosen roof color may greatly enhance the appearance of a house.

Varnish the soles of children's shoes, allow them to harden, then varnish a second time. This will render them impervious to dampness and also make them wear longer.

To remove stains from a vase or bottle, put into it two tablespoons salt and four tablespoons vinegar and shake well. Let stand for several hours, then empty and rinse out in hot soapsuds.

FOLKS & THINGS ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

Let us hope that the terrible wreck Saturday night was not an example of what is to come when gasoline and automobiles are unrationed and we take again to the highways. Several years ago wrecks along the highway from Birmingham to Montgomery were common. Seldom a week passed without the local ambulance driver making many trips to pick up the dead or dying. Saturday night's accident brought back memories of those times. Drive that you will not be a victim of carelessness.

By-the-way, we left out a rumor last week. This rumor was to the effect that a new business is coming to Clanton. Dame rumor has it that it will be located in the Chilton Truck & Implement Building and will be known as the Chilton Supply Company. Thats' all for now.

We were wrong. We stated that the new Dog and Cat Hospital was owned by Dr. W. L. Parrish and was to be operated by Dr. Hays. Drs. Parrish and Hays will be co-owners of the new institution.

Mr. I. L. Smith down on Route Two has ten children. By the first Mrs. Smith who died in 1931 there were six children. The first was a boy, the second a girl, etc. Four children have been born to the present Mrs. Smith and the rule seems to continue. The first was a boy, the second a girl, etc. Of the ten children of Mr. Smith's every other one is of the opposite sex.

Here's a little rhyme written by Mr. Robert S. Tillman of Brundidge, who spent the night with Mr. John T. Ellis at his Tourist Camp last week. The poem pays Mr. and Mrs. Ellis high tribute and deservedly so. There is no nicer, cleaner camp in the State than their's:

It is found at a center where melons grow,
Where trees with peaches are bending low.
It is run by a couple who desire to serve
And help worn travelers regain their nerve.
You awake in the morning with singing birds
Which gives you a feeling not expressed in words.
It equips you fully for beginning the day
With vim and vigor and a hopeful way.
You go out feeling that it's good to live
Where man's best service he likes to give.

What a day today is to remember. No more war. No more waiting for tragic messages. No more wondering where he is or what he is doing—if he's cold, or hungry, or wounded. We know millions of mothers over the land, or world, are feeling like half the universe has been lifted from their shoulders. The boys who do the fighting can never be given the praise and glory they deserve but homefolks have suffered too. It's hell to just sit and wait.

2nd Lt.: "I've been trying to see you all week. When may I have an appointment?"

Col.: "Make a date with my secretary."

2nd Lt.: "I did sir, and had a grand time, but I still want to see you."

Final Dates For Dog Vaccinations

A word to a few individuals and to a few communities in the county who have failed to vaccinate your dogs. Your neighbor expects it of you, and you, as a good citizen, ought to be interested in keeping down that deadly disease — Rabies. Vaccinating every dog yearly is the only means known to modern medicine to keep rabies away from the human family.

Your State and County appointed me as your Rabies Inspector and have asked me, and made it mandatory, that we vaccinate, so I am asking your co-operation.

I am still anxious to help you by coming to your community if you will bring the dogs out. The fee is still 75c cash, but after the following dates have been filled, the Deputy Inspector will take over and the price will be $1.25.

The Places—

Jesse Little (Poor Jesse, West End) —Monday, August 20th—5 to 6.

Jemison (McNeill's home) — Tuesday, August 21—3 to 5.

Maplesville — Wednesday, August 22—3 to 5.

Clanton (McCain's barn)—Thursday, August 23—3 to 5.

T-5 ARTHUR COX, JR.

Where they ar and How they are

That brother of mine, T-5 Arthur Cox, Jr., (above) who has been overseas two years, finally made it home last week. What a reunion that was! 'Course he was glad to see us all, but his eyes were mostly for that little son of his, Arthur Lynn.

Arthur was with Hodges' First Army in the Third Armed Division, so, naturally, he tells of quite a few interesting experiences.

While loading a truck with ammunition he dropped a box on it on his foot and broke it, after this he stayed in the hospital for some time. But finally after missing several boats home much to his regret, he boarded a plane in Paris, July 21, and was off to the U.S.A. After boarding the plane, of course, he was glad that he had missed the boats, because he got to the states much quicker than his buddies who left on the boat. He arrived in Baingo, Ma., July 22, where he made his G.I. telephone call home. Three minutes was a short time to talk, after a separation of two years, but it was long enough to say he was on his way home—a fact that made him very, very happy.

From Maine he was flown to Delaware for a few days and then on to Jackson, Miss., where he was to receive a few days medical attention at the Foster General Hospital, then his furlough.

After being there a few days and still no furlough, his wife could wait no longer, so she goes to Mississippi where they remained until Thursday, August 9, when he received his furlough and they started home, arriving here Friday.

Well, all in all, it's swell to have him home with us, and I'm sure we will all spend many happy hours until his departure September 9th.

He will be happy for any or all of his friends to visit him at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Cox, Eighth Street.

Had a long talk Tuesday morning with Lige Smith who spent 41 months in Uncle Sam's Army and three years of it in Italy and Germany. That is of course taking in all the countries in between. Lige says he thinks he did a small boy's share in the conflict and is really glad to be in civilian clothes. He was honorably discharged with 105 points. We believe Lige has a broader view of the situation of returning soldiers than anyone we have talked to. For one thing, he says the last talk the army gave him they impressed on the boys that they were not the same as when they left and that things would seem different to them. Lige says that folks at home have changed just as much as the returning soldier in his opinion and we are prone to agree with him. He intends to make his home in Clanton again and we, for one, sure do hope that he remains with us.

T-Sgt. Joe N. Gibson, husband of Kathryn N. Gibson of this city, has reported to Baer Field, I Troop Carrier Command Base, for redeployment and reassignment. He went overseas October 1943 and was stationed in England, Italy and France with the Ninth TCC, where his duty was that of an Engineer Crew Chief.

He returned to the states on July 3, 1945.

Lt. Kenneth C. Durbin is stationed at Atterbury Army Air Field, Ind., where he is receiving specialized glider training in Troop Carrier Command tactics.

S-Sgt. William C. (Billy) Maddox from Avon Park, Fla., is spending a furlough here with parents and friends.

Private Arthur Ellison has been promoted to the grade of Private, first class, at the Air Transport Command's Fairfield-Suisun Army Air Base, it was announced recently.

Pfc. Ellison is the husband of Mrs. Maude Belford Ellison and the son of Mrs. Emmer Page Ellison and the brother of Clyde Ellison, all of Clanton.

Kathleen Norris Says:

The Way to Peace

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

"Our meals should be reduced to fare that can be universally grown and universally distributed. Bread, of course, cereals and milk, fruits and vegetables."

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

WHAT is happening to the world just now is not a mere war. It is not going to be, in a little while, the mere aftermath of a war. It is not going to be like anything that has ever happened in the world before. Make up your mind to that.

Make up your mind that the immediate future is going to be filled with confusion, problems, demands. No generation of women has ever been faced with such a responsibility. Once our perplexities were concerned merely with America. Now they are world-wide.

Take my lovely southern grandmother for example. She came across the plains in 1850 with a handsome Irish husband and a baby daughter. She was destined to pioneer in California's mountains; a town was named for her; she bore 12 more children without benefit of doctor, hospital, professional nurse, electric light, piped water, milk-bottle sterilizer, telephone — no use listing what she didn't have.

What she did have was a farmhouse, fruit trees, cattle, two fruitwood chests "from home," some quilts, and her grandmother's spinning wheel. She never saw her mother again; she never left the golden state to which fate had taken her, but she lived a magnificent, full and happy life.

Far From Europe's Troubles.

What was it to her that Europe was boiling with wars? She had only a dim and scrappy visualization of our own Civil war. She knew nothing of New York's politics, Boston's culture; the troubles of the Balkans and China were as remote as the stars.

With us, today, it is different. We are facing the results of the most hideous catastrophe that ever shook the old earth. We are sharing it. One third of the earth's habited surface has been scarred and flattened and blasted by war; countries as big as some of our states are still heaped with dead; children's eyes have been accustomed to sights that would shatter the nerves of hardened criminals; mothers of children have had to hear their pleas for food, for rest, unheard, have had to see them die.

"What we OUGHT to do, all of us everywhere, in the nations that have not been invaded," writes Maria Pendleton Smith, a minister's wife, "is turn to God. And not only in prayer, every hour, every minute.

"But also in simplifying our lives so that we can give—give—give. Our meals should be reduced to fare that can be universally grown and universally distributed. Bread, of course, cereals and milk, fruits and vegetables. Clothing plain and easily cared for. Flowers on our tables if you like, singing always, books, friendship, walks, study. But all the superficialities swept away—all the extravagances that really cost the money. Our children should be dedicated to the great task of sharing, of giving away the extra coat, of asking the hungry stranger in to our board.

Keeping Christ's Law.

"If we could do this in the name of Our Lord and Master," this bold and beautiful letter goes on, "we would build a nationality under our own nationalities. We who followed this law—and after all it is THE law, would be known in all countries as the disciples of Jesus Christ. We would never form a military group or ask allegiance to any one flag. But gradually, like the leaven hid in the measures of meal, we would join hands, we would come to know each other, and people—the great underground army of Christ, who deliberately abandoned all thoughts of superior wealth or position, of useless multiplied possessions, of power through violence and coercion. The people who kept Christ's law.

"We would have everything beautiful that He has given us in this world to make us happy. We would have love, homes, children, enough simple food and clothing, friendship, gardens, books, walks — but more than all, we would have that interior peace, that ineffable joy that the world, as it is now, cannot give. Our rule would be Christ's; blessed are the meek, blessed are the merciful. He that hath two coats let him impart to him that hath none. Overcome not evil with evil, but overcome evil with good. By this shall all men know ye are my disciples, that ye love one another."

Well, I don't know what sort of sermons the Reverend Smith preaches, but I suggest that he some time give his dauntless wife the pulpit. It is a long time since anything I have read or heard has opened to me the vision I received from this letter. For I know in my heart that if the tortured world is to be saved at all, this is the path.

Our children should share. . . .

SHARING OUR PLENTY

We in America have only a dim understanding of the havoc of war. This country has been spared most of the horror, devastation and misery of this global conflagration. The lot of many of us has improved during these war years, in fact, thanks to plentiful employment at high wages, and high prices for products.

A reader of Miss Norris' column writes that she believes we could and should be more generous with the good things we have. We ought to share our clothes and food and fuel and medicine with the suffering people of Europe and Asia, she says. We should trim down our living standard to a plain, solid level, and then give the surplus to the poor in the devastated countries.

All this skimping and sharing would be motivated by a combination of religious fervor and long range practical statecraft. This writer thinks that war, and the strife and jealousy that leads to war, could be abolished, in time, if there were sufficient generosity and goodwill in the wealthy and powerful nations.

SEW FOR SOLDIERS

The Beverly Hills branch of the American Women's Voluntary services of Southern California has organized a unique group aptly referred to as the Button Brigade. Twice a week these ambitious women, complete with four sewing machines, ironing boards, electric iron, reams of thread and, of course, countless buttons, visit near-by camps. Their work includes just about everything from sewing on buttons and service stripes to the more intricate task of a complete alteration.

Argentine Population

Of a population of more than 13,000,000, there are only 53,000 Indians in Argentina. The population from 1858 to 1907 was increased by 6,000,000 immigrated people.

Argentina was explored and settled by the Spaniards in the 16th century, and it was a Spanish possession until 1816, when the Spanish viceroy was deposed. Until 1853 civil war and dictatorships made conditions unsettled, after which a constitution patterned after the U. S. constitution was set up.

Widow Is Found Dead, $400,000 in Her Room

NEW YORK.—Mrs. Genevieve Lloyd, 60, whose husband, Fred Brochwel Lloyd, disappeared in Times square nine years ago, was found dead in her hotel room here. Securities, unclipped coupons and various other papers found in Mrs. Lloyd's hotel room totaled more than $400,000 in face value, police said.

Death in Battle Parts Father, Son

Bloody Okinawa Takes Life Of Colonel's Pal.

OKINAWA. — "Come on, dad, strike 'em out!"

It was Shanghai, 1937. The pitcher was rugged Maj. Frances I. Fenton, player-manager of the undefeated marine team. It was his 45th birthday. The rooter was his 11-year-old son, Mike.

"You can do it, dad. You can do it!"

The major did, winning, 9 to 2.

"Nice catch, son!"

Mike was playing now, second baseman for St. Joseph's academy in Baltimore, Md. Lieutenant Colonel Fenton had come back from the Quantico, Va., base to watch. After the game Mike said: "Dad, I'm 17 now. There's a paper that I'd like to have you sign."

"I thought you didn't want to join the corps."

"But there's a war on. When it's over we'll both resign and take in all the big league games, huh?"

"Sure, Mike, if that's what you want."

"Hello, son."

It was April, 1945. The Fentons—colonel and private first class—met on bloody Okinawa. Mike had turned down a commission, wanted to fight in the lines. He was a scout-sniper.

"Need anything, Mike?"

"No, sir. Please don't send me anything. I wouldn't feel right. The other guys'll think I'm pulling strings because my father is a colonel."

Two weeks later the Japs counter-attacked. Mike crouched behind a rock, tossed grenades. Jap shells and machine gun bullets answered.

A jeep pulled up at the graves registrant tent. Men were stretched on the ground. Colonel Fenton walked among the bodies, stopped at one.

"This is my son," he said.

Mike was buried in the ground he fought for. The Catholic chaplain intoned the final prayer. Then the colonel bowed in prayer among the other marines awaiting burial.

"The poor souls. They didn't have their fathers here," he said.

Steaks Firm the Meat of Federal Court Cases

PHILADELPHIA.—Steaks, a rarity in Philadelphia markets, are making an almost daily appearance these days in federal district court. Some of the meat being introduced in evidence is fresh and some several months old.

Butcher David Silverman, charged with selling two T bones above OPA ceiling prices, walked into court carrying two large steaks, a weighing scale, saw, boning knife and other tools.

He laid the steaks on a table and trimmed them. Silverman said he was illustrating for the court how he weighed steaks and trimmed them, with the loss in bone and fat accounting for what appeared to be an overcharge. He was acquitted.

Another steak drama featured an almost year old piece of meat. OPA officials said it was a steak Louis Kravitz sold last August at an illegal price.

Judge George A. Welsh was told the steak was sirloin. The judge, saying he knew a little about meat, commented: "This meat not only changed color and weight (since last August), but seems to have changed from sirloin to round."

Kravitz was acquitted of a charge of selling sirloin steak at more than ceiling prices.

Bride, Groom on Wheel Chairs Say Nuptial Vows

STAYTON, ORE.—The bride and groom were married from wheel chairs and most of the town turned out for the ceremony.

Fred Camp of Portland, Ore., and his bride, Bernice Nightingale, both suffered broken backs at the age of 17. They met a few years ago at a party given by a group of handicapped persons.

When the parson completed the ceremony, the bridegroom leaned across the arms of both chairs and kissed his bride, then both turned and wheeled their way through showers of rice to the reception held in the gift-packed church basement. There the newlyweds cut a wedding cake and served townsfolk who jammed the church to the doors.

Fred, whose deft fingers loop some of the northwest's best fishing lures, and his bride, former Stayton city treasurer, went from the church to the rambling seven room house they purchased together as their "dream house."

FRANCES LANGFORD, who's doing such a swell job on that radio program that she heads, got just what she wanted in a scene for RKO's "Radio Stars on Parade." Starred with Wally Brown and Alan Carney in the musical, which has "Truth or Consequences" Ralph Edwards, Skinnay Ennis and his band, Frances found the studio set the scene of a revival of Hollywood slapstick technique. This included the use of custard pies as missiles. "Ever

The Green Bug Strikes

By WILLIAM J. MURDOCH

McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Features.

"WHY?" Charles Hobson inquired of his eight-year-old nephew. He shot a rather bewildered look at his wife who smiled knowingly and folded her arms across her ample front. "Why, Butch?" Charles repeated. "Why can't you tell your new teacher—Miss Melrose, is it?—that you're to come straight home instead of helping her fix a recreation room in her basement?"

"Well, gosh, Unk—" Randolph "Butch" Speers said evasively, staring at the floor.

Now, thought Helen Hobson. If that green bug of jealousy didn't take a big bite from Charles' peace of mind, then 37 years of marriage to him hadn't taught her a thing. "Tell him, Randolph," she pressed primly. "Tell him what you told me."

"I just can't!" the boy exclaimed. "I—I like her! She's so pretty and nice—" he paused, embarrassed.

Helen was extremely pleased at the signs of distress on Charles' long, lean face. So she gave that bug plenty of jaw room. If the boy wanted housework, she intended to see that Charles ordered him to help at home. "Imagine, Charles, a teacher using her looks to inveigle a roomful of children to help clean her cellar!"

"Ummm," Charles muttered. He had enjoyed almost all of his nephew's affection and admiration ever since the boy came to live with them pending the reunion of his parents, one a soldier and the other a willing hospital patient.

"Well, gosh, Unk," Butch attempted to explain again, "she's just teaching us how to paint chairs and wash woodwork and stuff. And she sings to us while we work, and tells us stories and—"

"It isn't right," Charles interrupted. His wounded pride assumed a cloak of indignation. "After this, you come straight home, Butch. Hear me?"

"O. K." the boy said in a small voice, awed by the unusual severity of his uncle's command.

"Aunt Helen can find plenty of work around here," Charles said righteously, "if that's what you want."

That was just what Helen wanted. "We'll start right now, Randolph," she said. "Get the water on for supper. And tomorrow after school we'll clean our basement."

They didn't, though. In vain Mrs. Hobson peered out the living room window for two hours after the clock atop the bookcase struck three. No nephew. Finally he arrived barely a few minutes before his uncle.

"He did it again, Charles!" Mrs. Hobson greeted her husband.

"I'm sorry, Unk," Butch began tremulously. "Miss Melrose said she was sure you wouldn't mind if I helped just once more—" his voice trailed off into miserable silence when he saw the mounting storm in his uncle's face.

"By George!" Charles growled, throwing his hat on the hall table. "If you ask me," Helen said tartly, "the boy should be—"

"It isn't the boy's fault," Charles snapped. "It's that teacher! You can't expect children to resist women like her. By George!" he said again, snatching up his hat. Both his wife and nephew were startled by the wild light in his eyes. "By George, I'll tell her a thing or two! Butch, where does she live?"

"On — on Market street, near Elm," Butch stammered.

"It's the old Brennancer place," Helen said. 'Charles — where are you going?"

"To call on Miss Melrose."

"Charles, don't do anything you'll regret!"

Bang! The door slammed violently. Butch gulped. "G—gosh!"

"I should say so," Mrs. Hobson said, blinking. The green bug had taken a bigger bite than she expected. "I should most certainly say so!"

The supper hour passed. The clock struck seven. Helen looked out the window for the 20th time. Still no Charles. She did hope he wouldn't make a complete fool of himself.

Seven-fifteen. Helen remembered the time 20 years before when Charles had chased the milkman with the fire tongs for stepping in the pansy bed. Her husband's mild gray eyes had held just such a wild light on that occasion too. Seventhirty. Seven forty-five. Then she saw him coming up the walk. Mrs. Hobson's heart swelled with relief and alarm. He was home—but from what? She threw open the door. "Charles! Goodness, I hope you didn't — well, what did happen, anyway?"

Charles kept his eyes averted as he stepped inside. "I'm sorry, Helen. I didn't think—"

"Sorry? Didn't think? Charles, tell me this instant!"

"Yes, yes! But Miss Melrose—"

"Well, we talked a little bit," Charles explained hesitantly, "and, Helen, she's so small that the first thing I knew I was helping her paint the basement walls, and tomorrow I'm going to leave the office early and help her and the kids move some heavy furniture downstairs. Butch, I'll meet you in front of the school at—why, Helen! Here, take this chair! You're positively green!"

OPPORTUNITIES OFFERED BY U. S. MARINE CORPS

Young men 17 years old are urgently requested to investigate opportunities offered by the United States Marine Corps, according to Capt. Charles R. Rogers, officer in charge of the Birmingham district recruiting office, room 210 Farley Bldg., who asserted that it would be to the advantage of every boy still 17 to enlist in the Marines now before attaining his 18th birthday.

Those desiring full information concerning a career in the Marine Corps are requested to write the Officer in Charge, U. S. Marine Corps, 210 Farley Bldg., Birmingham, Ala., for details of enlistment.

Sgts. Richard W. Hooker and Farmer Seale, Marine recruiters from Birmingham who spent Saturday in Clanton, stated that many advantages await young men who volunteer for duty in the nation's oldest fighting force.

"Victory in the Pacific is nearer now than ever before," Sgt. Hooker, a veteran of more than four year's overseas duty stated, "but there is still a definite need for young men who want to serve their country. Our quota for 17-year-olds is large and we invite all interested applicants."

Sgt. Seale, former Birmingham newspaper man who joined the corps 40 months ago as a public relations man, stated that "already hundreds of Chilton County men are serving their country in the Marines, but that more are needed if an everlasting peace is to come."

Write or visit the Marine Corps recruiting office in Birmingham for complete details of a career with the Sea Soldiers.

SOIL CONSERVATION NEWS

Quite a few farmers under agreement with the North Central Soil Conservation District in the Chilton County Work Unit are growing Kobe Lespedeza on their farms. All of these farmers are finding that annual lespedezas make a very high quality hay as well as being a good soil-conserving and soil-improving crop. In order to get the most good from this crop, from the soil-improving standpoint, some definite cropping system must be built around it. A good cropping system built around annual lespedezas can be worked out for every farm.

Several cooperators have good stands of crotalaria growing in their fields. One of crotalaria's virtures is that, for a farmer limited with row-crop land and cannot work a sod crop into his rotation, it will substitute for a sod crop by furnishing a protective cover and adding organic matter while a row-crop is on the land. A satisfactory cover and stand of crotalaria can be maintained on a field if crotalaria is allowed to reseed every other year. To serve its purpose, there must be a thick stand of crotalaria every year: but if it is treated as a weed, it will act as a weed, and will not serve its purpose of conserving and improving the soil.

Question: What is a satisfactory method of fertilizing field planted oats?

Answer: Use one of four methods:

Apply at planting a minimum of 300 pounds per acre of 4-10-7 or 4-10-4. Top-dress March 1 with 175 pounds of nitrate of soda or 87½ pounds of ammonium nitrate or 136 of ammonium sulphate.

2. Apply at planting 200 to 300 pounds of superphosphate and 50 pounds of muriate of potash, or 400 to 600 pounds of basic slag and 50 pounds of muriate of potash, and top-dress with 250 pounds of nitrate of soda or 125 pounds of ammonium nitrate or 200 pounds of ammonium sulphate.

3. On very productive soils apply 200 pounds of 0-14-10 and top-dress March 1 with 250 pounds of nitrate of soda or 125 pounds of ammonium nitrate or 200 pounds of ammonium sulphate.

4. Oats following highly fertilized crops need only a top-dressing of nitrogen around March 1. If the oats sown alone or in a mixture with winter legumes such as vetch, are to be grazed, a top-dressing of nitrogen should be applied in the fall as soon as the oats are up and beginning to grow . . . . J. C. Lowery, extension agronomist.

With the exception of 12-guage shotguns and revolvers chambered for .38-caliber special cartridge, all small arms will be released for sale to civilian users, the War Production Board has announced. Dealers must continue selling 12-guage shotguns only to farmers and ranchers for use in predatory animal control. Dealers who sell 12-guage shotguns to farmers and ranchers must furnish the WPB every 60 days with a list showing disposition of the gun.

CLARK HEADLEY WRITES TO CLANTON FRIENDS

July 29th, 1945.

Dear Ben:

Congratulations to you, Ben, and all the rest of the business men of Clanton, who at long last decided to bring Clanton out of the rut and organize a Country Club. Clanton has long needed such a club. That is, the first step forward for Clanton since lighting the football field, which was a great task—so great it could have been carried out under the initiative of a five-year-old, but it took a year of haggling and hum-ha wing before it became a reality. The best I remember it payed for itself the first year.

A Country Club for Clanton will prove invaluable, providing, you and we go at it in a big way and not half-hearted. As you say in "Folks & Things," it is all but impossible to mention its assets.

Clanton has long been very, very inactive along these lines. Little attention (in fact, none) has been given the younger set of Clanton and Chilton County. Instead, the fine citizens of our fair little city have been content to sit back and do nothing, then criticize the few who do like to get out, kick their heels and blow off steam occasionally, as all men and women must one way or another. It gets sickening to see supposedly intelligent men and women criticize the few who want a little recreation occasionally, such as swimming, golfing, tennis, ball games and dancing. And there's a few who like a nip of something stronger than soda pop occasionally. What has Clanton done to improve the situation? Absolutely nothing.

The younger set of Clanton has long been neglected. Clanton, like many others, like to get out occasionally—go to ball games, [illegible] What the younger [illegible] What the [illegible] took that [illegible] school dances [illegible] parents don't want [illegible] then why don't they see to it that a place is provided. If they don't want the children going to road-side "juke joints" then why don't they organize a Y.M.C.A. or a Y.W.C.A. or something like that. If you decide to take the wife out on a Saturday evening what must you do? You either go to a "juke joint," which isn't fitten to take a wife, or else you drive to Montgomery or Birmingham. Then you are severely criticized by Clanton's age-old Sewing Circle—men and women alike—who are so buried in tradition or who haven't been out of Clanton enough to know that civilization has not reached its peak—yet.

It has been a long time since I was in Clanton, that little burg I call home. I hope I'm still part of it. The best I remember Clanton has no baseball team, it has not a strong alumni of 'ole CCHS, no arena, no YMCA, no YWCA, no civic center, no park (practically). And the most ridiculous of all, which reflects on the mentality and progressiveness of all Clanton, it has no swimming pool. If one wants to go swimming, what do they do. They drive to the big progressive city of Prattville or else they go to some polluted mud hole that is entirely too filthy for children or grown ups. It is ridiculous.

Sure I'm blowing off [illegible] about time somebody did

At one time Chilton [illegible] High School had a strong "C" Club. What happened? Someone got a little too much to drink (not unusual) [illegible] of their annual get-together. Then the lipping, the gossiping and the whispering started. first thing you knew the "C" Club was [illegible] Chilton County High School [illegible] ably the only school of its [illegible] State which has no club for [illegible] er school athletes who sweated it out on the school's gridiron and [illegible] ball courts. I propose the "C" [illegible] of CCHS be revised with [illegible] jurisdiction of the school

Truly Clanton has plenty to do. And, it can be ready to [illegible] the war is over to start the ball [illegible] It is the duty of the Mayor, the City Council, the [illegible] Club, [illegible] men and citizens of Clanton to wake up, do a little thinking, exert a little energy and bring Clanton [illegible]

Why can't Clanton have [illegible] football stadium? There is no excuse why it cannot. It [illegible] We [illegible] joint. And it [illegible] money. There [illegible] around Clanton who has [illegible] down very far, but maybe [illegible] make a few people shake a little. [illegible] my address. I am used to getting told off. I think you'll find a lot of back-ing in a few boys from Clanton who are now doughfoots all over the globe. Take my word for it Ben, when these children of a few years back come back there is going to be some changes made.

Ben, I hope you'll print this. I've been full up for a long time and [illegible] down very far, but maybe [illegible] make a few people shake a little. [illegible] my address. I am used to getting told off. I think you'll find a lot of back-ing in a few boys from Clanton who are now doughfoots all over the globe. Take my word for it Ben, when these children of a few years back come back there is going to be some changes made.

NEWS - AGE-HERALD WILL SPONSOR 2 ORATORICAL CONTESTS THIS YEAR

The Birmingham News-Age-Herald will sponsor two oratorical contests during the coming school year.

The first of these will be with Senior High School students as in the past, and the second will be for Junior High School students.

Pupils in elementary schools who are doing some Junior High work may compete in the contest for Junior high schools.

In cases where there is both a Junior and a Senior High School under the same principal both schools may compete, the students of the Junior High School competing in the Junior High Contest and those in the Senior High School in the contest for those [illegible].

The basic subject for the contest is "Racial and Religious Tolerance as a Means to Lasting Peace."

Contestants in the Junior High Contest who reach the district contest [illegible] and state finals will deliver [illegible] a memorized oration and [illegible] talk.

In [illegible] winners in both [illegible] will appear in the state finals to be held at Birmingham Southern College, Birmingham, and the college will award scholarships to the Senior High State [illegible] and the News-Age-Herald will award cash prizes. The News-Age-Herald will also award [illegible] to all of the state finalists in the Junior High Contest, and will pay [illegible] road fare and hotel bill for [illegible] state finalists and chaperons for [illegible] contests.

INCREASES REGISTERED IN INSPECTION CHARGES

[illegible] Charges for customary [illegible] rates will be [illegible] for less than [illegible] Under provisions of the Farm Products Inspection Act charges for Federal inspection of fruits and vegetables and for meat grading activities of the Federal Government must be sufficient to meet the cost of operation. The rate increase per inspection hour is necessary to comply with this legal requirement.

Georgia and Florida Stations have presented new varieties of watermelons. They are the Dixie Resistant and Gladiator. Texas Station has released new West Indian cantaloupe resistant to mildew and aphis.

In the meantime, mark me down a member of the Country Club.

Regards to all,

PLANS MADE FOR ANNUAL WAR CHEST APPEAL

Plans for the fourth state-wide annual appeal of the Alabama War Chest were mapped here Wednesday morning at an organization meeting at the State Capitol, attended by State appeal leaders Frank P. Spain and N. Lloyd McGowin, twenty-six district chairmen and co-chairmen and members of the War Chest State Executive Committee.

Alabama's 1945 quota of the $115,000,000 national war fund will be $1,700,000, general chairman announced at the meeting. Dates of the state campaign were set from October 25th to October 31st.

Seventeen war service and relief agencies will share the fund that will be donated by citizens of Alabama and those in other states during the 1945 campaign, it was announced. Foremost among the beneficiaries of the fund will be the men a women of our own armed forces, for whom the USO maintains more than 2,500 clubs, lounges and canteens. USO; War Prisoners Aid, which sends recreational amusement and sports materials to American prisoners in Japanese camps and United Seaman's Service, which maintains clubs for members of our merchant marine, will together receive $0,159,500 of the total $115,000,000 national war fund. The remainder will be used to provide food, seed, clothing and medical supplies to millions of war victims in Allied nations.

Following the morning organization meeting, district chairmen and war chest officers attended a luncheon at the Jefferson Davis Hotel, at which Governor Chauncey Sparks, honorary president of the War Chest, delivered an inspirational address, urging generous support for the campaign on the part of every citizen of the State.

COTTON LOAN RATE SET FOR ALABAMA COUNTIES

The 1945 loan rate for 15-16 inch middling cotton in Alabama will vary from 21.09 to 21.41 cents per pound. As announced by the United States Department of Agriculture the loan rates on 15-16 inch middling cotton, gross weight, in various Alabama counties are as follows:

In Cherokee, Etowah, Calhoun, Cleburne, Talladega, Clay, Randolph, Tallapoosa, Chambers, Lee and Russell counties 21.41 cents, 22 points less than loan rate in Carolina mill area.

In DeKalb, Marshall, Blount, St. Clair, Shelby, Coosa, Elmore, Macon, Bullock and Barbour counties 21.35 cents, 28 points less than in mill area.

In Madison, Jackson, Morgan, Cullman, Jefferson, Bibb, Chilton, Autauga, Montgomery, Pike, Coffee, Dale, Henry, Geneva and Houston counties 21.29 34 points less than in mill area.

In Limestone, Lawrence, Winston, Walker, Fayette, Tuscaloosa, Hale, Perry, Dallas, Lowndes, Butler, Crenshaw and Covington, 21.23, 40 points less than in mill area.

In Lauderdale, Colbert, Franklin, Marion, Lamar, Pickens, Greene, Sumter, Marengo, Choctaw, Wilcox, Monroe, Clarke, Washington, Escambia and Conecuh counties 21.17, 46 points less than in mill area.

In Mobile and Baldwin counties 21.09, 54 points less than in mill area.

Loans that will average 48c per bushel nationally will be made to producers on 1945-crop oats.

The loan rate for Alabama is 60c per bushel for oats stored on farms or in approved warehouses.

OHIO INDUSTRY

Ohio, fourth in manufacturing among the states, leads the Nation for forgings, bolts and nuts, stamped and pressed metal products. It heads the list, too, for rubber tires, clay products and office machinery. The rubber industry dates back 75 years to Dr. Benjamin Franklin Goodrich's activity there. The iron and steel industry dates back to primitive years and spurred the growth of big cities. Peace years will find these factories humming and putting more resources behind War Bonds. *U. S. Question: A short, fat green worm that feeds in the bud of cabbage, collards and fall turnips. What is this insect and what can I do to control it?

Answer: The insect is the turnip web worm. It can be controlled by dusting the plants every 10 days with rotenone or Cryolite. . .W. A. Ruffin, extension entomologist.

Don't use too much soap. Suds about two inches thick have proven best for washing clothes clean.

If you are making use of feed and fertilizer sacks for garments that require dyeing, complete the garment first and dye the finished product. Results will be more satisfactory and you will get the most from your dye.

When making cookies to send to a service man, cut them out with the top of a baking powder can. They shrink a little when they are baked and so fit nicely into the same can for mailing, stay moist and don't crumble or break.

THE AMERICAN FARMER HAS KEPT THE FAITH!

Victory is ours!

All honor to the American Farmer for highly meritorious service to his Country in time of war. . . .despite all hardships he has achieved the greatest volume of production in the history of agriculture anywhere in the world.

IT'S TIME TO MAKE POST WAR PLANS

The American Farmer, like the good businessman he is, has become vitally interested in conserving his investment in buildings and equipment during wartime. He realizes that it is only by practicing measures of conservation in the operation of his farm that he can continue to produce his crops. In this way, he is fighting on the food front. . . .yet protecting his family's welfare, too.

The American Farmer should be providing for the protection of his investment in the post-war period. He should know in advance the nature of the equipment he will need to carry on his work. Consult us now about future farm machinery requirements. . . .be assured of immediate delivery when full production is resumed.

Salt Box and a Pan Holder Rack to Make

HERE is a pair of gifts that will bring joy to any homemaker. The salt box has the graceful proportions of those used in Colonial kitchens, and the rack with cup hooks screwed in place for hot pan holders is designed to harmonize with the box.

Both box and rack are easy to cut out of plywood or thin lumber scraps—either by hand with a coping saw or with a jig saw. The quaint stencil design may be applied right on the wood with wax crayon and then shellacked to fix the color. This washable finish brings out the brilliance of the crayon colors and at the same time gives a soft antique finish. The stencil also may be used with oil paint if preferred.

NOTE—Mrs. Spears has prepared an actual-size pattern for all the pieces of this salt box and the kitchen rack with step-by-step directions for making. A pattern and color guide with complete directions for the stencil design is also included. The pattern may be used over and over for decorating canisters, place mats and other attractive gifts. Fry Chicken Until Golden and Crisp
(See Recipes Below)

Summer's Best Fare

Is there a better sight than crisply fried, golden brown chicken nestling close to lacy, green cucumbers and moist red slices of tomato? Yes, that's the $64 question and the answer's right in the picture.

Chicken is fine food and it wears its Sunday best when fried to succulent brownness. It's light enough to make a summer meal well balanced and good enough to be satisfying to all branches of the family.

There are many schools of thought on the question of how chicken should be fried. Some prefer it batter-fried, others like just the dusting of bread crumbs or flour on it. Take your choice from these tasty recipes:

Maryland Fried Chicken.
(Serves 4)

1 3-pound chicken,
¼ cup flour
Salt and pepper
1 beaten egg
2 tablespoons water
1½ cups fine, dry bread crumbs
½ cup drippings

Clean chicken and cut into frying pieces. Roll in flour seasoned with salt and pepper. Dip into beaten egg mixed with water, then into crumbs. Brown on both sides in hot fat; cover and cook slowly or bake in moderately slow (300 to 350-degree) oven about 1 hour. Make gravy from drippings. Pour over chicken and serve from a bowl.

Country Fried Chicken.
(Serves 6 to 8)

2 3-pound chickens
1 cup flour
1½ tablespoons salt
1 teaspoon pepper
1½ tablespoons paprika
Fat

Clean chickens and cut into serving pieces. Mix flour and seasonings. Dip chicken lightly into flour mixture. Lightly brown on both sides in fat. Add a little water; cover closely and cook over low heat for 1 hour. Uncover to brown and crisp.

Lynn Says

Tricky Tips: When glassware has chipped slightly on the drinking edge, smooth it out with an emery board or sandpaper to make it smooth.

To make delicious flavored tea, add a little grated orange rind to it before serving. It imparts a delicate fragrance and saves sugar.

Lemons which have been heated slightly will yield twice as much juice as chilled ones. Cover lemons with hot water for a few minutes before extracting juice.

To flour chops or chicken pieces before frying, place in a brown paper bag with bread crumbs or flour and shake. This will coat the meat evenly and not leave excess in pan after frying.

If the family objects to biting into a bit of garlic in spaghetti or other sauce, spear the clove of garlic with a toothpick and remove it before serving.

Add leftover sausage, bacon or meat balls to potatoes when frying for extra delicious flavor.

Here are some suggestions for the use of leftovers: Broccoli may be made into a delightful cream soup, or if there is too much for soup, arrange it on the bottom of a shallow casserole, cover with thin slices of leftover chicken or meat or flaked fish, top with cheese sauce and brown in the oven.

Light and pretty enough for even the hottest days of the season are these two splendid egg main dishes:

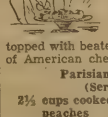
Eggs A La King.
(Serves 6)

6 hard-cooked eggs, diced
2 tablespoons catsup
½ cup cooked or canned peas
2 tablespoons chopped pimiento
1 cup sliced, canned mushrooms
2 cups medium white sauce
6 slices tomato
6 slices buttered toast

Carefully combine all ingredients except tomato slices and toast. Heat thoroughly in double boiler. Broil tomato slices 5 minutes. Place on toast and pour over creamed mixture.

Ham and Egg Souffle.
(Serves 6)

¼ cup diced ham
3 slices egg
3 slightly beaten eggs
1 cup milk
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon dry mustard
¼ teaspoon paprika



Brush bread with bacon drippings; cut slices into small pieces to fit deep casserole. Arrange in layers, sprinkling each with ham. Combine eggs, milk and seasonings. Pour over bread. Bake in a moderate (350-degree) oven until puffy and mixture does not adhere to inserted knife, about 45 minutes.

Summer desserts accent fruit and make a tasty, mouth-watering combination. Here are two suggestions which you will want to make use of some time this summer:

Summer Apple Tarts.
(Serves 5)

2 cups sliced apples
½ cup honey or dark corn syrup
1 teaspoon cinnamon
¼ teaspoon nutmeg
½ teaspoon grated orange rind
½ tablespoon butter
5 baked tart shells

Mix together sugar, spices and orange rind. Add to apples and toss together. Fill pastry shells with apple mixture. Dot with butter. Bake in a hot oven 15 to 18 minutes. If desired, these may be topped with beaten egg white or bits of American cheese.

Parisian Peaches.
(Serves 6)

2½ cups cooked sliced or halved peaches
2 cups milk
2 eggs
3 tablespoons sugar
⅛ teaspoon salt
¾ teaspoon vanilla

Chill peaches well after cooking. Beat egg yolks, add sugar and then blend in scalded milk slowly. Cook in double boiler, stirring constantly until mixture coats the spoon. Add salt. Chill thoroughly, then fold in vanilla and beaten egg whites. Arrange drained peaches in a serving dish and pour custard sauce over them. Sprinkle with toasted almonds or slivered Brazil nuts, if desired.

Tombstones Recorded

Since 1922, the Tombstone Hounds of New Jersey have collected and card-indexed the inscriptions on some 200,000 gravestones in at least 450 cemeteries. When the work is completed, it will be the first genealogical record of its kind for a single state.

Even Then the Farmer's Wife Was Nameless

Having accumulated a tidy little nest-egg, the old farmer went to a lawyer and said he would like to make a will.

"I'll leave all my money, house and stock to my good wife," he said, "so just you write it out plain for me."

"Certainly," said the lawyer. "What is your wife's name?"

After thinking for some minutes the farmer had to admit he couldn't remember it.

"Well, go to the door and shout upstairs as if you were calling her down," suggested the lawyer.

Hobbling to the door, the farmer opened it and roared up the stairs:

"Missus! Missus! Missus!"

Firestone
GROUND GRIPS
Best on EVERY job... Under ALL Conditions
40% LONGER TREAD LIFE
14% STRONGER CORD BODY
UP TO 16% MORE DRAWBAR PULL

GOOD tractor tires do two things. They get every ounce of pulling power from your tractor. They stay on the job. That's why Firestone Ground Grips are best on every job . . . under all conditions.

There are sound reasons for this. Cord bodies are 14% stronger . . . able to withstand hard knocks. Tread life is 40% longer . . . capable of giving years of extra service.

Firestone Ground Grips increase pull at the drawbar by as much as 16%. That's because traction bars are connected, adding up to 215 inches of traction bar length per tractor. Also, there are no broken-bar, trash-catching pockets. The strong, sturdy bars are always clean . . . ready to take the next deep, forceful traction step.

That's why it is just sound economy, when buying tractor tires, to demand Ground Grips, made by Firestone, the pioneer and pacemaker.

For the best in music, listen to the "Voice of Firestone" every Monday evening over NBC network.

LEGAL NOTICES

The State of Alabama, Chilton County —Circuit Court in Equity. No. 2357 Evelyn Mitchell Lacy, Complainant vs. Horace Denver Lacy, Defendant

In this cause it is made to appear to the Register by the affidavit of Evelyn Mitchell Lacy that the Defendant is a non-resident, and that his place of residence and post office address is unknown, and that such address cannot be ascertained after reasonable effort; and, further, that, in the belief of said affiant, the Defendant is over the age of twenty-one years.

It is therefore, ordered by the Register that publication be made in the Chilton County News, a newspaper published in the County of Chilton, once a week for four consecutive weeks, requiring him, the said Horace Denver Lacy, to plead, answer, or demur to the bill of complaint in this cause by the 6th day of October, 1945, or, in thirty days thereafter, a decree pro confesso may be taken against him.

Done at office in Clanton, Alabama, this 13th day of August, 1945.

A SALUTE TO THE BOYS WHO DID THE JOB

If our efforts end with the winning of this war, we will have accomplished nothing, and all fighting that has been done, has been in vain. All that's been fought for, becomes a dream, still in the far distant future. If we remember that the quest for peace does not end the day the last shot is fired, that we haven't achieved the glowing goal of peace with the end of hostility, we shall have learned a masterful lesson. Let us resolve this day to take part in the peace plans for the future, to be aware of our government's attitude and action.

How women and girls may get wanted relief from functional periodic pain

Cardui is a liquid medicine which many women say has brought relief from the cramp-like agony and nervous strain of functional periodic distress. Here's how it may help:

1 Taken like a tonic, it should stimulate appetite, aid digestion,* thus help build resistance for the "time" to come.

2 Started 3 days before "Period Time", it should help relieve pain due to purely functional periodic causes.

Try Cardui. If it helps, you'll be glad you did.

Clinic For Nutritional Ailments

At a dinner which was given in New York last week and which was attended by about 200 nutrition experts, physicians and writers, Dr. Tom D. Spies, associate professor of medicine in the University of Cincinnati and director of the University's studies in nutrition at Hillman Hospital, Birmingham, Ala., gave an account of the activities of the Spies Committee for Clinical Research. Though it is not the only organization in the country which is engaged in the scientific study of nutritional deficiencies, the committee is probably the only one which has been formed by leaders of industry to meet the needs of a large area. The area in question is that around Birmingham, where pellagra was once widely prevalent.

Pellagra happens to be the deficiency disease with which the name of Dr. Spies is properly associated in the South, because he was the man who conducted the first large-scale clinical studies which showed that nicotine acid is an effective remedy.

Example For Others

The Spies Committee has set an example that ought to be followed in other parts of the country. Last year 5,845 patients were admitted to its nutrition clinic. These were all selected sufferers from vitamin deficiency—selected in the sense that they presented problems of scientific interest. Not a death occurred among the lot, a remarkable record when it is considered that their cases were regarded as desperate and beyond the competence of the ordinary hospital or medical practitioner.

Spies starts with the principle that man's life is one long struggle for food. If that food is insufficient in quantity or poor in quality a score of diseases may appear and anyone of them may incapacitate a wage-earner.

It is not easy to diagnose a case of vitamin dificiency. But in Spies' Clinic every known scientific test is made and every symptom correlated with the tests. Every patient is questioned. Is he so poor that he cannot afford the right food? What does he eat as a rule? Is he a crank who lives on one kind of food? Has he any disease that makes it difficult for him to eat the right kind of food in the right amount? Has his doctor ordered a diet which might be an aid in treating an organic disease but at the expense of his system? Does he get drunk on an empty stomach habitually? The questions are searching and the answers frequently tell all that need be known. Time and time again it turns out that doctors recognize one vitamin deficiency and prescribe only for that. In the Spies clinic it has been found that deficiencies rarely occur singly.

Clinic An Economic Asset

Because of its thorough work the clinic has become an economic asset of the Birmingham region. Not only is a patient cured of his deficiency but restored as a useful wage-earning member of society. Some of the patients were regarded both by physicians and friends as insane. Sufferers from pellagra or acute alcoholism, then walked out of the hospital normal men and women having been cured by doses of nicotine acid, minerals and other means.

Spies does not pretend that all physical and mental disability is the result of vitamin deficiency, but in his clinic evidence enough has been collected to show that malnutrition can be a major cause of debilitation. The work done by the staff has attracted so much attention that last year over 2,000 physicians, nurses, chemists and nutrition specialists visited the clinic to learn at first hand about its methods.

Pulpwood Key To Peace - Time Jobs

A special bulletin to Chilton County News from Pulpwood Campaign headquarters reports that increasing shortages in pulpwood may be expected for many months to come as a result of plans for reconversion, and predicts that pulpwood will be an important key factor in determining the speed of peace-time re-employment.

The message follows:

Expect immediate increases in demand for all pulpwood products as a result of need for packaging peacetime articles on which production will begin at once. Pulpwood shortages will continue. . .In fact, shortages may be expected to increase since military requirements will probably remain high into 1947, while civilian needs will substantially exceed pre-war pulpwood requirements.

Economists estimate much of post-war job question may depend upon ability of nation's farmers and pulpwood workers to meet new demands for more pulpwood, as nation's manufacturing pace will be limited by shipping and distribution facilities.

This message can only mean that the 1945 goal of 16,000,000 cords of pulpwood, set by the Government last January, must be replaced by a new and higher goal. Mills in this area urgently need more top quality Pulpwood NOW.

Y.W.A. PICNIC ENJOYED

Our next meeting will be announced in the church bulletin. All members are urged to attend.—Alene Johnson, Reporter.

Instruction For V-J Day Given By Mayor Thompson

In answer to the numerous inquiries from the citizenship as to what action we should take in regard to celebration of V-J Day in Clanton, the proclamation quoted below by Governor Sparks will be officially observed, when and if, the official announcement is made by the President from the White House. No changes will be made unless otherwise announced by the President or the Governor:

"Now, therefore, I, Chauncey Sparks, governor of the State of Alabama, do hereby proclaim as right and appropriate,

"A day of rejoicing in Alabama, "And I call upon the people of Alabama to observe this occasion in the fashion due a historic event with thanksgiving to the Divine Power which has given, us the victory and with special remembrance for those citizens who have suffered irreparable losses in this conflict. The time for this celebration is ordered as follows:

"If the official announcement of Japanese surrender shall be made by the President of the United States after the noon hour of any day, except Sunday, then the following day, unless it be Sunday, shall be a general holiday for all of Alabama; and, if it be Sunday, then the next day following is appointed. If the announcement shall come on Sunday at any hour, then the following day is appointed. However, if the announcement of victory shall be made before noon of any regular working day, then that day shall become the appointed day of rejoicing."

For his outstanding bravery for lying in the open firing at two SS Machine Gunners, holding them down while

SGT. EDWARD MACK TERRY

Sgt. Terry is a graduate of Dallas County High School, Plantersville Ala., and was attending the University of Alabama when he entered service

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Terry of Stanton, Ala.

Pfc. James Watley of Winfield, Ala., could get close enough to throw a grenade into their machinegun implacements, he will be saluted over WAPI August 16th, at 5:15.

A grand 'ole uncle of mine, Pvt. Theron C. Watson, returned to the states recently and arrived at his home on Clanton Route Four Tuesday of last week to spend a furlough with hi family and parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Watson.

Pvt. Watson will remain here for his furlough before leaving for reassignment.

A letter from my cousin, Jack Hampton, MAM 2-C, who is in the South Pacific dishing out the mails to the other sailors, informs me that he has seen and handled so many letters in the last few months, he hopes to never see another letter as soon as this war is over. To this he added: "Of course though, right now, it's great to get letters—the more the better—and I'm sure it is that way with the other fellows too."

And about the county papers, he says, "Millions come in each week, so sometimes I just almost feel like wishing there wasn't any county papers, but then I think of how they boost the morale of the fighting men, so I just keep on sorting them as though I liked the job."

We hope that Jack gets back to the states soon with a lot of the other guys who are coming back. Some of hem getting their disharges, others just a welcomed furlough. Maybe they all will be back to stay sooner than we might think, to this I'll keep my fingers crossed like a lot of other cousins, mothers, sweethearts and friends.

This blue jacket is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Hampton of Maplesville, the grandson of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Watson of Clanton Route Four.

Pfc. Mary L. Parrish of Route 4, Clanton, has arrived in the states, after serving as a member of the WAC as file clerk during 18 months in the Southwest Pacific.

She is spending her furlough with her mother, Mrs. Paralee J. Parrish, on Route Four.

Where they are and How they are

Pfc. Aurelious W. Murrah, son of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Murrah of this city, recently received a medical discharge from Camp Carson Hospital Center, located near Colorado Springs, Colo.

Murrah is a veteran infantryman with five months overseas in the European Theatre of Operations.

Two proud G.I.'s, who recently returned to the states from overseas are C. E. Cagle, Jr., and Buck Burnett, whose parents live near Maplesville and Stanton.

Both men saw plenty of action while there and Burnett was a prisoner of the Germans for some time, but now they are both home and I'm sure they are enjoying their furlough with friends and relatives. At any rate, it is nice to have them back in the states again.

Pvt. Melvin A. McDaniel, husband of Mrs. Lillian McDaniel of this city, is back in the U. S. after serving 11 months as a machine gunner in the European Theatre of Operations.

While there he was awarded the Purple Heart for wounds received in combat against the enemy, [illegible] [illegible] badge and the [illegible] [illegible] Ribbon with [illegible] stars.

MET IN HAWAIIAN ISLANDS

Henry Clyde Lewis S 2-C, left, son of Mrs. Jettie Lewis of Verbena, Ala., Route 2, a gunner on the U S S NEW YORK Battleship, has been to all the islands down south, including the invasion of Iwo Jima and 2 days combat on Okinawa. He was overjoyed over meeting his cousin, Olber Glenn A M 3-C, right, son of Mrs. Veda Glenn, Central Park, Birmingham, Ala. Glenn is with the Naval Air Transport Service, stationed in Hawaiian Islands. Both of the boys are from Chilton County and each have been receiving the county paper and enjoy it very much. They are looking forward to the day when they can return to good old Chilton County.

Pvt. Morris J. Easterling, son of Mr. Leonard J. Easterling of this city, is now at the Welch Convalescent Hospital, Daytona Beach, Fla.

His many friends wish for him a speedy convalescence.

The many friends of Pfc. C. P. Jones are happy to have him back in the states after 23 months in the European Theatre of Operations.

C. P. is spending a 30-day furlough with his parents in the Isabella Community and will report to Foster General Hospital in Jackson, Miss., on the 13th of September to receive medical attention.

Pvt. Bill Minor from Fort Benning, Ga., spent the week end here with his family and friends.

Capt. and Mrs. Melvin Weil, Jr., from Craig Field, Selma, Ala., spent last week here with Mrs. J. H. Williams and other relatives.

SUNBEAM PICNIC

The annual Sunbeam picnic of the Clanton Baptist Church was held on Friday, August 10th, at Bruce's Grove in North Clanton. Circles Three and Five were hostesses. The Sunbeams with their leaders wish to thank these ladies for the nice lunch and Mr Renfro Mullins and Mr. Jakie Teel for the watermelons and carrying the children. We also want to thank Mrs Golden for the drinks and helping serve lunch.

We enjoyed the Mission Study Book given by Mrs. Mary Tucker. There were 34 children with Mrs. George Jester, Mrs. Jakie Teel, Mrs. W. C Golden, Mrs. Redden, Mrs. Willie Bean and Mrs. Mary Tucker who enjoyed this occasion.

Kathleen Norris Says:

Don't Fool Yourself

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

"Visit little Evan on off days, borrow him for visits and keep his affection, but don't subject him to the strain of entirely new surroundings until you are a little surer of them yourself."

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

CAROLINE TERRY is a war widow, 27 years old. When Evan was killed, she handed her three-months-old baby over to her much older sister and took a job. The sister and her husband had two older girls. They welcomed little Evan and eventually adopted him. Caroline says she consented to the adoption, never dreaming it was so serious a matter. She knew that she couldn't take care of Evan and that they would give him an ideal home.

Now the sister idolizes the baby, who is just two, and proposes to fight Caroline's sudden resolution to reclaim him. The child is intelligent and beautiful and he adores his adopted sisters. They all live in a pleasant country place. Caroline lives in the hospital where she is a ward nurse.

Caroline's letter says in part:

"I know you will sympathize. I know everyone must sympathize with a mother whose one longing is to get her child into her arms. My wedded life with his father was only of a few weeks' duration. Then Evan went away to war and I discovered to my consternation that there was to be a baby. My sister comforted me, took care of me—I don't deny that. When the news of Evan's death came, I was much more shocked than grieved, staggered at the idea that I had a boy to raise. Then the offer of my sister and her husband seemed a godsend. I gladly turned him over to such love and care.

Two Widowed Nurses.

"Now I am lonely. My plan is to share housekeeping with an older nurse, who has a girl of three, one of us always being with the children. She will get night duty, being at home all day. We are both widowed by the war and we believe we can build a home together. We can rent a five-room apartment for very little and turn the dining room into a playroom. I have never done any housekeeping, but can learn and will spend all my spare time with the babies. My nursing knowledge certainly will spare them many childish diseases.

"If my sister forces me to go to law to recover my child, which she and her husband suggest, would you not feel that I have a very strong case?"

Yes, Caroline, you have a strong case. It was strong in Solomon's time and it is strong today. The claim of a mother to the custody of her own child, especially in these emotional days when war-widowhood makes so strong an appeal, is undeniable.

But at the same time I advise you to leave little Evan where he is and stop fooling yourself about the possibility of two nurses, overworked as all nurses are today, taking over the care of two lively youngsters, not yet even at the nursery school stage.

True, you do have free hours. But when, at three o'clock, you finish eight hours of hospital service, you are in no condition to go home, take up the babies after naps, change your clothes and theirs, fix their cribs and blithely wheel them forth to market, to struggle with red points and shortages. As for your companion nurse, she is in a worse case, for she gets home perspiring, weary and nervous at seven in the morning, just about the time you leave and just about the time the children are at their hungriest, wettest, noisiest and most exacting.

A Constant Care.

Little children of these ages never let up for an instant. If one takes a long, deep sleep in the middle of the day, the other doesn't. One of them is on the job all the time. They must be aired, amused and watched constantly, even in full health, and when colds and fevers come — as they inevitably do — they must be kept apart, specially fed, sponged, changed and comforted.

You would be very foolish to let a dream that involves so many untried elements break up an arrangement that is so fortunate for your boy. You don't know that you can live happily with this friend. You don't know anything of cooking, marketing and housework. Perhaps, you can amuse and care for your boy for a brief visit, but this won't be a brief visit.

It is far wiser to keep friendly with your sister, visit little Evan on off days, borrow him for visits and keep his affection, but don't subject him to the strain of entirely new surroundings until you are a little surer of them yourself.

We women are apt to idealize situations and imagine them far pleasanter than they are. This little boy would cause you serious worry, fatigue and responsibility. Don't invite it. Motherhood and wifehood are a long slow business, if they are to succeed, and to dream that raising a baby — or for that matter, getting your soldier home again — is going to be all roses is a mistake that thousands of our wives and mothers are going to find expensive.

A GRUELLING SCHEDULE

Caring for a child is a full time job, particularly during the early years. It is extremely difficult for a young widow to try to work at a job, come home and do the housework, and give her baby adequate attention.

Caroline, a professional nurse, has a little boy. Her husband was killed in action soon after their marriage. For a while Caroline did not know which way to turn. She was relieved when her married sister offered to take the baby. Presently this sister grew so fond of it that she and her husband wanted to adopt it, although they already had two children of their own. Caroline consented, but later regretted it. Now she wants her son back. Her sister refuses to release him, and Caroline is thinking of legal action.

It is Caroline's plan to share housekeeping with another nurse, also a war widow. This other woman has a three-year-old child. By working on different shifts, these mothers hope that one will always be at home with the children.

Limitations of Open Kettle Canning

The open-kettle method of canning is recommended only for preserves, fruit butters, marmalades and pickles. While probably the oldest method of canning used in the home for fruits and tomatoes and is still used by many home canners, there is always the possibility of spoilage. In this method the jars as well as the food are boiled to destroy bacteria. Then the hot food is poured at once into hot containers, which are sealed quickly with rubber rings and screw caps.

The Buzzbomb

By JOYCE N. MARTIN

McClure Syndicate—WNU Features.

THE Buzzbomb set down the letter, which had "Saipan, Marianas Islands" written across the top of it, and sank her head in her hands. It sure had its bad moments, being kid sister to a glamour girl whom a certain marine sergeant in a foxhole in the South Pacific had his heart set on.

"She's what I'm goin' overseas to defend, kid," the sergeant had confided to her with his soft Texas accent, in that last "48" before he shoved off.

"The general would just as soon keep me here, on special duty. But I've asked for a transfer, to get out there where it's goin' on. Sure I'm expendable. But don't you worry, sis . . . I'll make the grade," he reassured her. "It's just that I want to get it over with that much sooner, so I can come back and settle down in that little dream house of mine with the picket fence around it. And I'm countin' on Diane bein' there in a starchy apron, with a flower in her hair, kissin' the ole man good-by at the front gate every mornin'."

It was strictly a tough assignment.

The marine sergeant was a real charmer. And he was in earnest. The Buzzbomb could tell that he was. But Diane just laughed her musical laugh at everything he said. "Oh, you Southerners," she evaded. "You'd talk a person into anything . . . you've all got such a way with you." Then she had put on a victrola record and said lightly: "Let's cut, lambie. No more funny talk tonight."

The Buzzbomb shouldn't have been listening, or even looking in their direction, when it came time for good-bys. But it just worked out that there she was—down at the corner bus stop—when he took Diane in his arms for that last kiss. That did it. The Buzzbomb was on the marine sergeant's side from then on.

The next few weeks passed smoothly, somehow. The Buzzbomb sighed with relief. "Dear Sergeant," she scrawled happily, "I am looking out for your interests. Everything is simply super here at home. No competition so far. Your pal, The Buzzbomb."

Then it happened. It was tall, handsome and predatory and when it smiled it only used its teeth. Its draft board had written across its 4-F card: Asthmatic. Allergy, ragweed.

"For a person suffering from asthma, you certainly play a corking game of tennis," observed The Buzzbomb pointedly one afternoon. "Don't you ever take time out to rest between tennis, badminton and bowling?" Then, two weeks later, "There isn't ragweed in the navy, you know. None in Iceland or the Aleutians, either. A college man can always get special duty. And with all your ways of selling stocks to elderly widows, you could easily sell War Bonds. . . ."

Diane had broken it up. "Go 'way, Buzzbomb," she said. "Stop being a pest."

That was the night The Buzzbomb decided the emergency demanded that she be unethical enough to peek from behind Diane's bedroom door. It was none too soon. She saw her thoughtfully holding a ring up to the light. It was a blue-white diamond, big as a beet, and must have cost the kind of money no one has except a person who is cleaning up on the war. And the marine corps' pin that she usually wore over her heart was lying, forlorn and neglected, on the dresser.

There was only one thing to do. Besides, wasn't all fair in love and war? The marines must not be let down.

When Diane came back from her tub, humming gaily, she sat down at the dressing table to give her gleaming shoulder-length hair its fifty usual strokes. Then, with a cry, she roused the family from its beds.

"Honest, Sergeant, I hated to be a heely-peely," confessed the Buzzbomb in her longest, newsiest letter to date. "But you don't pass up any chance to outsmart the enemy out there. So I used the same tactics here. And they sure did get results!

"Within an hour Tall, Handsome and Predatory had returned to the scene of the crime. And did he ever blow his top. 'That ring isn't paid for yet.' He got red in the face at Diane. 'How could you be so stupid and careless as to lose it?'

"Then Diane grew very white and quiet. 'Stupid, you say? Careless? Yes, I believe you're quite right. I don't know how I could have been so stupid or careless as to lose sight of the best value I ever had. Thanks for putting me straight.' Then she turned into the house and locked the door for the night.

"'Hey, pssst. This what you're looking for?' I asked Tall, Handsome and Predatory as he strode down the walk to his car. He snatched the ring and roared down the driveway. He hasn't been seen since.

"And, say, Sergeant. Will you please do me a favor? Get busy with the air mail letters right about now. Diane's reading booklets about joining one of the Services. Don't you think she ought to be a marine, just to keep it one hundred per cent in the family, huh?"

Company Dinners Easy to Prepare Even on Slim Budget

Green beans take on extra appeal when prepared with shrimp and a curry sauce. They make a colorful as well as point-free dish for dinner guests.

Company dinners on a slim budget? Yes, indeed, they're possible even in these times. Your company will get poetical about economical dinners if they're well cooked and attractively served.

You can make meat go a long way but still have lots of flavor if you turn out a dish of rice and meat balls, dressed in its best with cucumber lily garnishes and a nest of parsley. Or, try a completely point-free meal in the Green Bean and Shrimp Curry.

Desserts do not lack for appeal. Fresh fruits, now in plenty, can make a beautiful platter all by themselves; and then, there's a variety of desserts that can be whipped up with sugar substitutes.

Company Dinner Menu I.
Chilled Orange Juice
*Green Bean and Shrimp Curry
Molded Fruit Salad
Iced Tea Hot Rolls Relishes
Lemon Chiffor Pie

Green Bean and Shrimp Curry.
(Serves 5 to 6)
2 cups cooked string beans
2 tablespoons bacon drippings
2 small onions, chopped
2 tablespoons flour
2 teaspoons curry powder
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
1 cup water
1 cup cooked shrimp, cleaned

Drain cooked beans, reserving liquid. Melt drippings in saucepan, add onion and cook slowly until browned. Remove from heat, add flour and stir until well blended. Add curry powder, salt and pepper. Add bean liquid and water. Cook until slightly thickened, stirring constantly. Add beans and mix well. Cook for 3 minutes, add shrimp and serve with hot, fluffy rice.

Company Dinner Menu II.
Hot Vegetable Broth Crackers
*Chili Meat Balls Mashed Potatoes
Green Peas and Celery
Cucumber-Lettuce Salad Rolls
*Mint Grapefruit Ice

Chili Balls.
(Serves 12)
1 pound ground beef
1 pound lean pork, ground
1 beaten egg
½ cup milk
⅔ cup uncooked rice
1 teaspoon chili powder
2 teaspoons salt
2½ cups cooked tomatoes
2½ cups water
2 tablespoons chopped onion
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon chili powder

Mix meats; add egg, milk, rice, 1 teaspoon chili powder and salt. Form into small 1½ - inch balls; brown in hot fat. Combine tomatoes, water, onion and remaining seasonings. Bring to a boiling point and drop in chili balls. Cover; cook slowly 1½ hours. Chili powder may be omitted if desired.

Mint Grapefruit Ice.
(Serves 4 to 6)
1 teaspoon unflavored gelatine
2½ cups grapefruit juice, canned or fresh
⅓ cup water
⅔ cup sugar
Peppermint flavoring
Green coloring

Soften gelatine in ¼ cup grapefruit juice; combine water and sugar; stir over low heat until sugar dissolves. Add softened gelatine; stir until dissolved. Combine with grapefruit juice and add a few drops of peppermint flavoring and green coloring to make a delicate green. Pour into freezing tray and freeze until firm. Pile into grapefruit shells or tall glasses.

Lynn Says

S-T-R-E-T-C-H the Meat: With civilians getting only about one-half the meat of former years, economy in its use is the watchword. Do it this way:

Serve meat in stews but extend it with noodles, dumplings and vegetables.

Extend ground meats with cereals such as oatmeal, cornmeal, bread and cracker crumbs.

Stuff cuts like heart, breast, etc., with your favorite dressing.

Use the soup bones, shanks, knuckles, and other inexpensive, bony cuts for rich-flavored soups.

Combine leftover meats, ground, with potatoes and other vegetables for hash.

Company Dinner Menu III.
*Poached Lake Trout
Slivered Carrots with Boiled New Potatoes
Broiled Tomatoes
Biscuits with Honey and Butter
Olives Radishes Pickles
*Regal Pudding
Beverage

Poached Lake Trout.
(Serves 6)
1½-pound lake trout
½ cup milk
½ cup water
4 slices lemon
½ teaspoon allspice
½ teaspoon salt
1 sprig parsley
2 cups medium white sauce
Juice of ½ lemon
2 hard-cooked eggs, chopped

Place cleaned fish in skillet or long pan; add combined milk, water, lemon slices, spice, salt and parsley. Cover and cook for 20 minutes. Carefully remove to platter. Combine white sauce, lemon juice and hard cooked eggs; pour over fish and serve at once.

Cool as a sherbet is this grapefruit mint ice served prettily in grapefruit shells—a perfect ending to a warm evening dinner.

Regal Pudding.
(Serves 6)
½ cup honey or corn syrup
2 tablespoons flour
⅛ teaspoon salt
1 beaten egg
2 cups milk, scalded
½ teaspoon vanilla extract

Combine syrup or honey, flour, salt, egg yolks and whole egg. Add small amount of milk; blend and stir into remaining milk. Cook in double boiler, stirring constantly. Cool, add vanilla extract. Pour into sherbet glasses and chill. Top with the following:

Beat 2 egg whites until stiff; fold in 2 tbsp. light corn syrup, beating constantly. Slowly add 1 1-ounce square melted unsweetened chocolate, ½ teaspoon vanilla extract and ⅛ teaspoon salt. Chill.

Cold Sliced Meat in Aspic.
(Serves 8)
1 envelope plain, unflavored gelatine
¼ cup cold water
1½ cups consomme, highly seasoned
½ cup cooked peas
1 cooked beet, sliced
1 hard-cooked egg, sliced
Slices of ham
Slices of chicken or veal

Soften gelatine in cold water and dissolve in hot consomme. Pour a thin layer into a mold that has been rinsed in cold water. When it stiffens, arrange on it decorations of the peas, beet, and egg. Cover with a little more of the gelatine mixture which has been allowed to stiffen slightly. Dip other pieces of the decorations in the aspic and set them against the chilled sides of the mold. When these have stiffened, fill mold alternately with slices of the ham, chicken, and thickening aspic. When firm, unmold on a bed of lettuce leaves. Garnish with radish roses. Slice for serving.

Vitamin-Enriched Pork

While pork is recognized as one of the richest sources of thiamin among the natural and universally consumed foods, experiments at Washington State college showed that they could make this good source even better by artificially enriching the pork and by feeding the hog with vitamin enriched food.

SNAPPY FACTS about RUBBER

1,417,000 airplane tires were built in 1944—733% more than were produced in 1941.

Carbon black* is a pigment which, when mixed with rubber, reinforces the molecules of rubber—similar to the way slag or pebbles are used in reinforcing concrete. It is the third most important material that goes into a tire.

Shortages of carbon black, textiles and wire are largely responsible for the present critical shortage of tires. Over 125 feet of steel wire are used in the construction of an average-size passenger car tire.

JACOB ADJUSTS PERSONAL RELATIONSHIPS

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 33:1-11, 17-20.
GOLDEN TEXT—Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace. —Romans 14:19.

Eventually a man's past catches up with him and he must face his own record. The Bible says, "Be sure your sin will find you out" (Num. 32:23), and it always does.

Jacob, who had tricked and deceived his brother and had fled into a far country, ultimately had to return to his homeland and face Esau. The story of what happened makes up our dramatic and instructive lesson.

Before Jacob could be permitted to enter the Promised Land of his father, he had to meet God. He needed a thoroughgoing transformation of life and attitude, and he received it as he wrestled with God at Peniel (Gen. 32).

Ultimately the stubborn man had to yield, and then he found that it was God who had come to give him a great blessing. How often do we fight against the goodness and mercy of God. Yielding brings blessing; Jacob "the supplanter" became Israel "prince with God." He was now ready for

I. Reconciliation (vv. 1-7).

After living for 20 years in horror of meeting Esau, Jacob now learned that his brother was coming against him with an army. He resorted to clever strategy, but this time it was done not in sly crookedness, but in an open friendly effort to win his brother's good will.

There is nothing wrong about the use of a tactful approach, and it really worked for Jacob. His courtesy was shown by his seven bows. His bravery appeared in going out first. His conciliatory attitude showed in his rich gift to his brother.

Then came a surprise. Esau proved to be a loving brother rather than a hated enemy. Blood does count, and men do well to respond to the promptings of their hearts to be affectionate toward their brethren.

Note Jacob's pride in presenting his family. God had blessed him and he rejoiced in his fine children. The scene is typically Oriental, but it shows an attitude toward one's family which we could well emulate.

Next, a very practical note entered into the reconciliation of the brethren, namely:

II. Restitution (vv. 8-11).

The gift which Jacob had prepared for Esau was in the Oriental tradition, and yet it bore also the nature of a restoration of something of that which Jacob had taken from Esau in defrauding him of his birthright.

There is a place for proper restitution in every case where we have wronged another by taking his possessions or destroying his opportunities to prosper. Becoming a Christian is a forgetting of those things which are behind (Phil. 3:13) in a spiritual sense, but not in the ignoring of our obligations to others. What we can make right we must make right if we want God's blessing.

Esau was generous and did not want the gift, but since it would have been an affront to his brother to refuse, he accepted it. There are proprieties in life and little courtesies to be observed. Failure at this point has created much friction even between believers. Being a Christian should make one gentlemanly and ladylike. Let's remember that!

Then, too, Jacob was wise in putting Esau under the friendly obligation which is inherent in the acceptance of a gift. Those who are stingy and close-fisted about giving to others often find that their lack of generosity has reflected in their lack of friends.

The time has come for the brothers to part, and we find Jacob falling into his old trickery as he prepares to

III. Return (vv. 17-20).

The portion between verses 11 and 17 indicate that instead of going on in straightforward dealings with Esau, Jacob resorts to evasion in order to be free to go where he would in his return to his fatherland.

Instead of going back to Bethel the place of blessing (Gen. 28), to which, Jacob had been called (Gen. 31:11-13), he went to Succoth and ultimately to the outskirts of Shechem where his family fell into great sin. Ultimately, God did get him back to Bethel (Gen. 35), but only after much sorrow and suffering.

Jacob was called to live the life of a shepherd out in the fields with God, and when he pitched his tent near Shechem he compromised and lost out.

The incident pictures the tragic result of such folly in our day. Those who will not move over into the worldly life want to be close enough to it so that their children may have the cultural and educational advantages, and soon they find that they have lost their children to the world and have lost the savor of their own spiritual experience.

THE STORY THUS FAR: Spratt Herlong, successful motion picture producer, had married Elizabeth, after her first husband, Arthur Kittredge, had been reported killed in World War I. They had three children, Dick, Cherry and Brian. Dick, 17, would soon be called into service. Spratt called Elizabeth to tell her that he was bringing Kessler, a refugee writer, to dinner the following night. Kessler, who in reality was Arthur Kittredge, had returned to America and gone to work for Spratt. He believed his disfigurements would prevent Elizabeth from knowing him. The dinner date was to be just 24 years since Arthur was reported killed.

CHAPTER IV

It was quite dark when her friend, Frances, knocked on the door. When Frances came in from work and the maid said she had not seen Elizabeth, Frances came up to her room. Elizabeth did not hear the knock, so Frances opened the door, saying, "Elizabeth, are you here?" and then, "Why, what's the trouble?" She switched on the light and ran to the bed.

Elizabeth managed to say, "Please leave me alone." Looking around in astonishment, Frances caught sight of the telegram where it had blown into a corner. She picked it up. "Oh, my dear," she gasped. "Oh my dear." After a minute in which she could not say anything else, she asked, "Do you want me to call your aunt?"

"No!" cried Elizabeth. "Please go out. Please just let me alone."

Frances hesitated, but being a sensible girl she only said, "You're going to catch flu in this cold room," and brought a blanket from the closet to throw over Elizabeth's tense body, and went out.

Elizabeth did not call up anybody that night, not even her Aunt Grace, an omission which Aunt Grace never forgave her. For weeks afterward Aunt Grace could not think of this without exclaiming, "But I was just like a mother to the poor girl! She needed me. And just when she needed me most, she didn't call me." Aunt Grace loved to hover over people in distress. She could well believe that her dear niece had been grieved when she was told of her husband's death, but she was always sure this grief would have been lessened if she herself had only been around to offer sympathy and a nice cup of tea.

Elizabeth had no use for her aunt's ministrations. She did not think of wanting anybody. Later, she was able to appreciate her friend's kindness in leaving her alone. But that night she was not capable of appreciating anything but the fact that she was alone and would remain so. Then, slowly, she began remembering everything about him, not merely his strength and humor and gentleness, but the tiniest details of his appearance, little unimportant words he had spoken to her, the way his eyes would catch hers across a crowded room and make her feel warm with his love. She remembered his splendid mind, the energy with which he went to work—why should the world want to destroy a man who had no purpose but to contribute to its happiness?—and more than that, his goodness, his large tolerance—"Oh, Elizabeth, why get so bothered about it? Who are we to think anybody different from ourselves is wrong?"—and for herself, more even than all of these, their exquisite sense of unity. "Elizabeth, I couldn't say this to anybody but you, but you'll understand. . . ."

She had had so much with him. And yet she had had so little of it. Two years ago she had not known Arthur existed, and now she had lost him.

Her thoughts went back to the beginning. If she had only known him longer! She might have, if she had stayed in Tulsa, for Arthur had lived there several years before she met him. But her aunt and uncle had deprived her of those years by sending her away to school, though of course they had not known they were depriving her of anything and she had not known it either. She liked going to school much better than staying at home with them, for even in her early childhood she had comprehended that though they had a strong sense of duty they really did not know what to do with her. After fifteen years of childless marriage they had hardly been prepared to welcome an orphaned baby left on their hands. Luckily her father's life insurance prevented her being a financial burden. So they provided her with a competent nurse until she was old enough to go to boarding-school, and in the summers there were always camps and other supervised vacations. It had all seemed a matter of course to her until the summer after her first year at college. She was spending a few weeks with her uncle and aunt before the date of an educational trip to Canada with a group of college girls, and one day she went to swim at the country club and met Arthur.

She went swimming alone, expecting that she would meet some acquaintance at the club, which was always full of people on Saturday afternoons. She was practicing a swan dive; she had already gone through it several times, but she liked to repeat it—standing poised in the sun high above the green stretch of water, the spring, the swift plunge down through the rush of air with her arms out like wings, and then at the right split-second bringing her arms together to cut the water and feeling it close around her, cold on her hot skin, and then up again into the warmth and brightness, so vigorous that she felt like crying out, "I'm alive, alive, and I love it!"

She went down into the water again and came up, pausing an instant to shake the drops out of her eyes before she struck out for the edge of the pool. Her face half submerged, she swam quickly. As her fingertips touched the edge she lifted her head and laughed from sheer joy of being healthy. She was not looking at anything when she put out her hand to raise herself out of the water, and was astonished and for an instant embarrassed to feel her fingertips closing on somebody's leg.

Elizabeth started back, about to make an apology. But before she could speak the young man had grasped her arms and lifted her to the edge of the pool by him, and he was begging her, "There now, do it again!"

"What?" she exclaimed, moving back a step, but he insisted,

"I've been watching you. Honestly, that's the most beautiful swan dive I ever saw—please do it again!"

She looked up at him, and in that first moment she liked him because he looked just the way she felt—young, joyous, alive with an extraordinary vitality. He was instantly so vivid to her that Elizabeth exclaimed, "Do you often come here? Why haven't I met you before?"

"I don't know. I was wondering the same thing myself. I come here a lot Saturdays and Sundays, when I'm not working. My name is Arthur Kittredge. Will you let me see you do that dive just once more?"

"Of course," she said, and ran back to the ladder leading up to the high diving board. At the top she looked down at Arthur. He lay stretched out, his eyes on her. As she saw him he smiled, raising his hand in a little gesture of praise, and it was as though everybody else in the pool had become invisible. Elizabeth ran forward and arched her body into the air, and as her hands touched the water she knew it had been the most graceful dive she had ever made. "That's what it does for you," she thought under the water, "to have somebody to dive for."

Arthur sprang into the pool to meet her. Though he was a big young man who gave an impression of great physical strength, he moved with the grace of one long accustomed to rhythmic exercise. They swam up and down together, trying to ride a rubber swan and falling off with shouts of laughter, till Elizabeth lost her cap and Arthur had to dive to find it for her, though by that time her hair was down her back, as soaked as though she had never worn any cap at all. "Now I look simply awful," she said, treading water while she wrung out her hair, but he retorted, "You do not, you look like a mermaid, tawny skin and sea-green eyes and your hair floating." They came out to sit in the sun, and while she shook out her hair to dry they talked without any sense of strangeness.

Arthur told her he was a research chemist. He was employed by an oil company to conduct laboratory investigations leading to additional practical uses for petroleum, and he had published several pamphlets describing his work. To Elizabeth the profession sounded erudite and cloistered, not at all the sort to engross a beautiful young athlete. But chemistry, he told her, was the most exciting subject on earth, though physics ran it a close second, or maybe he should give that place to biology—though it didn't matter, they were all divisions of the same subject, which was the fascinating way the various bodies of creation were made. "Even a smattering of it," he said, "makes you see things you never saw before, you feel as if you've been walking around blind." Pulling a leaf off the nearest plant, he called her attention to how glossy it was on top and how velvety beneath, and told her the tiny tufts on the velvet side were clusters of little nostrils through which the leaf breathed the air.

She was interested, so he went on, telling her how the leaf used air and water and the energy from the sun to make food for the plant. "Then animals eat the plants," he said, "and we eat the animals and the plants both, so we stay alive. But we don't know how to use the sun; nobody understands how that's accomplished, only the green leaves can do it. That's the fundamental life-process of the world. Our bodies can't do it. Only the green leaves know how, and if they should forget we'd die, all the life on earth would end, because we've never learned their secret."

Elizabeth was delighted. "But that's wonderful!" she cried. "Why didn't anybody ever tell me that before? Now whenever I walk across the grass or look at a tree, I'll remember it. What a lot you know."

"Oh no I don't," he assured her laughing. "I don't know anything, but I like finding out."

As they talked she discovered that his outstanding characteristic was a profound curiosity about how the universe and its inhabitants were put together. Everything from babies to planets interested him. He wanted to take them all apart and see what made them behave as they did. He told Elizabeth that before choosing his specialty he had hesitated before the attractions of becoming a chemist, a surgeon, a biologist, an astronomer—not because he did not know what he liked, but because he liked so many fields of study that he could not decide which one would be most interesting to enter. It was lucky he had his living to make, he remarked, as otherwise he might have turned into one of those scholarly recluses, a suggestion that provoked her mirth, at the notion that anybody who loved life as much as he evidently did should imagine it possible for himself to withdraw from it. "No, I guess not," he admitted, laughing too. "I love people. I can't imagine anybody's actually liking to live alone, can you?"

"I don't imagine you've ever been alone very much, have you?" she asked.

"Why no, I haven't. I always meet somebody."

"Have you been in Tulsa long?" asked Elizabeth.

"About three years."

"Where did you live before that?"

"Chicago."

Elizabeth began to laugh again and said, "That's where you were born, isn't it?"

"Yes, how did you know?"

"Because people born in Chicago always call it Chicawgo, and everybody from other places call it Chicahgo. Why is that?"

"Chicawgo," he said thoughtfully, and laughed at himself. "Why, I do. What do you call it?"

"Chicahgo," said Elizabeth.

"Chicawgo," repeated Arthur. "I can't seem to say it any other way. It's like a birth certificate, isn't it?"

She nodded.

"Did you ever hear anybody from England say it?" Arthur asked.

"No, what do they say?"

"Tchicago," said Arthur. "The Ch like in church. You can tell them a thousand times that it's like the Ch in machine, but they can't seem to change."

"Any more than you can."

"Chicawgo," Arthur repeated. "Chicawgo," as though trying to change, and shook his head in amusement. "No, I can't. Shall we go swimming again?"

"Yes, let's." She rolled up her damp hair and tucked it under her cap. They caught hands and dived in together.

Elizabeth thought she had never had such a good time. Arthur was a magnificent swimmer. He moved with such beautiful control that when they came out of the water again she exclaimed, "I bet you're a wonderful dancer."

Elizabeth had a date for that evening, but the young man was not nearly as attractive as Arthur so she reflected she could get out of it somehow.

"All right," she said.

"I'll come for you," said Arthur, "if you'll give me the address. And by the way—"

"Yes?"

"What's your name?"

"Good Lord! Didn't I tell you?"

"No. It doesn't matter, except that they might think it a bit odd if I just rang the bell and said 'I'm calling for the green-eyed sunburnt young woman who lives here, please.'"

"You'll say nothing of the sort. My name is Elizabeth McPherson. And something else—my aunt, the one I live with, thinks a great deal of being proper, so you'd better tell me just where you work and all that and we'll see if we don't know some of the same people, so she won't guess I picked up a perfect stranger."

But Few Planes Have Reversible Propellers

Few planes today are equipped with reversible propellers that can be made to throw the air forward as well as backward, although their advantages were demonstrated as long ago as 1929, says Collier's. Their two principal uses are to check the landing speed of large planes and to enable the machines to be backed in and out of hangars.

Incidentally, when thrown into reverse, the blades are turned over in their hub sockets, and not rotated in the opposite direction as ship propellers are.

Seize Nazi-Held Farms

The Czechoslovakian government has seized more than 270,000 farms in the possession of Germans, Hungarians and "traitors and Nazi collaborationists." Most of them are in the Sudeten land where they were occupied by Germans.

There can be little argument about the justice of the decree but the fact that it means the displacement of nearly 2,000,000 people gives us some idea of the complex problems to be solved by post-war Europe.

Huge Liners As Transports

Two giant liners, the 81,235-ton Queen Mary and her sister ship, the Queen Elizabeth, are now being used to transport American service men westward and will continue until the mass movement of fighting men is ended.

The two ships have a combined carrying capacity of about 30,000 men and are so fast that, during the war, they travelled the seven seas without escort, relying upon their speed to escape enemy attacks. They are a part of a vast pool of ships that is under the direction of the combined chiefs-of-staff.

It is explained that the cost of requisition and the use of the ships, including crew's wages, is paid by the British Government, under reverse Lend-Lease. On this side of the Atlantic Lend-Lease takes care of repairs when needed and provides stores for the return journey.

Army Lost 92,000 Vehicles

The United States Army, in the European campaign, lost 92,000 vehicles destroyed, including 25,781 jeeps, 19,664 2½-ton trucks, 4,462 M-4 medium tanks, 1,458 light tanks and 3,165 half-track cars.

It is revealed that it was not necessary to use the entire vehicle reserve built up in Great Britain and on the Continent. This means that the Army had an ample supply of vehicles. In fact, it used only 350,000 of 550,000 general purpose vehicles, 52,000 of 70,000 combat vehicles and 15,000 of 45,000 special purpose vehicles.

The reader should not get the idea that the vehicles not used were unnecessary or that the high command wasted money in constructing them. In all successful warfare, it is necessary to have ample reserves. No one knows how a battle is going to develop or how long a war will last. Consequently, it is impossible to accurately estimate the number of anything that is needed.

Traffic Accidents Continue

Traffic accident injury victims in this country, since Pearl Harbor, are placed at 3,100,000 by the National Safety Council, which points out that this figure is almost five times the number wounded in the nation's armed forces.

The number of Americans killed or maimed on the highways represents a tragic loss to families involved and an economic loss to the entire nation. That we take it for granted that close to 100 individuals die every day as a result of traffic accidents is a strange commentary on people who worry about the misfortunes of nearly everybody on the globe.

It is difficult to understand the apathy of the average American to such a fearful toll. Apparently, everybody should be interested in measures to save human life on the highways by the strictest enforcement of traffic regulations. Despite the fact that experience shows that such enforcement will reduce accidents and save lives, there is an amazing lack of public interest in such enforcement.

200,000,000 Shotgun Shells

The word comes from Washington that the nation's hunters will have to get along with 200,000,000 shotgun shells this year, or about half as many as they had in 1944. Even so, the allocation by the War Production Board is more than double the 120,000,000 shells proposed by the Army last December. Most of the sportsmen of the country will cheerfully accept the fact that the nation, at war, must produce ammunition for its fighting men. They will willingly forego shotgun shells in order that there may be an abundance of ammunition for men in contact with the enemy. If there are hunters in this country who would presume to put their sport ahead of the safety of fighting men, they should be banished from the nation altogether.

Naturally, you will not hear hunters contending that their needs should have priority to those of fighting men. They will not take this preposterous position. There may be a few, however, who will loudly profess their desire that fighting men have all that they need but, for various reasons grumble and complain about the allocation, asserting that it is unnecessary etc.

Point System Fair

Parents, wives and loved ones of soldiers in Europe are especially interested in the prospective return of their fighting men, hoping that, even if en route to the Far East, a furlough will afford opportunity for a visit home.

It may interest them to know that 357,686 American soldiers in the Mediterranean area will be redeployed to the Pacific within the next nine months but that eighty-seven per cent of them will come to the United States en route.

While it is perfectly natural for every family to desire the release of their loved ones, it must be generally realized that the plan of the War Department, providing for release upon the basis of earned points, is fair, reasonable and just.

Consequently, there is no occasion for criticizing officials, regardless of what happens to any particular soldier. If loved ones must lambast somebody, let them turn their wrath upon the war lords of Japan whose nefarious conduct makes war against them a national necessity.

UTAH'S METALS

In reckoning the Nation's wealth from which War Bond holders will be beneficiaries in years to come, most people fail to recognize the importance of Utah as a mineral producer. They will be surprised to learn that the value of Utah's total ore in 1943 exceeded that of all other states. It gave the world gold, silver, copper, lead and zinc worth $124,348,439. It topped all states for gold output with $13,361,705 and stood second for copper, $83,993,000; lead $9,805,000 and silver $6,619,392. Its ore deposits have scarcely been touched.

High among the instruments of victory in World War II stand tractors. History will record their phenomenal performances following landings in Europe and Asia. Their work will multiply with reconstruction and expansion of agriculture. Two big plants at Racine, Wisc., turn out huge quantities. MORAL ECHOES

Rev. D. W. Haskew, D.D.

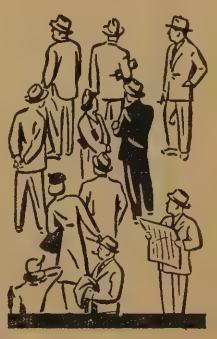
After a student has learned the art of flying his plane, he is then given advanced instruction in the art of being able to fly when all the world is hid from his vision. He is put under a hood with many gadgets of machinery and given lessons on flying when he can see nothing at all. By the use of the touch buttons in sight he is able to regulate his elevation and follow the course of his travel. He can see nothing, but he must learn how to fly in the dark. Before he can be an efficient driver of a plane he must know how to fly in the dark. That is one of the things that we as Christians must learn. Much of our living is to be done in the dark. We cannot see the end from the beginning. By faith we must hold on and travel on in the dark.

After Theodore Roosevelt had written the book, "The Winning Of The West," he entered a book store in Idaho, and seeing his book on the shelf, he inquired of the manager, "Who is this new author, Roosevelt?" He was told that he was just an ordinary rancher in the cattle country. Then he asked of the manager of the store, "What do you think of his book?" "Waal," replied the book dealer, "I have always had an idea that I would like to meet this guy and tell him that if he had stuck to running cows and not writing books, he would have cut a bigger figure in his trade and been a much bigger man." The store-keeper's judgment may have been defective, but it never hurts any man to see himself as others see him. I have seen some mighty big people who would look better if they had some feathers pulled.

During the night hours a terrific gale blew and in the near by park a giant oak fell to the ground. For many years it had stood in one place, and many a weary traveler had rested beneath its stately branches. Now the trunk of the tree was prostrate and a splintered stump was all that stood where it once lived and grew. Unknown to the passer by a multitude of little insects had entered the trunk of that tree and brought its stately beauty down to earth. The tree's judgmen took place when the first insect entered its body. A man, like a tree, is more likely to fall when the insects of sin drill into the soul and character.

You may try ever so hard to retain the eagle in the forest, but he will not stay there. The birds may make their sweetest music all around him, he may be granted a perch on the tallest pine limb, he may be served the daintiest food of the plain, but he will spurn them all. With his eye fixed on the Alpine cliffs, he will spread his lordly wings and fly away to his own ancestral halls among the cliffs and waterfalls. That is where he belongs and he is not satisfied elsewhere. In like manner the soul of a man is not made for the low ways of this world. Man may be offered the daintiest things that this world can give, but he is not satisfied here. His inner being calls for the Rock of Ages, and his ancestral halls are the halls of heaven. Truly we cry with the Psalmist, "Lord, Thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations."

In the Spring days the forests are full of bird nests. They are hidden among the leaves and they are hard to locate by the eye, but the little birds know where they are. When the storms arise, or when the night comes on, the little birds fly, each to his own nest. They know where shelter is to be found, and there they sit and wait until the storm is over, or until the light of the morning comes. So the promises of God are hid out here and there in the blessed Old Book, and thither we should fly when the storms, or the darkness, of life sweeps down upon us. On these precious promises we should rest our souls and the torms of life are over. There are no castles in this world so impregnable as the Word of God.



Recall the Bible story of Jonah. He decided to run away from duty, and at Joppa he took ship and started out to sea. His presence on that ship caused the winds to blow, the waves to roll high, and the crew and all the passengers, were in great danger. The very presence of one sinful man turned the sea into a tempestuous storm and there was danger within and without. Had it ever occured to you that often does the presence of one sinful man in a community, turn the smoothest waters into a tempestuous sea? Sinful men are dangerous on the ship of society. Because of their presence many go down to ruin.

Aid Provided Veterans In G.I. Bill Of Rights

With the accelerated discharge rate from the armed forces, M. E. Head, Regional Manager of the Veterans' Administration for Alabama, today announced plans to handle a much greater increase in the number of men enrolled in education and training courses.

Vocatioal rehabilitation for disabled veterans of World War II was authorized more than two years ago and education and training for all qualified veterans of World War II was provided in the G.I. Bill of Rights which became a law more than a year ago.

However, because of the comparatively slow rate of release of men from service, Mr. Head explained, these programs have not attracted too much attention.

"Now we are gearing our activities so that every veteran who qualifies for training or education will be able to begin his work immediately," the Veterans' Administration Manager said. "With a steady increase in the number of applications in recent months, we are expecting a distinct trend toward additional schooling or vocational training."

Harley A. Smith is chief of the Education and Training Division of the Veterans' Administration in Alabama, with headquarters in Montgomery.

Vocational rehabilitation is available for the veteran of World War II who received disabilities in active service and who is handicapped in his vocation because of his disability, Mr. Smith explained. This training is for a period not to exceed four years.

"While these veterans are engaged in this training," Mr. Smith continued, "their pensions for disabilities will be increased to $92 a month if they are single and have no dependents. Men with dependents will be paid an additional $11.50 a month for a wife; $5.75 additional for each child; and $11.50 additional for each dependent parent.

"Moreover, the government, through the Veterans' Administration, will pay all thee expenses of instruction, such as tuition, fees and the cost of books and supplies. Training may be provided in school, college, business school, trade school, or in a shop of business establishment."

The educational provision of the G. I. Bill of Rights authorizes the government, through the Veterans' Administration, to assist the veteran in completing his education or obtaining training that he desires.

"Any veteran of World War II," Mr. Smith said, "who has had active service after September 16th, 1940; whose period of service was 90 days or more, and who was discharged under conditions other than dishonorable, is eligible for this benefit.

"All expenses of instruction will be paid and the veteran will receive a subsistence allowance of $50 a month if he has no dependents and $75 a month if he has dependents.

"Each veteran who qualifies will be eligible for one year's schooling or training. If his entrance into service interfered with his education, or if he was under 25 years of age at the time he entered service, he is entitled to an additional amount of schooling equal to the time he spent in service, but not to exceed a total of four years."

Full information on these programs may be obtained by writing the Veterans' Administration, Montgomery 10 Ala.

VETS OF FOREIGN WARS TO MEET AUGUST 27TH

The Veterans of Foreign Wars Administration will meet at the courthouse next Monday evening, August 27th, at 8 o'clock.

PRIMER ON TOMORROW

That bright new tomorrow we have all been seeking is at hand.

A huge backlog of orders for goods of all kinds is only being withheld until manufacturing restrictions are ended. The greatest accumulation of savings in the history of the American people is ready to back up this pent-up consumer demand. In fact, prosperity is right around the corner provided only that we, as a nation, enjoy full employment and shall continue to have full employment only as long as we [illegible] experience full, peace-time production.

"But we have the orders and buying power," you ask, "what then, is to prevent our manufacturing industries from operating full blast? Certainly enough steel and tin and rubber and everything will be available to make the flatirons and radios and all the other things we may want to buy!"

True! Yet there is a danger! Economists predict that a bottleneck of our whole conversion can be pulpwood.

Millions of cords of pulpwood are going to be needed immediately to supply cartons, boxes, crates, wadding, wrapping and other forms of packaging for peacetime refrigerators, flatirons, shoes, foodstuffs and clothing. Our Army and Navy will continue to need paper and paperboard for packaging supplies for our troops, and if our soldiers, sailors and marines were to be returned to this country at the rate of 10,000 per day, it would require almost two years before military demands for paper could be expected to relax.

The truth is that new uses for paper have skyrocketed during the war, and only the patriotism of the American farmer has made it possible to keep abreast of growing civilian and military needs.

Inadequate pulpwood supplies could disrupt our whole re-employment program. Manufacturers will certainly not hire workers to make products which cannot be shipped. In short words, jobs—America's No. 1 peacetime need—are keyed to one of this community's principal products—pulpwood.

The top quality Pulpwood you cut NOW, is job insurance for tomorrow in the unsettled days ahead

Men In Service May Become Legion Members

"Persons remaining in the armed forces after cessation of hostilities as fixed by the United States Government immediately become eligible to membership in American Legion, prior to discharge or separation from service."

Chilton County Post Six American Legion is now launching an intensive membership drive among service men and women as well as those still in the service. The American Legion bids fair to become one of the strongest organizations in the country during the next decade, and those thousands in Chilton County eligible to membership will want to avail themselves of the advantages afforded by the Legion.

Those wishing to join should see the adjutant, J. Hance Alred, and become full-fledged members at your earliest convenience.

DENNIS REUNION

A reunion of the Dennis family will be held at Union Church in Coosa County next Sunday, August 26th. All members of the family and their friends are cordially invited to be present.

Japs Guard Against Uprising; Plan to Demobilize 7,000,000; Nation Shifts to Peace Economy

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Following the joyous news of Japan's capitulation, many persons the country over reverently made their way to church to offer prayers in gratitude for the cessation of hostilities. The crowd worshipping on the steps of St. Patrick's cathedral in New York City was typical, with a constant stream arriving to express their thanksgiving.

PEACE:
Tighten Imperial Grip

Even as General MacArthur arranged the complicated procedure for Japanese surrender and occupation, the U. S. prepared for the major readjustments looming ahead before the nation once again could tread the paths of peace.

With the Japanese government anxious to bring about a cessation of firing before the preliminary surrender parley in Manila, the conference was postponed to permit members of the imperial household to fly to the far-flung Asiatic battlefronts to enforce the emperor's orders to lay down arms.

Appointment of tough and able 57-year-old Prince Higashi-Kuni as Jap premier disclosed an effort to bring all of the weight of the imperial family behind the surrender acceptance to avert any outbreak of diehards which might upset the internal situation. A second cousin of the emperor and an uncle of the empress, Higashi-Kuni has had a long career in the Jap army, serving as chief of the military aviation board, commander of defense headquarters and a member of the supreme war council.

While it was expected that some fanatical officers may try to fight on, or commit hara-kiri, the great mass of Japanese were expected to give up peaceably. "There will be no trouble when American soldiers go to Japan if it is the wish of the emperor," said one Jap naval officer. "The army, navy and Japanese people exist only by the will of the emperor."

U. S. Demobilizes

With the end of the war, the services' carefully prepared demobilization plans were scheduled to be put into effect, with the draft continuing for men under 25 years of age unless the President or congress ordained otherwise.

Approximately 261,000 enlisted men and 40,000 officers are eligible for release under the navy's newly announced discharge plan requiring 44 points for the enlisted men and 49 for the officers. Under the program, one-half point is allowed for each year of age up to the nearest birthday; one-half point for each full month of active duty since September 1, 1939, and 10 extra points for dependents regardless of number. Requirements for WAVES are about 14 points lower, with the same credit computations.

Designed to relieve men with the longest service, the navy program will permit release of about 2,000,000 men within the next 12 to 18 months, which, with the army's plan for discharging 5,000,000 G.I.s within a year, will result in a total demobilization of 7,000,000 by 1947.

Except for four categories of specialists, all army personnel with 85 points or more will be immediately released, along with men 38 years of age or over. Until such a time as the size of the occupation force needed in Japan can be determined, however, there will be no reduction in the present point system, it was indicated.

With G.I.s in the Pacific eligible for discharge due to be released, men with low-point scores in the U. S. or with only brief European service must prepare to accept overseas assignments, the army declared.

Ease Controls

Though five million people were expected to be discharged from war work following cessation of hostilities, industrial plans for a rapid reconversion to civilian manufacture promised early re-employment.

Fortunately, such basic industries as steel will be able to furnish civilian materials with little delay, and plans have been set up to continue government supervision over scarce items to permit more even distribution and prevent speculative hoarding and pressure for price increases.

With its financial position greatly bolstered by heavy wartime production, and with banking funds available before settlement of cancelled war contracts, industry generally is strongly heeled for reconversion. Meanwhile, civilians have record cash balances and bond holdings, and will be able to draw unemployment compensation to tide them over the early transition period.

While manpower controls were removed with Japan's defeat, wage checks were retained to prevent an inflationary spiral, and efforts made to minimize strike threats.

With another bumper crop on tap, farmers could look to continued heavy government purchases for the large military and naval establishments and foreign relief, and an uncertain domestic market dependent on the speed of the reconversion program. Under congressional legislation, however, farmers have been assured of federal price support for at least two years after the war.

Among the first effects of reduced military requirements was the removal of gas, fuel oil, canned fruits, vegetables and juices and other processed foods from the rationing lists. At the same time, price control was lifted from such items as jewelry, sports equipment, toys selling at 25 cents or less, cigarette lighters, pipes, luxury furs and garments, some photographic apparatus and notions.

Because of the shortage of supplies, and no possibility for immediate increases, rationing will be retained on meats, fats and oils, butter, sugar, shoes and tires.

In the case of tires, OPA announced, drivers of cars used for occupational purposes will continue to receive cords according to the importance of their work, and "A" card holders will be given consideration in cases of unusual hardship.

Though a check will be kept on shoes, men's and women's wear manufactured before March 1, 1944, and priced at $3.50 or less a pair, will be ration-free through to September 29.

Army Teaches G.I.s Virtues of Thrift

How widely the members of the armed forces have been taught the virtues of thrift is indicated by figures supplied by the war department office of dependency benefits.

As of the end of June, there were 3,714,910 active monthly Class-E allotments-of-pay, which are voluntary assignments of pay to a soldier's dependents, a bank, an insurance company, etc., and are distinct from the family allowances to which the government contributes.

Over 40 million dollars have gone to insurance companies in the last three years to pay premiums on soldiers' civilian life insurance.

In June alone, $263,227 went to building and loan and savings and loan associations under the recently authorized plan permitting G.I. Joe to save for a home.

CROPS:
Another Good Year

Owing to record yields of wheat, oats, peanuts, rice, peaches, pecans and commercial truck crops; near record prospects for hay, tobacco, soybeans, sugar cane, and large production for potatoes, sorghum grains and flaxseed, the department of agriculture predicted the 1945 harvest would be the third best in history.

With the wheat crop estimated at a record 1,146,283,000 bushels on the basis of conditions as of August 1, and with oats at 1,546,032,000 bushels, feed grain production was at a high level despite the estimated drop in the corn harvest to 2,844,478,000 bushels.

One of the bright spots in the crop picture was the estimated increase in sugar cane production to 6,976,000 tons, and rise in sugar beet output to 9,332,000 tons, promising to relieve the tight supply in the commodity.

Conservation Needed

After the most extensive study of farmland resources ever undertaken by any nation, the soil conservation service reported that more than 90 per cent of the country's farmland was in need of treatment to protect it from erosion and maintain fertility.

More than 3,600,000 man years of labor would be required for the huge task, the service said, along with 327,441 years of motor equipment; 1,089,978 years of horse-drawn facilities, and 2,544,106 tons of seed.

Of the 417,561,000 acres of farmland now under actual cultivation, the service said that 43,000,000 should be retired because of steepness, erosion, wetness and stone.

LABORITE BRITAIN

With Great Britain and all the rest of the world awaiting the pattern of postwar life in the United Kingdom, King George VI presented the victorious Labor party's legislative program, with nationalization of the Bank of England and the coal mines heading the agenda.

At the same time, the king revealed that the war's end would not bring about a release of wartime restrictions, with the Laborites seeking power during the reconversion period to maintain control over materials and services to assure proper distribution at fair prices.

Besides nationalizing the Bank of England to promote employment and development, and socializing the coal mines as part of a program to integrate the fuel and power industry, the Laborites propose to reorganize transport; provide social security and industrial insurance; buy land for housing, and set up machinery for planning investments in new business.

WORLD RELIEF:
Needs Boosted

With the termination of the war in the Pacific expected to multiply its problems, the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration Director Herbert Lehman declared that more than two billion dollars in additional funds would be needed to help stricken countries before their restoration of stable economies.

Speaking at the third international conference of UNRRA at London, Lehman revealed plans for coping with the Asiatic relief problem, disclosing that plans already have been formulated for the shipment of supplies to China over the Stilwell road and through coastal ports. Of the 100 million Chinese reported destitute, many are expected to succumb even if relief should be offered immediately.

The London meeting was enlivened by Australia's demand to broaden the UNRRA control council to nine members instead of the present Big Four to provide smaller nations with greater representation in the allocation of funds.

FRANCE:
Break Marshal

Leader of France's liberation movement, Gen. Charles de Gaulle spared the life of Marshal Henri Petain by commuting his death sentence for plotting against the internal safety of the country to life imprisonment.

Nevertheless, the jury's additional sentence of national indignity stood, imposed even after Petain's final assertion: "My thought, my only thought, was to remain with the people of France as I promised instead of abandoning them in their agony. . . . My honor belongs to your country. . . ."

Most controversial French case of the century, Petain's trial found the country sharply divided, with charges on the one hand that the old marshal had delivered the state up to the Germans, and counter-charges on the other that prewar politicians were using the proceedings to whitewash themselves.

CONSUMER BACKLOG:
Big Order

The American people bought nearly 23 billion dollars less of automobiles and parts, and furniture and housefurnishings in the three years, 1942-44, than they would have if these goods had been available in prewar volume, the department of commerce estimates.

In automobiles and parts actual expenditures totaled 1.8 billions, with expected expenditures under normal conditions, 16.2 billions and the deficiency in purchases, 14.4 billions.

Washington Digest

Country Warned to Guard Against Race Disturbances

Insecurity in Reconversion Period May Be Cause for Smouldering Resentment; Minor Incident May Start Trouble.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

There is a small group in Washington very much concerned over a matter which is a part of reconversion and about which they can do very little. That is the question of race riots likely to accompany demobilization.

I was surprised to learn how predictable these clashes are, from the following statement by Alfred McClung Lee in a pamphlet produced by a non-profit agency, the American Council of American Race Relations. It was this:

"The federal office of facts and figures (later called the office of War Information) had a confidential report 15 months before the 1943 Detroit race riot that included this sentence: 'Unless some socially constructive steps are taken shortly, the tension that is developing is very likely to burst into active conflict.'"

The day after the rioting began, the Detroit Free Press stated: "Two months ago everybody in Detroit familiar with the situation knew that race riots were inevitable."

It is worth noting that the professional observers were much farther ahead than the newspaper — and newspaper reporters are pretty highly trained investigators themselves. And they did know what was coming well in advance.

But the fact remained that nobody did anything about it.

And that is where you and I step into the picture.

Now nobody but a very small class of professional incitors of riot want race riots anymore than anyone but a very small class of professional criminals are in favor of crime. But most people do not realize that these clashes can be avoided and very few indeed realize that they are symptoms and not the disease itself.

The basic cause of the group tensions which burst into savage flame, destroy property, interfere with business and nearly always cost lives, is insecurity, just as insecurity is one of the basic causes of wars. A man with a job and firm prospects of keeping it who lives in healthy and decent surroundings does not want a riot with anybody. It is the man who is unhappy and because he is not able to do anything about it, who looks around for a scapegoat upon whom he can blame all his troubles. He naturally turns against a group whose members have a different appearance and different customs from his own.

The long-range cure for this disease is better living conditions, housing and employment. But it is not of the long-range treatment I want to speak, but of the immediate, simple things that you and I can do to stop these tensions before they break.

Seven Steps for Breaking Tension

First, there are seven things you must know about. One of the first signs of trouble is the rumor crop. You begin to hear a lot of stories most of which later will prove to have been untrue. They may be started by subversive groups; some will have a grain of truth in them. They will include tales of planned, imminent violence; of some group arming itself for attack or outbreak. Then come stories of violent assault, crime and murder. This creates the beginning of tension; the group accused becomes frightened and shows it. This lends color to the tales.

Then come the "incidents."

Incidents usually begin to occur in crowded places. They might be passed off and forgotten if a background of hate, fear and suspicion had not been built up. As one observer said to me: "Riots always start when folks get out and bump into each other."

The third point to look for when it is clear that rumors have been thick and incidents have begun to happen is some subversive group which may be promoting the trouble for its own ends. Some of these groups will have very high and mighty ideals and very frequently they will be wrapped up in the flag. (Ku Klux, Black Legion, etc.)

The fourth point to watch is crime reports because it is really the hooligan element which finally steps in to do the actual rioting.

The fifth is the police attitude. If there is evidence of increased friendliness with the hooligan element and of a distrust of the police by the minority group it usually means that the tension has reached a high point — the forces of order and the forces of disorder are making common cause against the alleged threat of the minority.

The two other danger points are congestion, of which I spoke before (bumping into each other) which may grow out of crowded housing, and labor conditions where the minority protests or appears to threaten to protest discrimination in hiring and firing.

With these points as a guide any citizen can learn to recognize the symptoms of danger. There are plenty of people in any community who know what is happening — the people whose work takes them into the danger zones, like social workers and police reporters. A school teacher can learn a lot from what the children say and do.

But long before the situation reaches even the rumor stage there must be emergency planning in the community. A program must be set up in which certain groups have certain definite things to do the moment the "observers" see the danger signals. Here they are:

Be sure the mayor knows exactly what steps to take to get the help of the state militia. Have the clergymen lined up to use their influence and if necessary appear in person —mobs respect the church. Work out school programs, radio programs, newspaper campaigns—the veterans organizations and the boy scouts will help, the civic and public utilities, labor and business will co-operate.

While President Truman was still on the high seas en route for home, he and his staff began the careful briefing of the correspondents, telling them many details which were not for publication but which will gradually find their way into the public prints.

They also gave out specific news items for publication, one of which stated that it was largely the suggestions of the American delegation which made up the agenda. This may or may not have been aimed at comments in Washington by anti-administration spokesmen who charged that the communique of the Big Three seemed to reflect chiefly Russian demands.

I believe that history will show that the President's claim will be literally true. This may not mean that America got the majority of the things she wanted but rather that what could be agreed upon was largely the result of the President's policy of insisting on a solution by compromise rather than a stalemate.

The great test of America's position will come later. We are the most conservative of the great powers. We are the only one in which capitalism is threatened by attack from within more than from without. I mean that the majority of the nation undoubtedly favor capitalism whereas the present British government (the only other large democratic power as we accept democracy) is socialistic. Dangers to the American capitalistic system, most observers in Washington agree, come from a small group whose selfish interests are the greatest threat to the system of private enterprise.

Have you had MALARIA?

. . . IF SO WATCH OUT

The medical profession knows that though a person may be cured of common malaria they may have it come back on them. So, if you are once more feeling tired, run down, have pains in back and legs, feel weak and bilious, no appetite and nervous—though chills and fever haven't struck you yet, and you have common malaria—it doesn't pay to take any chances. Try a bottle of Ozidine. Ozidine is made to combat malaria, give you iron to help creation of red blood cells. If the first bottle doesn't satisfy you your money will be returned. Ozidine has been used for over 50 years. Get a bottle today at your drug store.

Labor Costs Reduced and Farm Efficiency Greatly Increased With Improved Mechanical Developments

Farm Equipment Has Now Mechanized Farm Work, Now No' Brother to an Ox.'

By George L. Gillette

Editor's Note:—George L. Gillette is president of the Farm Equipment Institute and has long been active in the manufacture and distribution of farm machinery and equipment.

Agriculture has come a long way since the days when the forked stick, the scythe and the flail were the rule rather than the exception, but it was not until the advent of farm machinery, a little more than a century ago, that agricultural practices made any real progress. Even in the early 19th century the methods used by the fellaheen of ancient Egypt were still followed, even in many of the more advanced countries. And then in the space of 50 years, agriculture made greater strides than in the preceding 50 centuries.

With the coming of the plow, the reaper and the other earlier types of farm machines, farming, though not an easy life, certainly became more attractive than it was to Millet's "Man With the Hoe." With the development of other types of equipment, which have followed in rapid succession, agriculture's progress has steadily continued. No longer does the tiller of the soil fit the poet's description of "stolid and stunned, a brother to the ox." No longer does the plowman homeward plod his weary way. He rides.

Plow used on Gen. George Washington's plantation in Virginia. Has wood moldboard, wood standard, no landside. Flat iron share and iron coulter.

The horse-drawn cultivator and grain binder have given way in many areas to the tractor, cultivator and the combine. Harvesting of the corn crop is now performed in ever increasing measure by the tractor-operated corn-picker; cotton costs are being reduced by the mechanical cotton picker; the primitive pump is succeeded by the electrically-operated water system; hand milking by machine milking. The heretofore laborious job of making hay is becoming less of a back-breaking chore through the newer machines for harvesting and storing of this important crop — such as power mowers, rakes, pick-up balers, forage harvesters. And so it goes — each step an improvement over the old; less labor in growing and harvesting of food and feed crops; in livestock raising; in horticulture or dairying. In every branch of agriculture, the story is the same; increased efficiency through use of the machine; reduced effort on the part of the operator; more time for the better things of life, impossible of attainment in former times when the days were not long enough even to perform the single job of raising the food for the family.

In discussing the part which modern farm equipment plays in saving time and labor for the farmer, we are apt to overlook some of the important services which it renders in the job of food production.

Modern farm equipment has done more than any other one thing to neutralize weather hazards. It enables the farmer to both control and shorten his crop handling time, thus increasing the amount of work that can be done in the hours of sunshine allotted to him; weed control and eradication can be adapted to individual weeds; controlled plowing depths do much to bury such insect pests as the corn borer, Hessian fly and the boll weevil; quick and positive erosion control is made possible through modern, mechanized farm equipment. All of these tend to increase acre yields and, in many cases, save entire crops.

Cost Per Unit Decreased.

One hundred years ago, with tools then available, it required several days of man labor to grow and harvest an acre of wheat. Today, in the Great Plains areas of the United States, expenditure of less than 10 minutes of man labor per bushel is not unknown when modern methods and machines are used. In other crops, the story is similar and, because of such methods and the marvels of present day equipment, it has been possible for the farmers of the Americas, Great Britain, or others of the United Nations to maintain or expand their production of food in the war period, despite reduction of workers on the land. Without the aid of such labor and time-saving machines, there is little doubt that the millions of men in the armed services and the many millions more at home would have long since faced serious food crises that might have jeopardized the outcome of this world struggle.

It is true that thousands of persons in war-torn countries, cut off from normal food supplies, have perished, and that in areas where the population still depends upon primitive agricultural methods, starvation is not uncommon. But such disasters serve to underline the importance of substituting improved food producing equipment for the hand tools of the ancients. Man can get along without many things, but not without food or the means of producing it.

With the wider distribution of present-day equipment and the new, even more efficient "machine tools of agriculture" to be available after the war, is it too much to hope that the scourge of famine may be stamped out entirely? In any event, the manufacturers of farm equipment can be relied upon to do their utmost toward that end.

In the meantime, they are continuing to produce both for civilians and military purposes.

Doing Big War Job.

Their factories have been turning out immense quantities of munitions and material for use on land, sea and air, and they will continue to do so as long as the emergency requires. They have produced more repair parts in the last several years than at any time in their history, to make sure that machines already on the farms will continue to function. They have manufactured as many complete machines as available materials, manpower and governmental restrictions would permit and have maintained throughout this period the high standards for which American farm machinery is noted throughout the world.

Products of the farm equipment industry have always been sturdily built to take the beating farm work demands; some idea of their sturdy construction is indicated by the orders for repair and replacement parts, received by manufacturers, for machines 30 and even 40 years old, still operating. Today, equipment going into the hands of the farmer is better engineered than ever.

Knowing something of the men who design and manufacture these farm machines, I am convinced that the products for the postwar era will be even better. The history of the farm equipment industry has been one of continuous progress and of ever-increasing service to agriculture. I am confident that this record will be even brighter in the years ahead.

LIFE OF MACHINERY

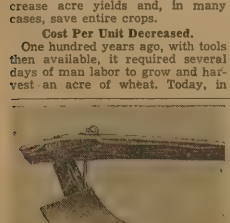
The life of farm machinery can be greatly extended as proven by tests conducted at the University of Missouri. Corrosion and lack of care of unhoused farm machinery cut its life in half, and added to the upkeep cost. A record on a few of the implements:

Equipment	Life Housed	Unhoused
Walking plows	20 years	15 years
Gang plows	20 years	10 years
Corn planters	8 years	4 years
Cultivators	20 years	8 years
Mowers	12 years	7 years
Binders	12 years	5 years
Wagons	24 years	19 years
Disk harrows	15 years	8 years

Modern Machine Farmer Builds Up for Prosperity

For years the farm equipment industry — dealers, manufacturers, and trade publications — have been active advocates of soil and water conservation and improvement of soil fertility. One-crop farms, especially where tobacco, cotton and corn were the cash crops, began bringing home to them the fact that the nation's wealth was leaching down the hillsides and into the streams that carried it to the ocean. Such lands were rapidly passing out of production, ceasing to pay taxes and to support prosperous farm families and communities. Villages, even counties, faded with the farms as they "wore out."

To awaken the nation to the consequences of this trend, if not counteracted, the industry long has laid stress upon the long-pull benefits of soil conservation and the part that farmers can play in the program by using the tools already on the farms, and available for soil conservation efforts.



Contour farming, terracing and crop rotations in the United States go back to Thomas Jefferson's work in Virginia well over a century ago. Writing in the American Farmer in 1821, the ex-President of the United States, in a signed article, answered inquiries from readers of that pioneer publication as to contour farming and about the plow he used on his son-in-law's Virginia farm. But Jefferson's efforts to teach the pioneer American farmer to build a permanent agriculture, and with it community and national prosperity, were soon forgotten in the rush to virgin lands that opened up to settlers as the Louisiana Purchase and other territorial acquisitions beckoned young farmers toward the mid-West and the Pacific.

Facsimile of original McCormick reaper, which proved one of agriculture's most important machinery developments.

While good farmers on their own initiative followed conservation practices, comparatively little was done in an organized manner until the United States department of agriculture in the '20s began taking active notice of the erosion of top soil on cultivated lands; set up erosion-control experiment stations and instituted an intensive study of soil erosion. In 1935 the Soil Conservation service was established and by the middle of last year, 45 of the states had soil conservation districts totaling 1,114 and embracing 620,491,197 acres.

Being vitally interested in this effort long before there was an organized conservation program, the industry naturally got behind and cooperated with the United States government in helping the farmer solve his land problems when the nationwide program was inaugurated. Through personal effort; in their advertisements, and booklets on the subject farm equipment companies, their field representatives and dealers have made helpful suggestions to the farmer on soil fertility, water capacity and preventing the loss of soils.

REPAIR FOR 1946

It is always easier, costs less and takes less time to prevent a farm machinery breakdown than to fix one. According to present indications, the farmers of 1946 will be utilizing the same prewar machinery that they operated in 1944.

Every farm should have a comfortable work shop, where all machinery can be placed under shelter and gone over on rainy days for the long winter months ahead. As equipment finishes its job, it should be cleaned and put away.

JIMMY CARROLL, young tenor who headlines his own CBS show, "Jimmy Carroll Sings," proves that the place to find good voices is in radio's vocal groups. For five years Jimmy sang in the Ben Yost, Ray Block and Lyn Murray choirs; before that he'd been buying women's wear for a big chain of department stores, and singing for fun. Last fall, when James Melton was taken ill, Jimmy substituted, with only a half hour's rehearsal. That brought him to the attention of his present sponsors—and his radio program has led to his being pursued by the producers of two musical shows. His present program replaces the Lyn Murray show, whose vocal director he once worked for!

Cecil B. DeMille has been with Paramount since its early days, and now, from August 26 to September 29, the studio will celebrate its "Third of a Century" anniversary. So he speaks from experience when he says that Gloria Swanson was the most outstanding feminine star of all those he's directed. He discovered her in a Mack Sennett comedy.

Ginny Simms isn't too busy with her new picture—it's "Shady Lady," with Charles Coburn and Robert Paige — to think about her new radio show. It'll be a half-hour show, taking over the Jerry Wayne spot. She'll continue giving a break to ex-servicemen who were professional entertainers before the war, but with only one on each program, and will also have guest comedians.

Betty Hutton collected about 40 different perfumes to take with her on that next overseas trip. She discovered on her Pacific tour that front - line G.I.s want to get acquainted again with the fragrances the girls they used to know are using.

"Policing Germany," latest RKO, "This Is America" release, was filmed in a typical German city under American military occupation. It presents the problems of the police force, shows the critical food situation, and the steps taken to check the spread of disease.

Dan Duryea, who has another of those vicious roles in "Along Came Jones," still shudders at the memory of his first Broadway role. He played a G-man in "Dead End"—and opening night the property man forgot to load the revolvers with fresh blanks. So there were the G-men, involved in a gun battle, with guns that wouldn't fire, and the audience longing to shout "Bang, bang!"

Richard Tucker, who's replacing John Charles Thomas on the air this summer, is a brother-in-law of Jan Peerce's, and at the moment the two are competing for the star spot on a new air show to be launched next month. Movie companies are also after Tucker — he may be seen with Deanna Durbin, we hear. And he's been signed for 10 guest shots on the Chicago Theater of the Air, on NBC.

Members of the company of "Great Moments in Music" burst into applause at the end of a rehearsal recently. Karen Kemple had stepped out of the chorus to take the place of Annamary Dickey, who was unable to make the rehearsal. Karen's on her way up!

A haze enveloped NBC's studio A during a rehearsal of Eddie Cantor's summer replacement show, "Wednesday With You," and someone called "Fire!" Before a small panic could get bigger, a quick-thinker in the control booth said, "Don't worry, kids — it's only the script."

ODDS AND ENDS—On a fishing trip, Ray Milland was pretty proud when he caught a 16-pound bluefin tuna—then his wife, Muriel, pulled in an 18 pounder. . . . The ancestors of Gale Storm, Monogram's rising star, were among the first seven families to settle in Texas. . . . Sonny Tufts went to Hollywood with an elegant wardrobe, but he's always either worn a uniform in pictures, or been cast in costume stories. . . . Rhonda Fleming, who made her debut in "Spellbound," has a lead role in "Abilene." . . . Joan Tetzel just must be a success in her first picture, "Duel in the Sun"; left a Broadway hit for it.

Tree Gets Right of Way

A very independent tree is a pine growing between Cheyenne and Laramie, Wyo. It's a tree that has moved a railroad, for when the Union Pacific laid their tracks through the section in 1867 the roadbed was placed around the tree.

What are the two most important words we have learned in this war?

NOT long ago, Russian armies were lined up on the Oder, facing desperate Nazi resistance before Berlin. On the 14th of February, nearly 4,000 bombers and fighters, part British, part American, flew to that vital sector and smashed at enemy strong points and concentrations. Some planes actually unloaded their bombs only 12 miles in front of the Russian spearhead!

That was Combined Operations.

In Burma, a British Admiral led tough U. S. Rangers, Tommies from all parts of the Empire, Indian Ghurkas and Sikhs, Chinese foot soldiers, carrying weapons made in Bridgeport. All wore different uniforms. But all shared in their hearts a single determination—to destroy the arch-destroyers, to conquer the common enemy.

That is Combined Operations — two words that affect the future of mankind.

We have learned the lesson that to win this war we had to fight side by side with our allies, regardless of race, religion or politics.

And now, with durable peace within our grasp, we cannot abandon that lesson. Unity, efficiency, fellowship, international cooperation must be continued.

Every American citizen, every man and woman in the nation, has a definite contribution to make toward seeing that a permanent international body to maintain peace be made a going concern.

We must add our strength to the surging movement toward unity among all men of good-will in every part of the globe. We must pledge our unswerving support to that movement, give our statesmen and legislators the support they need to make it effective. We must determine to make the necessary start, even though the first step is not as altogether perfect as we might wish.

Will you play your part in this greatest of all Combined Operations? Will you take your place in the ranks with your fellow men in the striving toward permanent peace?

First, get and keep yourself informed about the specific proposals for peace and international cooperation which are now before us. Read and listen to the discussions of them. Ask your Public Library for material on them.

Second, interest your friends in these questions. Get them discussed in any social, labor, business, religious or other groups to which you belong.

Third, say what you think—for or against—in writing, to your Congressman and Senators, to your newspaper. Declare yourself. Speak up.

Work today for peace, that your children may live tomorrow.

Lies the Might of America

IDAHO LUMBER

Logging and milling for 105 years, the Potlatch Forests, Inc., of Idaho, expects to be operating at least another century. The industry started in 1840 around the first mission of Rev. H. H. Spalding and Marcus Whitman in the Clearwater country. "The largest white pine sawmill in the world" turns out lumber at Lewiston with the help of 800 employes. Lumber in abundance is a great national asset contributing to the Nation's resources that stand behind War Bonds. U. S. Treasury Department

Lies the Might of America

FOOD FOR ALL

Besides Iowa's great waving fields of corn, its fields of other grains will feed millions, provide jobs for thousands and add to the Nation's wealth to guarantee War Bonds. Almost 10 million acres are at work. Annually the harvest amounts to 596 million bushels, worth $471,469,000. Iowa grows 201 million bushels of oats, 38 million bushels of soybeans and 55 million pounds of popcorn. Onions, asparagus and melons sprout and ripen there to help feed the world and win the war. U. S. Treasury Department

Gasoline Is Unrationed Now And "Chick" Keeps His Promise To His Customers

When gasoline was rationed and all were doing their best to conserve for the armed forces the City Grocery, as did other businesses, stopped their daily deliveries.

According to "Chick" Fipuette, owner, this emergency is over and daily deliveries have been resumed. He says there will be two deliveries each day now that there is plenty of gasoline and requests his customers to make their orders early. The Phone No. is 180.

This is Chick's fulfillment of a promise made his customers when delivery service was discontinued. He stated then that at the earliest possible time he would again give the best delivery service in the city. "This," he stated, "I intend to do." Adding, "I appreciate your business and will serve you to the best of my ability."

Just a few, it's true, but Mister, it's a mighty Goodyear to go DeLuxe . . . to get extra service and safety at no extra cost. So, if you've got a certificate, hold on to it until we can get hold of a Goodyear DeLuxe for you.

FOLKS & THINGS ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

We highly commend City Officers, Anderson and Foshee, for their work Saturday night in ridding the streets of the inebriated party who would not keep his voice down or his language clean. When one so forgets himself that he cannot conduct himself as a gentleman, then he should stay at home—or suffer the consequences.

An interested reader comes in and tells us that he hears much talk about the cafes closing on last Wednesday. He says those travelers caught in Clanton on that day and those who depend solely on the cafes for something to eat are deeply grateful to Mrs. Wilkins at Fullen's Cafe. If Fullen's Cafe had closed as others did, quite a large number of people would have suffered real hunger.

One of our returning soldiers tells us that the army rifle weighs 8.69 pounds, but after carrying it for several hours the decimal point drops out.

We believe Rip Burnett got quicker delivery of new trucks after V-J Day than anybody. War's end was announced Tuesday night at six and while at work Thursday morning at seven o'clock, Rip and Sleepy Miller, drove up with two brand new trucks. "Sleepy" says that after hearing about V-J Day the day before they just called and had 'em made and sent down. Sounds more like a tall tale, doesn't it?

When you see Marvin Durbin next, congratulate him. He has been promoted to District Supervisor with Farm Security Administration. Marvin has been in Clanton with FSA for the past 11 year and says he hates to leave. His new position will be the supervision of 14 counties in Central Alabama, of which Chilton is one. Mr. Durbin will go to Auburn with headquarters his offices and headquarters will be located there. We wish him well in is new place.

We believe that traffic has doubled on our highways within the past week. Now that gasoline is not rationed and [illegible] everyone seems to be "catching it up" on their driving. Remember this: Good tires and good automobiles are still rationed. What's left of the ones we are driving will not stand up under the strain of too much speed. So to protect yourself and the lives of others, drive carefully.

Glad to see Miss Ada Bennett back at work after a two weeks vacation. Miss Ada is one of our most popular young business women and has managed Johnson Fashion Shop since it's opening here several years ago.

Here's that rumor long working again—This time its about the Dixie Cafe opening 24-hours a day in the near future. When the "Old Dixie" gets to staying open day and night again, then it will really seem like the war's over. Time was when you could drop in there in the wee small hours on your way home for a sandwich and drink and always find some of the "gang" doing the same thing—remember?

Yes Sir, we nearly fell off the type case. This morning we were minding our own business and constructing an advertisement for Clanton Laundry & Drying Company, when a gentleman about forty odd years of age came and asked for a job. Such a thing as that hasn't happened in years, and we couldn't take it. Without a thought we quickly said: "Bless you, my friend, sit down." Then we told Calvin Robinson, who operates the linotype, to run lock the front door—and quick. But alas, our dreams were shattered as in the past. He knew naught of the printing industry. He was looking for work around a Service Station. We don't know what confused him. There's a lot of hot air around a printing office but no gasoline.

ELECTRIC SERVICE BEING EXTENDED TO STATE FARMS

Some 2,000 farms and other rural establishments in Alabama will receive electric service as a result of loan allotments made by the Rural Electrification Administration in May, June and July. During this three months' period, REA allotted loans of more than $400,000 to rural electric cooperatives in the state. This money will be used to build new rural power lines as fast as materials and manpower can be obtained.

REA borrowers plan their lines to make service available to all consumers in a given area without leaving unserved sections and farms stranded on the fringes. This is known as "area coverage" and contrasts sharply with former methods where rural power lines were built only along highways and into thickly settled farming areas promising high revenues immediately.

REA cooperative officials point out that all farmers and other rural consumers wanting electricity should sign up without delay as the number of signed members is important in determining which lines are to be built first.

Ordinarily, farmers will be asked to apply for membership in the co-op and pay the membership fee—usually $5. The membership fee entitles the consumer to receive electric service at the cooperative's established rates, which are based on actual cost of service.

Up to July 1, REA had allotted more than $15,000,000 in loan funds for rural electrification in Alabama. The borrowers were operating 10,000 miles of REA-financed power lines serving 41,000 farm families and other rural consumers. The Alabama rural electric cooperatives are paying off their REA loans on schedule from revenues derived from consumers' electric bills.

COUNTY SCHOOLS TO RECEIVE $100,000

Figures showing the amount which various county and city school boards will receive from the Building Commission fund were released today from the State Department of Education. The figures represent a one-time lump sum allocation from surplus which has been accumulating in the educational trust fund for a number of years. The recent legislative act creating the State Building Commission set aside a fund of $22,000,000 for a building program. Of this $12,000,000 is from the educational trust fund surplus, to go for educational use, for debt service and capital outlay only, with the law providing that not more than 12 percent of this shall go to institutions of higher learning, and 88 percent, or $10, 560,000 shal be allocated to county and city school boards on a teacher unit basis. It is further provided that decision as to whether such funds shall be used for capital outlay or debt service shall be made by the local boards and aproved first by the State Board of Education and then by the Building Commission. Of the $10,560,000 allocated to local boards, $8,435,022 goes to county boards of education and $2,124,978 to city boards.

In a general letter to county and city superintendents, Dr. E. B. Norton, State Superintendent, asks that they clear with their respective boards whether they wish to spend their share of the fund for debt service or for buildings or other capital outlay. He suggested that Building Commission money could be profitably used to retire callable warrants of indebtedness, or outstanding unfunded debt, but that [illegible] warrants the local board would probably have to pay too much of a premium to make their purchase and retirement economical. "In requesting the immediate release of the Building Commission Fund to surplus to the exact amont desired, if any, for (a) debt retirement, (b) emergency bilding, and (c) the purchase of new buses, including number of buses" Dr. Norton wrote.

Figures from Dr. Norton's office show that the county board of education of Chilton County will receive $100,559 from the Building Commission Fund.

LOCAL SOLDIER TELLS OF THINGS HE HAS LEARNED ABOUT WAR

Lawrence A. Duffey, formerly of Clanton, wrote us a most interesting letter this week. With the letter was some opinions of things about war that Lawrence ha gathered since leaving civilian life. We think that they are well worth passing on to you:

I thought I had learned lots as a civilian but had lots more to learn as an American soldier. In a pour ing rain I learned that the Army did what was scheduled regardless of weather; and one day in April I [illegible] what it was to leave a [illegible] wife and three babies and since then things have grown steadily worse.

I took the gloomiest ride and have since learned that I took an unknown ride into a land of unsympathetic drill sergeants, and the [illegible] have lost it's last bit of [illegible] I learned to call HOME [illegible] were not decent barns and thought nothing of it; also to live in hot, dirty [illegible] and [illegible] under all kinds of conditions. I learned that an army latrine is a public Info center, which also serve to give civilian modesty it's final bash on the [illegible] (wish I was one). I learned that the Army was tough, but not always [illegible] (thank God). And that you don't easily forget your basic buddies. Some of which has been KIA (killed in action) as well as your buddies that were around when the shells were thick.

I never really believed that I was going to get to the spot of actual face to face with the enemy and the Army was going to use me for something besides a threat, all of which was to actually true. I learned that what you did in civilian life had nothing to do with your Army Career, unless maybe you play baseball.

I learned that preparing chow for large numbers of men (K.P.) was no a privilege but a task, and that dust in the wrong place was a crime (at inspection time). I learned the best place to not go was the orderly room (until you had got in good with the clerk). I learned that once at POE you was bound for foreign service if you was able to walk and talk.

After a 15-day ride on a ship that could buck like a western bronc, I learned that it was nice to get your feet on the ground once again. I learned that everyone is afraid of what he will face in battle and that one of the [illegible] you would think wouldn't have nerve enough to crush a snake had more GUTS than a dozen like myself. Then I learned that a battle really was tough and that chills played all over your nerve system.

I learned that the Jerry was a darn good fighter, but the American soldier was far better, and that in a battle it makes no difference what accent or language the guy speaks next to you or what he has said or done in the calmer spots and that in split seconds a guy can decide that his buddie's life is as valuable as your own. After so long on the front you no longer think of who's running for president or freedom or democracy; but the old question, how much longer can I hold out?

I learned that the American soldier knows how to die. They know how to fight although [illegible] tell you they know how [illegible] they are fighting for. I learned that Germany was a beautiful, clean place until the touch of [illegible] [illegible] over the entire land. The Nazis have lorded up a lot of nice country. I learned that a man who will pick up his implement of war and fight is worth a thousand of others who only are sorry for you. I learned that Germany is efficient, but efficiency is no good unless it's directed along wholesome lines.

Most of all I learned that no one that has not been in battles can never be told what it is like and what happens in peacetimes is what makes wars; and I also learned that some one had better stop the next war because war is no good and I don't want my children or grandchildren in it, and I have also decided that somebody is myself as well as the other fellow next to me. I learned that I am still an American Soldier and that only half of the war is over and that I am a good subject to go to the other half; but would give most any price short of death to see my sweet family of a wife (who is not well) and three sweet children.

This is not all I learned, but I'm afraid that lot's of it is not at all permissable to write due to censorship rules.

— LAWRENCE DUFFEY.

POST-WAR FLYING IN YOUR HOME TOWN

By C. C. CAMPBELL, Member, Aviation Writers Association, Washington, D. C.

Freedom of Personal Flight

The development of aviation has been so rapid that many of the rules and regulations made only a few years ago to govern it, are already obsolete.

Joseph T. Geuting Jr.

"Not only are many restrictive regulations considered needless in these days of advanced mechanical controls and vastly improved operating facilities," says Joseph T. Geuting Jr., manager, Personal Aircraft Council, "but it is contended that they endanger the whole future of flying in America by preventing many people from flying."

In order to call this situation to the attention of the country and to Congress and Washington aviation officials, the Council has drawn up a statement of policy on the "Freedom of Personal Flight."

Just as the airplane has made tremendous technical and operational strides during the war years, the Council points out, it is now necessary for the rules of flying to be simplified and advanced in proportion.

The airplane's most important role in the future may very likely be as a private conveyance of the ordinary citizen, similar in social and economic importance to the automobile, it is asserted. Yet the Civil Air Regulations up to now have taken little cognizance of the personal plane or its ownership and operation by folks like you and me. Instead, many of the rules governing fast commercial flights of passengers and cargo were applied to those flying small, private airplanes. Naturally, as they now stand, they just do not fit any more than rules and regulations written for bus and truck operation would fit personal automobile operation. Fortunately, regulations now are being revised to do away with a great deal of needless and time-wasting procedures and requirements.

Among the points which the Personal Aircraft Council makes are: 1. the air is free; 2. airspace should be available to all persons for all purposes of air travel; 3. ownership and operation of an airplane should not be restricted to any greater degree than is the comparative use of an automobile. The statement of policy also calls for termination of specific [illegible], flight plan, and other "paper work"; and that no airport built partly with public funds should be permitted to exclude any type of air traffic, unless special fields are provided for such excluded craft.

Other recommendations would make the right to pilot an aircraft dependent solely on proof of ability to fly with reasonable skill, and would shelve many of the difficult but unnecessary qualifications for pilot certification for personal flying. Changes in traffic rules are also advised.

It seems unlikely that any one will take issue with the purpose of the suggestions, which is to make personal flying simple and easy within reasonable bounds and thus advance the whole progress of America's aviation.

This is the second of a series of articles on post-war flying and its effect on community life. The next article "On the Air Map" will appear in an early issue.

ALABAMA 4-H'ERS MAKE EXCELLENT MEAT RECORD

Alabama's 123,000 4-H Club boys and girls produced 11,433, 377 pounds of meat and 8,534 dairy animals in 1944.

As reported by T. A. Sims, State 4-H Club leader of the Alabama Extension Service, they produced 540,931 chickens, 34,772 hogs, 8,534 dairy calves, 5,331 beef calves and 1,100 sheep.

Mr. Sims also reports that during the past 3 years Alabama 4-H Club members produced [illegible] pounds of meat and raised 23,023 dairy animals.

AAA WILL PAY FOR V-TYPE TERRACES

Plans have been made for AAA to pay Alabama farmers for constructing V-type drainage ditches on cropland and pasture lands.

After farmers have obtained approval of the county committee and contracted for V-type ditches, they will be eligible for payment on the following basis:

(a) Ditches 8 or more feet wide and 12 or more inches deep, but less than 12 feet wide or 18 inches deep—80 cents per 100 linear feet.

(b) Ditches 12 or more feet wide and 18 or more inches deep, but less than 16 feet wide or 24 inches deep—$1.75 per 100 linear feet.

(c) Ditches 16 or more feet wide and 24 or more inches deep—$3.25 per 100 linear feet.

Alabama farmers were paid $8,655,-612.37 in conservation and production payments by the AAA between July 1, 1944, and June 30, 1945.

PAYMENTS WILL BE MADE FOR SEEDING PASTURES

AAA will pay Alaba[illegible] for seeding adapted pas[illegible] gumes between no[illegible] 1945.

P[illegible] per pound of seed is 45c [illegible] Dallis grass, 20c for domestic Dallis grass; 25c for blue grass; 30c for orchard grass; 25c black medic; 50c for white Dutch Clover and 25c for red, hop, alsike and Persian clover.

Except on the [illegible] Black Belt, one ton of limestone per acre should be applied on sandy soils and at least two tons to clay soils. At or before the time of seeding, there should be applied at least 300 pounds of 18 percent superphosphate, or its equivalent, and 100 pounds of muriate of potash; or 800 pounds of [illegible] and 100 pounds of muriate of potash, or [illegible] pounds of 11-11-11 fertilizer.

Sales receipts or other [illegible] evidence will be required before payments can be made. Prior approval of the county AAA committee must be obtained.

SUNBEAM PICNIC

The annual Sunbeam picnic [illegible] Baptist Church was held on Friday, August 10th at Bruce Creek at Noull Chapel. Circles [illegible] were hostesses for this occasion. The Sunbeams with their leaders wish to thank those circles for the lunch and also Mr. Beeter Watson and Mr. Jake Teel for the watermelons. We wish to thank Mrs. Golden for the nice drinks and helping with the serving of the children. The children enjoyed the Mission Study Book given by Mrs. Mary Tucker.

There were 34 children and Mrs. George Jester, Mrs. Jakie Teel, Mrs. Willie Bean, Mrs. W. C. Golden, Mrs. Redden and Mrs. Mary Tucker, who enjoyed this picnic. Many of the children are looking forward to the next one.

Alabama farm families sold $105,492.55 worth of farm products on 2 curb markets, reports Elizabeth Fo[illegible]ney, state home demonstration agent.

CANE CREEK

We had well studied lessons Sunday. Bro. Hand brought a wonderful message for us too.

We wish to announce that Bro. J. Robert Cost is going to preach next Sunday at 11 o'clock, August 26th, at this place.

We also want to thank the Teel Brothers for the donation on the paint. We have the church painted now.

Bro. Hand was the dinner guest of Mr. Lee Yates and family Sunday.

Miss Lillie Mae Weldon visited Mrs. Floyd Bailey and family Sunday.

Misses Dot Rutherford visited Misses Dorothy Dennis Sunday.

Miss Lois Gene Willis visited Miss Bobby Jean Smitherman Sunday.

There was a good many at church and everybody was happy over having peace again and glad so many of our boys are spared. We lost one of our boys, Durwood Williamson, but our loss is Heaven's gain.

Mr. Floyd Bailey heard from his son, Ernest Floyd Bailey, of the U. S. Navy, in Bremerton, Wash. writes that he is okey.

Mrs. Hilton Robinson and children Louise and Lamar, visited their grandparents Mr. and Mrs. P. C. Weldon, Sunday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Bailey and family visited Mr. and Mrs. P. C. Weldon Sunday afternoon.

Jimmie Butterworth of Mulga visited Lamar Robinson last week.

Miss Jean Giles of Birmingham visited her mother and grandparents and family this week end.

Mr. and Mrs. Lee Wyatt attended services here Sunday.

Junior Cleckler was home last week on a furlough and visited Mr. and Mrs. Joe Cleckler.

Mr. and Mrs. Buster Bullard visited Mrs. Almer Dennis Friday.

Come to church next Sunday and worship with us. Sunday School at 10 o'clock.

Sunday School was good last Sunday morning with good lesson. There will be preaching next Sunday after Sunday School by the pastor, Rev. E. C. Hand.

Our hearts are sad over the death of one out of our community, Mrs. Will Giles. She leaves six children and two step-children; four small children. It seems so hard and sad when a mother is taken away from a bunch of small children, but God always knows best. Mrs. Giles gave her heart to God and was baptized a few years ago by Bro. Dykes. Later, after her marriage to Mr. Giles, she joined the church at Mt. Springs with her husband and was a faithful member. She was ready and willing to help others in any way she could and was ready to go as she would say in talking with others. We are glad of her testimony and believe she has gone to be with God. She was carried back to her old home place to be buried.

Another sad death is the death of Rondel Wyatt. Our hearts go out to both families in sympathy.

Mrs. Ruby Connell visited friends in Wetumpka last week end.

Mrs. Rennie Robinson was operated on Saturday morning in South Highland Hospital, and is doing fine at this writing.

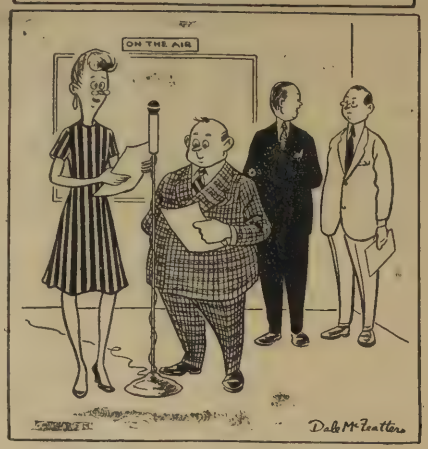
Mrs. Ammer Dennis, Uncle Chat Ingram, Mrs. Sammie Cleckler and children visited Bessemer and Childersburg last week.

Pvt. Martin Wright returned to the army last week after spending a short furlough with his wife and baby and relatives here.

Mr. Oscar Mims from Sand Mountain and Mrs. Susie Cleckler from Coopers spent Saturday night with their sister, Mrs. Floyd Bailey.

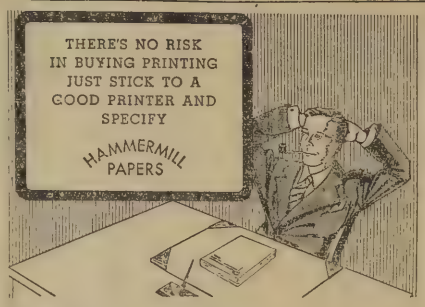
Pvt. Hershel Littlefield writes he is okey and hopes to be home in September. He and all the other boys will find a welcome when they come back to Cane Creek.

Come to church next Sunday and worship with us.



Mrs. Casey Corley of Rockford and Mrs. Dorothy Beard and children of Meogulfka visited Mr. and Mrs. Pack Parrish and family Saturday and Sunday.

Mrs. Pack Parrish spent Sunday night with her sister, Mrs. Carroll.



An entirely new technique for treating a cotton fabric to make it shrink without the use of a rubber lining, has been invented at the Southern Regional Research Laboratory, New Orleans, La. This was done by adding the yarn before weaving a swellable finishing material, not soluble in water, which would supplement the shelling of the cotton, thus helping to close the minute spaces within the fabric of the hose wall.

POPLAR SPRINGS

Several of the members attended the Hand Reunion held here Sunday. We held our regular preaching service Sunday night and Bro. Cook delivered a fine message. The crowd was small, but we had a good service.

On Sunday, August 19th, Bro. Chas. Todd will be with us and deliver a sermon at the eleven o'clock hour. Everyone that can come out and hear him. He is young in the work and needs our help.

On the fourth Sunday every church member is urged to be present and select the new officers, etc., for the ensuing year. Be praying about this matter.

Several in the community are on the sick list and we hope they will soon be well.—Reporter.

MACEDONIA

MACEDONIA — BEAT 14

Revival closed here Friday night, with one new member, Mrs. Elizabeth Davenport. Bro. Lowcry brought some wonderful messages during the week.

Singing school closed Saturday night with a singing. The teacher, Mr. Vickers and family, will be missed. Everyone had learned to love them.

There was a good crowd at church Sunday morning and night. Our pastor, Rev. Oden, was in charge Sunday since this day was set-aside by our President as a Day of Prayer. also Bro. Atchison made a good talk.

We were sorry our Superintendent of the Sunday School, Woodie Rasberry, was sick and couldn't be with us Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Ermon Rasberry had as dinner guests Sunday Rev. Oden and Rev. Atchison, Hoyt and Myra Freeman, Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Davenport, Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Moore, Mr. and rs. Wilbur Davenport and Mr. and Mrs. Orville Smith.

Several from here attended the funeral of Mrs. Martha Gibson Sunday at Pleasant Grove.

Misses Lorene Oates and Kathleen Rasberry were guests of Mrs. Orloes Waldrop Sunday.

Miss Mary Oates was Miss Marie Crumpton's guest Sunday.

Little Alice Faye and Gerald Earl are visiting their grandparents, Mr and Mrs. F. C. Gibson.

Miss Estelle Clerk of Ensley is spending a week with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Carl McCarty.

Mr. and Mrs. T. I. Ward and Mr. and Mrs Jimmie Ward of Birmingham, Mr. and Mrs. Marcus Bowling of Cox were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Ward.

We were glad to have Mrs. Faye (Bonds) Patterson at church Sunday. She is going to the State Teachers College at Jacksonville, Ala. Her husband, Hershel Patterson, is stationed at Fort McClellan, Ala.

Misses Lorene Oates, Mary Oates, Kathleen Rasberry, Marie Crumpton and Mrs. Arlois Waldrop attended the singing at Mars Hill Sunday afternoon.

Pfc. U. V. Waldrop is spending a few days furlough at home this week.

Miss Nell Hayes has returned home after spending a while with her sister, in law, Mrs. Bill Hayes.

— MRS. D. E. MOORE, Reporter.

WRIGHT FAMILY REUNION

Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Wright from near Jemison had the pleasure of having all their children spend last Sunday with them. There were four generations present.

Those enjoying the day there were: Mrs. Tom Cost of Jemison, Mr. Herbert Wright, Jr., and wife and son, Jimmy, from Cherry Point, N. C., Mrs. J. P. Nix and Louise, Mrs. Leighton Gibson from Ensley, Mrs. Payton and husband and son, Ralph, with Mr Jesse Lemon from Deatsville; Mrs. Willie Bean, Frances, Marilyn and Jack, all of Clanton and Mr. Walter Lenoir.

MT. CARMEL

Mt. Carmel, as well as adjoining communities, have been blessed with a glorious revival. One which we hope and trust will live on in our lives.

Our revival began on August 5th, with Rev. Charlie Haggard, our pastor, bringing the first two sermons Sunday morning, and evening Rev. Ed Wilkins. May the Lord bless and lead him on as he grows in the ministry. Eleven were added to the church in Bapism. One by letter. We are very proud of the success of the meeting and trust much lasting good will live on in our lives.

We want to extend our thanks to the adjoining communities who met with us in song service and worship. Many thanks to Edna Ousley for being with us all week and playing the piano.

5 Good Country Tricks for Saving More Used Fats

Right now, the country is facing the worst fat shortage since the war began. To help make up the deficit, the government is depending on the women of America—and particularly our women on farms and in smaller cities.

Every drop of fat is needed to help make battlefield and homefront essentials. So roll up your sleeves and do an all-out job, won't you? Clip this checklist as a reminder.

1. FRIED SALT PORK—with milk gravy. Salt pork yields so much grease, you won't need it all for gravy. Pour the rest into the salvage can.
2. DEEP FAT FRYING—use the fat over and over, but when it's too dark and smelly to use any more, don't forget Uncle Sam wants it!
3. ROASTS AND CHOPS—save all trimmings (scraps from the plates, too.) Keep them in a small bowl; once a week melt them down.
4. SAUSAGES—they're better if you parboil them first. Skim the fat off the cooking water—scrape the fat from the frying pan.
5. CHICKEN SOUP—chill it before you use it. Scoop off the hardened grease (soup tastes better, too!)

When the salvage can is full, take it to your butcher promptly. He will give you 2 red points and up to 4c for every pound of used fat you turn in.

Cardui is a liquid medicine which many women say has brought relief from the cramp-like agony and nervous strain of functional periodic distress. Here's how it may help:

1 Taken like a tonic, it should stimulate appetite, aid digestion,* thus help build resistance for the "time" to come.

LOOK INTO this 2-way help*

2 Started 3 days before "your time", it should help relieve pain due to purely functional periodic causes.

Try Cardui. If it helps, you'll be glad you did.

Chilton County Schools Open September 11th

All Chilton County Schools, both white and colored, will open their doors at 9:30 on Tuesday morning September 11. All schools will close at 12:00 o'clock the first day, but a regular schedule will be followed beginning Wednesday, September 12.

A numbr of vacancies still exist in the teaching positions of the various schools, and a complete list of teachers will be published in the papers next week.

The Annual Bus Drivers' Institute will be held Saturday morning, September 8th, at the Chilton County High School, beginning at 9:30. The Annual Teachers' Institute for Negro teachers will be held Saturday afternoon, September 8th, at the Clanton Colored School, beginning at 2:30 The Annual Teachers' Institute for white teachers will be held Monday morning, September 10th, at the Chilton County High School, beginning at 9:30.

ODT regulations for school buses will not be in effect this year and service will be restored to a pre-war basis.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to take this small space in your paper to express our sincere thanks and appreciation to the good people of Mt. Pisgah church for the donation given us during the revival.

We especially thank Bro. Greenwood, for we feel like the Lord led him to do the things he did, and May God take care and keep him and each one who had a part in it.—Mr. and Mrs. Lucian Scarborough.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to extend our sincere appreciation to the many friends that were so sympathetic during the death of our wife and mother, Mrs. Maggie Rebecca Vinson. We also wish to thank Martin and Sons for the splendid service rendered.—N. A. Vinson and Family.

Collins Chapel Resident Shows Fine Example

Mr. C. C. Cofer of Collins Chapel community has a very fine example of correct land-use of a two and one-half acre field and utilization of kudzu to get the most returns. In 1936 he planted this field of kudzu. This field was a little too steep for continuous cultivation and would produce only about ten or twelve bu. of corn per acre. After the kudzu became firmly established, Mr. Cofer began to use it for hay and temporary grazing. Last year the soil conservation nursery made a deal with him so they could dig the crowns on this field. Counting the value of the crowns that he kept to establish another field and the money received from the nursery, his net returns from digging the crowns was $290. This figures $12.88 per acre for each year the kudzu was on the field, not counting the value of feed he got each year from hay and grazing.

This year the field is planted in corn, and a conservation estimate of the yield by Mr. Cofer is thirty-five bushels per acre. He first thought the stand of kudzu had been destroyed, but apparently the kudzu will cover the ground next year.

SCHOOL NEWS

September the 11th will find all the schools of Chilton County ready to teach every child in the county who is school age. "School age" means any child who will be six on or before October 1st of this year and any person above that age who has not finished high school. The six-year-old child is asked to take his birth certificate to school so that his teacher may record his correct age.

The Alabama School Attendance Law defines "school age" as any child between the ages of seven and sixteen years. The law rquires that all children between the ages of seven and sixth attend school every day that school is in session unless they are legally excused.

There will be a Lunch Room Worker's Conference at the County High School September 5, 6 and 7, beginning at 9 o'clock in the morning. There will be courses on Sanitation in the Lunch Room, Dish Washing, Why the Body Needs Certain Foods, Personal Hygiene, Care of Equipment, Menu Planning and Record Keeping. The lunch each day will be prepared, cooked and served and the dishes washed under supervision. All lunch room workers are urged to attend this conference.

The Parents and Teachers of Union Grove School will meet August 31 at 7:30 p.m. at the schoolhouse for the purpose of organizing a Parent-Teachers Association and to discuss plans for the school for the coming year. All parents of the school are urged to be present at this meeting.

Mrs. John Childress, Vice President of the Parent-Teachers Association at Thorsby is calling a special meeting of the P.-T.A. Friday, August 31, at 2:30 p.m. This is a business meeting and a time for working out of some plans for the year. Parents of the school are urged to come to this meeting.

HIGH SCHOOL OPENS 1945-46 SESSION SEPT. 11

The Chilton County High School will open for the 1945-46 session Tuesday September 11, at 9:00 A. M. The public is cordially invited to attend the opening of the high school. The principal will be in the office at the high school each day from now until Sept. 8th for the purpose of helping any new student arrange his schedule or to give any information to anyone about his school work for next year.

Any student having moved into this community during the summer should see the principal about enrolling before the first day of school. Any student in school last year who failed to hand in a selection of subjects for this year should see about his schedule before Sept. 10th.

The school principal is a very busy man the first day of school and he requests any patron, or student, of the high school that has a problem to discuss with him to please see about this before the opening day of school.

Thursdays Set For Canning Plant's Open Day

The Chilton County Cannery will be open only on Thursdays for the remainder of this canning season and throughout the winter. The produce must be in the plant and in the cans and sealed before 12:00 noon. The steam will be shut off at 1:00 p.m.

There must be at least two or more workers for each family canning, as all work will have to be done by the patron.

Appointments are not needed. The plant will open only on Thursday.

As the so-called meat season approaches let us remind you that meat should be thoroughly chilled to work easy and with less effort.

Hundreds of people will can their meats this year to relieve the meat situation crated by the war and to assure them of a meat supply for next year.

Remember! The canning plant will be open every Thursday, except legal holidays, and the steam will be shut off at 1:00 p.m.

MRS. NEWT VINSON

Mrs. Maggie Rebecca Driver Vinson, age 67, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Charlie Mims, last Thursday. Services were held at Maple Springs Friday morning at 11 o'clock, conducted by Rev. J. D. Hughes.

Pallbearers were: Charlie Mims, J. P. Cagle, Cecil Armstrong, and Sam Vinson. Flower girls—Mrs. Sam Vinson, Mrs. Cecil Armstrong, Mrs. Will Bean, Mrs. Pearl Martin, Miss Mae Vinson and Miss Ila Mae Bean.

Besides the husband, Newton Vinson, surviving is one daughter, Mrs. Charlie Mims; one son, Julian Vinson of Montgomery. There are two grand children and two great grandchildren.

Mrs. Vinson was the daughter of the late Samps Driver and Mrs. Mary Mims Driver, of Cooper.

Where they are and How they are

Cpl. Cecil V. McKee from Washington is spending a 15-day furlough here with his family and friends. Cecil says that the nicest thing about "God's Country" is that there is plenty of good fishing there. He says "It's a place where a couple of hours fishing brings very interesting results."

T-Sgt. Thomas G. Norris, 1200 Selma Road, was recently honorably discharged from the Army at the AAF Regional and Convalescent Hospital in Miami Beach, Fla.

Overseas for eight months as an aerial gunner and radio operator with the 15th Air Force in Italy, Norris wears the Air Medal and four Oak Leaf Clusters, European Theatre Campaign Ribbon, with one Bronze Battle Participation Star and the Good Conduct Medal.

He flew 48 missions over enemy occupied Austria and other countries, also participated in raids on targets in Southern Germany.

Bernard LaFayette Johnson, 18, seaman second class, USNR, son of Mr. and Mrs. G. T. Johnson, Mt. Creek, Ala., fought aboard the 45,000-ton battleship, U S S IOWA, which played a big part in the victory over the Japs.

Mud and rain didn't stop Marine First Lieutenant Carl Cooper, from delivering ammunition to front-line troops and then evacuating the wounded in the bitter fight for Southern Okinawa.

"Before we entered Naha, the rainy season made impassable the roads to the front line on Sugar Loaf Ridge," said Cooper, Commander of a Sixth Marine Division amphibious tractor platoon.

"So we drove down to the China Sea and went part of the way by water. We carried ammunition, water and food to the riflemen. Returning we evacuated battle casualties to the nearest field hospital."

Lt. Cooper, whose wife, the former Miss Jamesanna Rutledge, and seven-month-old son, James Carl, live in Oakman, Ala., has been overseas 10 months.

Pfc. Melvin A. McDaniel, formerly of Clanton, has recently arrived at the Welch Convalescent Hospital, the Army's new reconditioning center in Daytona Beach, Fla.

His wife, Lillian, and two children reside here, while his mother, Mrs. W. M. Irwin, lives in Columbus, Ga.

C. W. Lawrence, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Lawrence, is receiving his initial Naval indoctrination at the U. S. Naval Training Center, Great Lakes, Ill.

M-Sgt. Morris Johnson from Little Rock, Ark., was here last Friday en route to Huntsville, Ala., where he will be stationed for the present.

Private Eugene E. Mims, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gene Mims, Route Two, Clanton, was among arriving returnees at Brooke Convalescent Hospital, Brooke Hospital Center, Fort Sam Houston, Texas, during the month of August.

Mims served overseas five months as a rifleman with Company F, 346th Regiment, 87th "Golden Acorn" Division in the European Theatre of Operations. He participated in the Luxemburg Campaign. Mims was returned to the states in May for further hospitalization and medical treatment after suffering wounds in Europe for which he now wears the Purple Heart.

CLANTON TO HAVE CITY BUS SERVICE

Starting this week Clanton takes another forward step in becomming "citified".

E. A. (Red) Fulmer put into service two busses, operating throughout the city. Red is a home-town boy, born and reared here, and has returned after several years in Service. He was wounded in action and wears the Infantry Rifleman's Badge.

The buses will operate in all parts of the city from West End to the Airport and from the Cotton Mill to South Clanton. The bus stops are clearly marked. The schedule will be found elsewhere in this issue of Chilton County News.

SMALL CHILD KILLED AT MAPLESVILLE BY A LUMBER TRUCK

Johnnie Franklin McGee, age 4, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. B. McGee of Maplesville, was instantly killed about 12:30 o'clock Monday afternoon, when a lumber truck, driven by Mr. Rogers, is reported to have struck the child as he darted across the road near his home.

An older sister, Alice Faye, age 5, was critically injured at the same time and was rushed to Vaughn Memorial Hospital in Selma.

Funeral services were held Wednesday afternoon at 3:30 from the Baptist Church of Maplesville, Ala., conducted by Rev. R. W. Wesley. Rev. Hyman Atchison had charge of the singing; interment in the Maplesville Cemetery.

Surviving are the parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. B. McGee; three sisters—Betty Joe, Bonnie Mae and Alice Faye, all of Maplesville; grandparents, Mr and Mrs. W. E. McGee of Lawley; Mr. and Mrs. J. A. McKelvy of Starke, Fla.

Spigener Funeral Home in charge.

Commercial hatcheries in Alabama produced 640,000 chicks during July. This compares with 50,000 chicks hatched during the same month last year, and the previous record July hatch in 1943 of 365,000 chicks.

American Legion Team Wins Three Straight Games

The Chilton County Post No. Six of the American Legion, has won its last three baseball games. Montevallo was whipped by the score of 7 to 2. Rockford was trimmed by the score of 6 to 4 in Rockford, Ala. The feature of this game being a home run by Clarence Avenger with two on bases in the last inning, and the relief pitching of Royce Chandler. Chandler entered the box in the third inning with one man on first and no body out and the score 3 to 2 against him. He struck out twelve men, allowed two hits and one run in the five remaining innings.

In the best game of the season Rockford was trimmed again in Clanton, Ala., by the score of 2 to 1. The feature of this game being the brilliant pitching of Royce Chandler. Not a hit was made against him and he struck out seventeen batters in the seven innings. A walk, stolen base error and a wild pitch marred a perfect game for him by allowing one score.

These two wins against Rockford left Clanton and Rockford tied, so the rubber game will be played in Clanton on Saturday, September 1st. This game should be a battle royal.

Food productioin still remains a paramount problem because millions of hungry people must be fed.

VONNIE O. (Buck) RATLIFF SC 1-C

Vonnie O. (Buck) Ratliff S C 1-C USN, left last Monday after spending two weeks with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. M. Ratliff, of Maplesville Ala., Route 2. He has been with the Navy for the past four years serving aboard one of the finest battleships the U S S WASHINGTON.

During that time he has been in both theatres of war. Buck is very proud of his ship, also his stars representing 15 major battles which he came through without a scratch. He will rejoin his shipmates on the WASHINGTON at Seattle, Wash. for another trip to the Pacific to give the Japs another round.

TWO LOCAL MEN JOIN MARITIME SERVICE

Two men of this area have recently been enrolled in the United States Maritime Service at the U. S. Maritime Service Enrolling Office in Birmingham.

They are Harry L. Fox, Box 95, husband of Mrs. Harry L. Fox; and Morris Nepolin Price, Route 5, son of Mr. J. C. Price. They were transferred to the Apprentice Seamen Training Station at St. Pterburg, Fla., and on completing their course they will become seamen of the U. S. Merchant Marine.

C.C.H.S. Football Squad To Begin Fall Practice

Coach Waters will begin practice for a nine game schedule on Monday September 3rd. While school does not begin until September 4th, if the team is to be in condition by the first game Sept. 21st, there is a lot of work that must be done in three weeks, so the call to practice before the opening date of school

The material at the high school this year is more or less of an unknown quantity, graduation and the call to service took a heavy toll of last years squad. Coach Waters will have some ten or twelve boys that saw more or less service last year. Among those that are being counted on to carry most of the burden of this years team are Cox, Kennedy, Wade, Hilyer, Hodges, Robinson, Chancellor, Dennis, Patterson and Thomaston. Some boys that should develop into good material this year are: Smith, Bussey, Gentry, Arnold, West, Lane, Blalock, Avery, Higgins, Mims, Taylor and Jones. When school opens there may be some new boys coming out for football, if so they will find a cordial welcome as every place on the team is wide open and the coach is naturally looking for the best man for each place.

The schedule is as follows

Sept. 21, Hurt School in Clanton.
Sept. 28, Centerville in Clanton
Oct. 5, Holt School in Clanton.
Oct. 12, Columbiana at Columbiana
Oct. 19, Maplesville in Clanton
Oct. 26, Marion at Marion
Nov. 2, Holtville at Holtville
Nov. 9, Prattville in Clanton

We're terribly sorry for the typegraphical error in "Where They Are And How They Are" column last week.

We stated that Henry Clyde Lewis S 2-C spent two days in combat on Okinawa. This was indeed an understatement, as Lewis spent 72 days there. Again we say, we're sorry.

Kathleen Norris Says:

Time: The Inevitable Cure

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

When your soldier boy comes home, remember that time is the cure for the problems that will come with him.

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

WHEN your soldier boy comes home, remember that time is the cure for the problems that will come with him.

Whatever the situation is, time will alleviate its hardest features; time will bring new interests, new turns of the wheel that will make living tolerable to him.

Be infinitely patient; not too cheerful, not too sympathetic. Keep about him as pleasant an atmosphere as you can, and wait for time.

Perhaps he may have to adjust himself to the loss of a hand, or a leg. Perhaps his sight is gone. Perhaps some facial injury will cause him pain and difficulty for the rest of his days.

Or perhaps — and this is the most dreadful of all — his mind will be slightly disordered. Not enough to make him an institution case, but enough to distress those who love him, depress him almost to despair, and make readjustment slow and hard.

Meet all this with serenity and faith. Time works miracles. Torn ligaments heal; lost limbs are missed much less than anyone unafflicted by that loss can believe. And love and courage and time—time—time build up ruins and tie the scattered threads of life into new patterns.

After the Parties.

So when your soldier boy comes home, meet him with the usual royal welcome. Fried chicken and layer cakes, joyous telephoning and visiting, presents, entertainments, unlimited family affection and interest.

But when this flurry is over, the strain comes, and that is the moment when you have to have your strength and philosophy ready. Here is the story of an American mother who has had that crisis to face.

"My twin sons, Rafael and Raoul, went into the service in the army two years ago," writes Mrs. Frank Espinosa of Tucson, Ariz. For a while they were together, then Rafe was sent to the Marianas, from which he returned six months ago, having lost both legs. Rolly is still in this country.

"The mass horrors of war are beyond all comprehension, but surely there is no sadder case than that of a magnificent 22-year-old who comes home hopelessly crippled. His father aged 20 years overnight, and for all my prayers, all my determination, I could hardly bear the shock of meeting him.

"In his wheel chair, he held a sort of travesty of homecoming reception; then we had to face the grim fact — put away forever the old fishing-rod, the football clothes. The pity of friends and family cut him terribly, yet he had to see people. We are not rich, my husband's salary is adequate, but no more. Our home is a six room cottage, in a plain block of similar cottages. The boys used to go away camping in hot weather, and for several seasons, my husband took a job in a mountain hotel, and I went there with him, and helped in the dining room. But we could afford no luxuries for our stricken boy. We could not take him away from the eyes of neighbors and friends.

"For months he sat and brooded.

"A look I thought never to see again."

THE ROAD BACK

Families of war veterans will have to put up with a period of reorientation, while the young man struggles to readjust himself to the old ways of life. Whether this trying time is long or short depends a good deal on the man's character, and on the experiences he has endured. A soldier who faced death for many months will have a harder course than one who served as a clerk, far from danger.

Then too, the problem is frequently complicated by wounds, loss of limbs or senses, or by mental disturbances. The sense of helplessness is especially oppressive to a sensitive young man who has always been strong and active. Mothers, wives, sweethearts, in fact everyone associated with these unfortunate fellows will have to make a constant effort to help them back to a cheerful viewpoint.

How one soldier regained his happy outlook is recounted by Miss Norris in today's article. He is only 22, but he has to face the future without legs. Yet in time he found new interests—woodcarving, helping with the family cooking, caring for a few chickens and a dog. Simple, homely things, but they are often the best cure for the aftermath of war.

He would try to brighten — my poor boy! — he could not do it. Rafe came home, and was happily married last June. Maria, my daughter-in-law, generously agreed to a quiet wedding in our parlor, so that Rolly could be present, but Rolly would not be best man. It was all sadness, darkness, hopelessness for the three of us at home.

Carved Wooden Dolls.

"Then—I hardly know how, things changed. For one thing, we bought him a dozen chickens, and it is extraordinary how they amuse and interest him. For another, I let him help me with cooking and got him a little cook book. Now he asks me to get taragon vinegar or maraschino cherries for various dishes, and putters away with chopping bowls and egg-beaters while I am getting meals.

"Best of all, he carved me a little Scotty out of soap one day, and it was so good that I have kept it, under a glass bowl, and have encouraged him to carve other things. Now he is carving the most remarkable jointed dolls of white wood; they are so fine in their natural little childish faces and forms that he has not only found an immediate market for the few he has done, but may really hope for a fine livelihood from them. This still seems to my husband and me too good to be true, but it is surely coming.

"Lastly, two weeks ago, to celebrate the first little success of the dolls, we brought him a baby Scotty, a little mass of bouncing black wool, and a few hours later, when Brig was asleep in Rolly's arm, I saw a look on Rolly's face that I thought never would be there again.

"In gratitude to God," this letter ends, "my husband and Rolly and I send you his story, to encourage other mothers to be patient, and to believe that things will be better in time."

Keeping Knives Sharp

Most kitchen knives get dull because they are improperly stored, used for the wrong job, and never properly sharpened. To sharpen paring knives put a sharpening stone on a flat surface, pour on a few drops of light or medium household oil, and, holding the knife in your right hand, with your left forefinger bearing down slightly on the knife tip, "shave" the stone first toward you, then away from you. The knife is horizontal to the stone throughout the sharpening process.

Luscious Ice Cream—Favorite Summertime Dessert
(See Recipes Below)

Select Desserts Carefully

The choice of dessert should be a careful one — a light dessert if the meal has been rich and hearty; a substantial one if the menu has been on the light side. A dessert should be the perfect close to a meal, not just something thrown in because we think there ought to be an "ending" to eating.

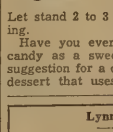
One of the best ways to selecting the appropriate dessert is the guide that the seasons offer. In summer we can depend upon fruits and berries, plentiful supplies of eggs, milk and cream. In winter, of course, there are some fruits, but it's a good idea to make puddings the mainstay.

Ice cream is a perfect choice for warmer weather. If you want a dressed-up dessert, you can round it out with cake and berries; for simplicity, just serve the velvety mixture with fresh berries or crushed fruit sauce.

Here is a Lemon Cream that has a piquant flavor and is a perfect close to a light, cool supper when served with fresh berries:

Lemon Cream.
(Serves 6)

2 well-beaten eggs
½ cup sugar
½ cup light corn syrup
1 cup milk
1 cup light cream
¼ cup lemon juice
1 cup crushed, sweetened berries
Whole berries for garnish



Beat eggs and sugar. Mix corn syrup, milk, cream and lemon juice. Add to egg mixture. Freeze in automatic refrigerator tray until just set. Beat until light. Add crushed berries. Continue freezing until firm, about 2½ to 3 hours. Garnish with whole berries.

An unusual sherbert with a tang that is bound to please is the following, using ginger ale:

Ginger Ale Sherbert.
(Serves 6 to 8)

1 tablespoon unflavored gelatin
¼ cup cold water
¾ cup hot water
1½ cups sugar
¼ cup lemon juice
2 cups unsweetened pineapple juice
1 cup water
1 pint pale, dry ginger ale

Soften gelatin in cold water; dissolve in hot water. Add sugar and stir until it dissolves. Cool; add lemon juice, water pineapple juice, water and ginger ale. Freeze in ice cream freezer until crank turns hard. Remove dasher and pack. Let stand 2 to 3 hours before serving.

Have you ever thought of using candy as a sweetener? Here is a suggestion for a deliciously flavored dessert that uses no sugar at all.

Make New Things From Old: Old wornout oil tablecloths can be made into attractive place mats by cutting them into squares with pinking shears.

If towels have faded, dye them in colors to match the bathroom.

Old shower curtains can be cut down in size and used as curtains in the pantry, bathroom or kitchen.

When shades become discolored and old, they may be covered with attractive prints in cotton, cretonne or chintz to match the room's decorative scheme.

Wornout pajamas with the leg parts still good can be used to pad out the ironing board by cutting to size.

Discarded curtains make nice pot holder filler; or, they may be sewed together (six layers) after cutting, into dishcloths.

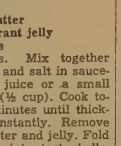
It's combined with chocolate for a flavor combination hard to resist:

Peppermint Wafer Dessert.
(Serves 9)

½ pound peppermint stick candy
½ cup light cream
½ tablespoon unflavored gelatine
2 tablespoons cold water
1½ cups evaporated milk, chilled and whipped
½ pound chocolate wafers

Crush candy; add light cream. Heat in double boiler until candy dissolves. Add gelatine softened in cold water. Chill until partially set. Fold in beaten, chilled evaporated milk. Break chocolate wafers in half and stand around outside of a 9-inch pan. Place layers of wafers on bottom; spread with ½ of the gelatine mixture. Top with second half of wafers and spread with remaining gelatine mixture. Chill for 12 hours. Cut in squares and serve.



Cherries are another great favorite for dessert. The family will enjoy these tarts made with either fresh or canned cherries:

Cherry Tarts
(Serves 6)

2 cups canned or fresh sour, pitted cherries
6 tablespoons sugar
2 tablespoons cornstarch
⅛ teaspoon salt
1½ tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons currant jelly
6 baked tart shells

Drain cherries. Mix together sugar, cornstarch and salt in saucepan; add cherry juice or a small amount of water (½ cup). Cook together 15 to 20 minutes until thickened, stirring constantly. Remove from fire; add butter and jelly. Fold in cherries. Pour into tart shells. Bake in a hot oven (475 degrees) about 5 minutes.

There are some evenings when most of us enjoy a bit of well-chilled fruit with a few crispy cookies. In this case, you will want the cookie jar full with these Orange Honeys that taste better as they mellow:

Orange Honeys
(Makes 7½ Dozen)

3 cups sifted flour
3 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup shortening
½ cup sugar
1 egg
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1 cup honey
¼ cup chopped nuts
¼ cup chopped candied orange peel
¼ cup chopped candied lemon peel

Sift together flour, baking powder and salt. Cream together shortening and sugar until light and fluffy. Add egg and vanilla extract. Beat well. Add flour mixture, nuts, orange and lemon peels to creamed mixture. Mix well. Drop by teaspoonfuls into well greased baking sheets. Bake in a moderate oven (375 degreees) for 10 minutes.

Marguerites.
(Yield: 2½ dozen, 2 inches in diameter)

2 eggs
1 cup brown sugar
½ cup flour
¼ teaspoon baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
½ cup chopped nut meats
½ cup whole bran

Beat eggs slightly; add remaining ingredients in the order given. Fill small buttered pans ⅔ full of mixture. Bake in a moderate (350-degree) oven about 15 minutes. Cool slightly before removing from pan. Dust with powdered sugar.

"IT'S a fool's errand," I growled as I went up the front walk. "Why in tarnation should we try to get the agency for a few homemade stuffed dogs?"

I rang several times before anyone appeared. "Judson, of Rhodes-Ahler Wholesalers," I introduced my self. "May I speak to Mrs. Martin?"

"I'm Mrs. Martin," came the soft refined English tones. "So you like my Liza-Lees?" she asked eagerly when I had stated my purpose. "Tell me, will they sell all over?"

"Of course," I replied as I half-admired the rolypoly tan cloth dog in her hand. Its ears hung comically long, the wide mouth with its red tongue smiled up at me. A pert red bow tried to make a sissy out of it. No wonder the buyer of a large department store was wiring Pappy Rhodes for them.

"Why bother to sell them all over?" I asked. "We have one customer who wants your entire output."

"But I won't sell that way, Mr. Judson," she said with queer determination. "You see, I don't really need your help. I can make a few dozen and market them myself."

"You'll be wasting production time," I argued. "You make 'em —we'll sell 'em."

"Only on my own terms," she persisted. "A dozen to one store in each town." Her calm statement amazed me. Who ever heard of doing business that way? Why, one store was demanding all that she could make! "I'm sorry," she told me finally, "but there's so much to do. Good-by."

Pappy Rhodes had said to get that contract, and he was even more determined than little Mrs. Martin. "All right, you win," I said.

It was a little library workroom into which she led me. Parts of Liza-Lees littered the table. Some already finished grinned up at me. In their midst was a lovely picture of a child about two in an old silver frame.

"My daughter, the first Liza-Lee," Mrs. Martin said, motioning me to a chair.

I departed with two dozen tan dogs for company. Pappy Rhodes hailed me triumphantly, even with the screwy contract. But in less than a week I was back. Shops all over wanted dozens of Liza-Lees. Couldn't we have more?

My visits to Mrs. Martin weren't over by any means. "Mrs. Martin," I pleaded, "our customers want rose and blue and green dogs to match their bedspreads. Mothers are asking for them in pastels for nurseries. Let's have them and use up that old brown stuff later on."

I smiled at Liza-Lee's picture. Mrs. Martin's eyes followed mine and her smile vanished. Our contract says, 'exactly like the model'," she told me. "That was tan."

I found myself headed back the very next day with definite orders to amend that blooming contract. Mrs. Martin wasn't home. The photograph was missing, too. All that her helpers knew was that there had been a letter. Mrs. Martin had run out with the picture and a finished dog.

Day after day I haunted the house. At last the telegram came. "Coming home tonight. Have cab at 8:30 train."

The cab with me in it was there. I squared my shoulders and strode forward. "Mrs. Martin—" I started hurriedly.

"I want you to meet my daughter, Liza-Lee Martin," she said.

She was the little girl of the photograph grown up—a lovely blonde. Her brown eyes smiled happily. And clutched against her woods-green suit was a tan Liza-Lee dog.

Some moments later I thought of my errand. "Mr. Rhodes is furious," I began uncertainly. "He says we've got to have dogs to match bedspreads and nursery color schemes."

Liza-Lee Martin smiled. "Why not? They would be lovely. We'll start production as soon as you can get the cloth to us."

"Poor boy," laughed Mrs. Martin. "You're still out in the cold. Liza-Lee, do tell him."

"Mother was trying to locate me," Liza-Lee explained. "An old nurse kidnaped me soon after Father died and left no trace. Just last year mother discovered the pattern for these dogs among some old papers and remembered that I had taken a tan one with me. That was why she insisted on only one dozen to a town. She wanted to spread them as far as possible, hoping I would see one, recognize it and get her address from the store. I don't suppose you know there is an address slip in each box.

"It wasn't one of your big shops that found me, either," chided Liza-Lee. "It was a little store over in the western part of the state which wouldn't have had any dogs if you'd had your way."

Mrs. Martin hastened to add, "We'll make all colors for you now and you can sell them where you please."

It was going to be fun handling Liza-Lees now, I thought.

Space-Saver Racks For Closet Doors

WHY wish for more and bigger closets if the ones you have are not organized so that all the space is used? Handy racks on the door add readily accessible space for things used every day leaving inside shelves for storage. The racks shown here are carefully planned to hold the things you use the most, yet they are less than three inches deep.

Everyday hats are held in perfect shape by a curved front made to fit crowns. Both small and large articles are held conveniently in the lower rack which also has a hanger rod. These racks are also useful for children's togs and toys. They are easy to cut out of scraps of plywood with an ordinary compass saw from the dime store.

Lines on Hand Determined By It's Shape, Structure

One reason for lines on the hand is this: When you close your hand the flesh of the palm crinkles along certain lines, and those lines are obviously determined by the shape and structure of the hand. The crinkling of the flesh gives you a better grasp of whatever it is you are holding.

This accounts for what one might call the major lines on the hand; but there are innumerable smaller ones, like the lines which show in a finger-print. The reason for these is to improve your sense of touch. Your skin, which is the organ of the sense of touch, is sensitive to pressures; this sensitiveness is greatly increased in your hands by means of these little valleys and ridges in the skin which we call "lines."

WNU FEATURES

THE STORY THUS FAR: Spratt Herlong, successful motion picture producer, had married Elizabeth, after her first husband, Arthur Kittredge, had been reported killed in World War I. They had three children, Dick, Cherry and Brian. Elizabeth had been orphaned when a baby and had been raised by her aunt and uncle in Tulsa. During one summer vacation from school, she had gone swimming at the country club. While diving she met Arthur Kittredge. He was from Chicago, but was at that time employed in Tulsa as a chemist. She went dancing with him the first night she met him. He had proven a strong attraction for her.

CHAPTER V

He agreed and they sat down on the grass again. Like herself he had no immediate family, he told her. His parents had died long ago, and he had worked his way through the University of what he could still call nothing else but Chicawgo. After a few moments' conversation they found that Elizabeth's uncle, who was also in the oil business, knew several members of the company where Arthur was employed, so they justified their acquaintance by that. They went dancing that night, and as the next day was Sunday they went swimming again. A week later Elizabeth was refusing to undertake the projected trip to Canada. A month later she was refusing to go back to college. In September they were married.

There was no use in anybody's saying eighteen was too young to be married, she hadn't known him long enough, she would never have another chance to go to college, Arthur couldn't support her in the style to which she was accustomed, or giving any of the other sensible advice older people like to give young girls in love. She and Arthur wanted each other and nobody could keep them apart. Elizabeth found there was still some of her father's property left, so with what had been intended for the rest of her expensive schooling they furnished their home. That it was a very modest little place troubled them not at all. It was a place of peace and ecstasy. Elizabeth was tremulous with joy at finding out what it was like to be loved. She had always had plenty of friends, her masculine acquaintances had let her know she was desirable, and her aunt and uncle had done their dutiful best to be affectionate, but nobody had ever loved her. Arthur loved her.

She was not very good at expressing it. But in the evenings while he read, or worked on the pamphlets he wrote describing his researches for the benefit of other oil chemists, she would sit with the mending and look up to watch the line of light down his profile, and every now and then Arthur would glance up and smile at her and she would be unutterably happy. Sometimes when they went out together and did something quite ordinary like seeing a movie or playing tennis, she would say, "I never knew any two people could have as much fun together as we do," and he would grin at her and answer, "It's great finding out, isn't it?" That was all they really needed to say to each other about it. But Arthur had more talent for words than she had, and now and then he would make it articulate.

One night when she was nearly asleep he turned over and said, "Elizabeth, if you're still awake, I was just thinking about us, and how I get such a thrill every time I see you, and I remembered an old myth I read in the university library one day."

"Tell me," said Elizabeth. She moved closer to him and he slipped his arm around her as he went on.

"I don't know who thought it up, the Persians or Greeks or somebody. They said that in the beginning everybody in the world was happy. Then they sinned, and to punish them the gods decreed that every soul should be split in half. Since then each of us is born incomplete, and has to wander over the earth looking for the other half of himself, and nobody can be happy unless he finds it. But if you're very lucky you find it, and unite with the one who's really the other half of you, and then you're right with the universe because you're complete."

She drew a long joyful breath. "Arthur, how beautiful! And how right—I think I felt like that the first time I saw you."

"So did I. You came down off the diving board and I pulled you out of the water, and you were there, it was right. Funny to think back now—there was so much I wanted to do, so much I wanted to learn, about oil and plants and people and stars—I still want to do everything like that as much as ever, but it's so different now. You've no idea how different it is."

"Yes I have. Everything is different now that we're together. I do love you so!" she said.

Arthur kissed her shoulder in the dark.

They both wanted to have children. Elizabeth loved babies. Ever since she was a little girl playing with her dolls she had looked forward to the time when she could have a real baby of her own. They talked about it eagerly. But Arthur, who had a deep sense of protection, thought they should wait a year or two. Elizabeth was so young. Besides, they had been married in the fall of 1916, and by spring it was evident that the United States was about to enter the war. "Suppose I should be called into the army," he said, "and have to leave you here alone."

Elizabeth shivered. Now that she had found Arthur, the idea of living without him was more than she could bear to contemplate. "The war won't last much longer," she said. "I'm sure it won't. We don't have to have children right now—we've got years and years before us, but you do want them, don't you?"

Arthur grinned at her with tender eagerness. "You're mighty right I do."

Then the United States was in the war, and there was no keeping Arthur back from it. Arthur loved people. The people of France and Belgium and Great Britain, cloudy masses to Elizabeth because she had never seen them except on one or two schoolgirl tours of Europe, were as real to Arthur as the people of Tulsa, though he had never been to Europe at all. While she had been seeing the war in terms of newspaper accounts he was seeing it as human beings starving and bleeding before a force of evil that decent men must stop. Arthur had registered for the draft, though he had been deferred because he was married; but he wanted to go. Terrified, Elizabeth pled with him.

She would be unutterably happy.

"Arthur, have mercy on me! Suppose I wanted to go out to France or Flanders—don't you understand?"

He doubled up his fists. "Yes, I understand."

"Have you thought about it? I mean thought about it?"

"A lot of times. While you were asleep. I'd look at you in the dark. You looked so trusting."

"Arthur, you're not going. It's different with some men. I suppose I mean it's different with some women. They've got somebody besides their husbands. Please understand. My father was a bank and my mother was a bell. The bank sent the checks and the bell rang to tell me what to do. I'm not trying to say I was unhappy—I wasn't, because I didn't know any better. But then, all of a sudden, you."

"You don't want to go, do you, Arthur?"

"No, I don't. But my darling, we've got to win this war or lose it. If we lose it, God help us. Don't you see it? We're fighting so other people will have the same chance at life that we've had—not only the foreigners, but Americans, the Americans who aren't born yet. We've been thinking, here in our favored corner of the world, that we were safe. Now we've found that we're not. Not even this country is safe unless we're willing to fight the brutes of the world so we can keep it so."

Her mind yielded, for he was incontestably right. But she could not help protesting still.

"What about those children I was going to have?"

"If we win this war," said Arthur, "you'll have your children. If we don't," he added grimly, "you won't want them."

So, after not quite a year of marriage, Arthur joined the army. From the day they were married until the day he left, he and Elizabeth had not been separated for as long as twenty-four hours. The first night she slept alone the bed seemed twice its usual size and the room seemed enormous.

Crumpled up on that same bed, Elizabeth was telling herself the room would always be empty. She had nothing. No husband, no children, no desire for anything else without them. She was alive, and that was strange, she thought dully as the hours of that dreadful night dragged by, strange that when two persons had interlaced their lives into such a unit as theirs, half of that unit could be torn away and leave the other half still breathing, alive for no purpose but to feel the anguish of the separation.

She felt nothing else. The morning came at length, and other mornings followed it, but for a long time Elizabeth was not conscious of anything but the immensity of her pain. She went through the usual movements of existence, because the routine was so automatic that she followed it without paying attention to what she was doing. Every day blended into the next without anything to mark the transitions, so that she would have found it hard to say how long it had been since they told her Arthur was dead, or whether some occurrence had taken place yesterday or a week ago. It seemed to her that she was alone all the time, though this was not true, for a great many friends came to see her. She was grateful, but they could not penetrate her loneliness. The shock had been too great. Sometimes she wished they would stop coming in, talking and making her answer, but it did not matter very much. She simply drifted from day into night and back into day again, without expectation. Whatever happened around her, she was not really aware of anything except that Arthur was dead, she had to get through the day without him, and she hoped she could do so without being too much of a nuisance to anybody.

Several weeks after the end of the war she received a tactfully worded letter from the Red Cross, telling her that Arthur had died in a German field hospital. There were some gentle phrases about how the stretcher-bearers paid no attention to international differences in their errands of mercy. Before she had read halfway down the page Elizabeth recognized it as a form letter composed by some expert writer to soften the regret that would be felt by recipients on learning that their loved ones had had to spend their last hours among foreigners. It was very kind of them, no doubt, to have gone to the trouble of getting up such a pretty letter, but neither this nor any other literature could help her. She tore the sheet of paper into small pieces and let them dribble out of her hand into the wastebasket.

By this time it was as if her single pain had changed into a thousand small ones striking her with swift short anguish, each in a different place from the one before. Earlier, there had been no details. Now whatever she saw, every object she touched, stabbed her with its own small blade of memory. She could not pick up a table-napkin without remembering what fun she and Arthur had had choosing the linens for their home. Every time she opened the china-closet she could hear their secret laughter as they garnished the top shelf with the atrocities some of their relatives had thrust on them as wedding presents. If she looked out of a front window she could almost see Arthur coming down the street from his office and raising his head to see if he could catch sight of her anywhere and wave at her before he came into the house. Arthur was everywhere, so vividly that there were even moments when she forgot he would not be there any more. She would wake up in the night and begin to turn over softly so as not to disturb him; sometimes if the library door was closed she would find herself tiptoeing past it, lest the sound of her approach interrupt the work he had brought home to do. When this happened she would bring herself up with a start that reminded her, "But he isn't there, he'll never be there again." The pain would slash into her, deep and quick, until she thought, "This is worse than it was at first. And there'll never be anything else. Arthur is dead."

She did not make any display of her grief. This was partly because she had an inborn dread of public weeping, but mainly because it did not occur to her to do so. What she and Arthur had shared had been too profound for them ever to talk about it except to each other. Now it would have seemed sacrilegious and obscene to try to tell anybody else what he had meant to her. Arthur had been her husband; no matter how much his friends had valued him, he did not stand in that relationship to anyone but herself, and only she could feel the severing of that tie. So she bore what she had to bear alone and in silence.

And then one morning, in the spring after the Armistice, she discovered that she did not have much money left to live on.

It gave her a start, not because she had thought she was rich but because in the past few months she had not thought about it at all. She had been spending very little, mechanically writing checks for such necessities as food and rent since it was part of the inescapable routine. When a phone call from Uncle Clarence—who had again constituted himself her guardian, as he saw she was in no state to attend to her affairs herself—advised her that she should meet him at the bank the next morning, she obeyed his summons, mildly wondering what it was about. Uncle Clarence and the bank vice president told her it was to make arrangements for her pension as a soldier's widow.

Male Mortality Higher Than That of Females

During every year of human life, mortality is higher among males than females, says Collier's. But oddly enough, during the first year, the percentage of male deaths over female deaths increases under good living conditions and decreases under poor living conditions.

For example, in New Zealand, where infant mortality is 32 per thousand, deaths among boys are 35 per cent higher than among girls; while in Chile, where infant mortality is 248 per thousand, deaths among boys are only 6 per cent higher than among girls.

BEAT 14

There was good attendance at church Sunday and Sunday night, but still there are lots more who should We need them.

There will be a singing here the Third Saturday night in September. We elected Mr. Marion Coffer as Chairman and Miss Kathleen Rasberry as secretary and treasurer. Everyone has a special invitation to the singing.

Miss Kathleen Rasberry had as her guest Sunday the Oates sisters, Mary Jewee and Lorene, Misses Nell Hayes, Minnie Mae Davenport and Mrs. Arlis Waldrop.

Most everyone from here attended the singing at Center Hill Sunday afternoon.

Mr Wesley Veazey and sons John Terry and Jackie from Tennessee. Mr. Loyd Veazey of Birmingham and Wallace of Childersburg spent last week with parents, Mr and Mrs Clint Veazey.

Mr. and Mrs. Woodie Rasberry spent the week-end in Bessemer with their parents, Mr and Mrs Harvey Gilstrock.

Mrs. Joe Ward spent last week in Birmingham with children. Mr and Mrs. Edwin Ward, Mr and Mrs Jimmie Ward returned home with her.

Mr and Mrs Morgan Davenport spent last Tuesday afternoon with Mrs Poole Who is sick.

Mr. and Mrs. Jimmie Ward visited their sister Mrs D. E. Moore Sunday afternoon.

Mrs Mollie Atchison visited Aunt Lennie Armstrong and Mrs Dora Drew Thursday.

Several from here attended the revival at Pleasant Grove, Jemison last week.—Mrs. B. E. Moore.

POPLAR SPRINGS

We had a good crowd at church Sunday and Bro. Cook delivered two very fine sermons.

We had conference and the election of officers for the next associational year. Bro. Cook was unanimously elected our pastor for the next year.

The following officers were elected: Treasurer — Reedy Patterson; Superintendent — Joseph McDowell; Sunday School Teacher — Mrs. Anna McDowell; Sunday School Secretary — Mrs. Ben Wells; Assistant Sunday School Secretary — Mary Nell Nickolson; Clerk — Roy Traywick.

The teachers for the Young Peoples' class and also for the Junior class will be elected Sunday, September 2.

W. D. Thomason, County Agent, Ozark, reports that during the calendar year of 1944, 1,970 Dale County farmers sold through cooperative sales 22,744 head of hogs for $468,815.71. This was an average of 11.5 head of hogs, and $237.97 per farmer participating.

Development of new markets to hedge against the time when surpluses of farm products may occur, is a "must" for the immediate future of agriculture.

ISABELLA

Bro. R. W. Stuckey preached two very inspiring sermons at Mulberry Sunday. We had a large crowd at both services.

We enjoyed a special by Miss Lorene Lecroy Sunday night.

The show put on at the schoolhouse Friday night by our County Agent and our agriculture teacher was enjoyed by a large crowd.

Ernest Grooms, who works in Mobile, spent a few days at home this week with his family here.

Miss Clara Nell Bates of Birmingham has returned home after spending last week with Miss Katerna Yielding.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Fox are the proud parents of a baby boy. Mother and baby are doing nicely at the home of her mother in Plantersville. Harry got his discharge from the Merchant Marine the day his son arrived.

Mr. and Mrs. Quinton White and Quin, from Wetumpka, spent the week end with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. T. White, here.

Miss Lorene Lecroy of Gadsden is spending a few days this week with her parents here, Mr. and Mrs. T. L. Lecroy. She will begin her new work when she returns, working in the office of the Baptist Memorial Hospital.

Miss Velma Conway of Birmingham has been spending her vacation here with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Conway and other relatives.

Aunt Martha Large is still confined to her bed at her home after weeks of illness.

Services last Sunday were well attended. Bro. Robert Cost preached for us. He brought an old time Gospel message, his text was on the Church That Christ Established, while he was here on earth. We were glad to have him with us and hope he can come again soon.

Several from here attended the service at the Courthouse Sunday afternoon and heard Bro. Huckabee, from Georgia, preach. His message was real good. He also preached on the church and the foundation of it.

Mr. Jim Willis and daughter, Lois Jean attended the funeral of the Mims boy. He was the son of Enoch Mims at Concord Sunday afternoon.

Miss Mary Ella Bailey spent several days with Mr and Mrs Leon Clekler last week at Clanton Mill.

Mrs. Elvis Ingram, Miss Mavis Hamilton and Mr. Herbie Hamilton of Rockford, visited their grand father this week-end. Mr. Johnnie Ingram Rev Cost and Mr and Mrs Floyd Bailey were the dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. Tug Willis Sunday.

We were glad to have Uncle Sid Willis at Church again Sunday after an illness of several weeks. Anyone who is so faithful a church-goer as he, is missed. No one can fill the others place. We all have a place to fill and a job to do.

Mrs. P. C. Weldon spent Saturday night and Sunday with her daughter, Mrs. Rennie Robinson who has just returned from the South Highland Hospital and is doing nicely.

Rev. Allen Ruff visited his aunt, Mrs. Pack Parrish last week.

A letter from Pvt. Newell Ruff says he is o. k., at Ft. McClellan and would enjoy coming back to his old home church here again. We are glad to hear from any of our boys and hope they can be home with us soon.

Miss Mary Ella Bailey and Betty Jean Shantifelt were the dinner guests of Mrs. Lee Yates Sunday. Mr. and Mrs Percy McKinnon and Gerald visited at Mr. Rennie Robinsons Sunday afternoon.

Miss Sadie Ellison and Miss Bettie Jean Shantifelt were visitors here last Sunday. We are glad to have visitors. We are having a good Sunday School. Sometimes the crowds are small but the service is good. Next Sunday is preaching day again by the pastor Rev E. C. Hand. Come to church here and feel welcome.

Electrification Making Progress In Rural Areas

Ten years ago less than 11 percent of American farms had electric high line service, says a recent report by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. At that time, farm electrification had reached 85 percent in Denmark, 90 percent in Germany, 95 percent in France, and practically 100 percent in Holland.

Even today, with slightly more than 40 percent of U. S. farms electrified, the United States is still far behind these and other countries in that respect.

Recent rural electrification programs have demonstrated that even thinly populated rural areas can be served by the application of the area coverage principle, report extension agricultural engineers.

WE ARE RECONVERTED!

Just as our facilities were immediately available for the necessities of war when the Japs struck at Pearl Harbor, so they are now ready for the peacetime needs for electric service. During the period of the war we built a new steam generating plant at Chickasaw with 80,000 kilowatts of capacity and installed a new 60,000 kilowatt generating unit at our existing Gorgas Steam Plants. Today a total generating capacity of 745,450 kilowatts is available for peacetime production of electricity.

This capacity became available instantly peace was declared. There was no reconversion problem.

As materials and equipment become available and as our skilled men return from military service we will accelerate our construction and improvement program so that all in our service area who desire electric service will receive it.

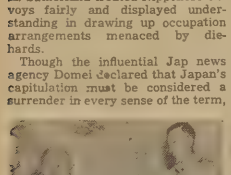
WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Japs Prepared for Occupation; Industry Given Go-Ahead Sign; Revamp Agriculture Department

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

The war over, industry turned to the big job of reconversion. Getting a head start, this stove plant in Detroit, Mich., already is turning out gas ranges on a quantity basis.



JAPAN:
Occupation Readied

The Japanese government having made every preparation to avoid disturbances, powerful American armed forces were scheduled to take over occupation duties in Nippon, with air-borne sky-troopers the first to land in the bomb-shattered islands.

Having striven mightily to control fanatical die-hards, Premier Higashi-Kuni's new regime moved strong Japanese garrisons out of the Tokyo area where U. S. landings were scheduled to take place to prevent outbreaks. Meanwhile, the population was warned not to fraternize with the occupation forces.

With plans for the U. S. landings and signing of the formal surrender to General MacArthur in the Tokyo area worked out at preliminary conferences at Manila, the Jap newspaper Asahi said the American delegation headed by Lt. Gen. Richard K. Sutherland treated Nipponese envoys fairly and displayed understanding in drawing up occupation arrangements menaced by die-hards.

Though the influential Jap news agency Domei declared that Japan's capitulation must be considered a surrender in every sense of the term, it added that the Potsdam ultimatum evinced leniency to the extent of permitting Nipponese soldiers to return peacefully to the homeland; allowing non-war industries to operate and participate in world trade, and limiting occupation to certain areas.

Lieutenant General Kawabe presents credentials to Lieutenant General Sutherland at Manila surrender conference.

Elation over the formal signing of the surrender in the Tokyo area was dampened by the threat of civil war in China, where the northern Communist faction headed by Mao Tze-tung worked as a separate governmental unit in defiance of the central regime of Chiang Kai-shek. Backing Chiang, but seeking an amicable settlement of differences between the two elements, U. S. Ambassador Patrick Hurley worked strenuously to bring the dissidents together.

RECONVERSION:
Bars Down

With government removal of most controls except those designed to assure equitable distribution of scarce materials to speed up all-out production, manufacturers were given the green light on reconversion.

At the same time, the department of agriculture abolished limitations on the amount of fluid milk, light cream, buttermilk and chocolate milk that distributors could sell to civilians, and the office of defense transportation lifted restrictions on the operation of inter-city buses and permitted travel on railroad passenger trains returning after troop movements.

In taking down the bars to civilian output, the War Production board declared the sky was the limit in the manufacture of refrigerators, radios, stoves, electric fans, washing machines and other laundry equipment.

Restrictions also were lifted on production of distilled spirits, trucks, oil furnaces, construction machinery, metal furniture, motorcycles, photographic film, storage batteries, caskets, flashlights, silk and cotton duck, matches, paper cups and food containers, waxed paper and sanitary napkins.

In addition to removing controls on civilian consumer output, the WPB also acted to speed up manufacture of such industrial and commercial items as machine tools, shipping containers, pulpwood, dental burrs and other dental equipment, jute and allied products and many chemicals.

In line with the government policy of maintaining close supervision over scarce materials to help speed up output, WPB revealed that control would be retained over distribution of textiles for manufacture of women's dresses until supply balanced demand. Manufacturers producing apparel certified as essential by WPB will be given priority on material.

Taxes Total 44 Billion

With income taxes accounting for more than half the total, the U. S. collected almost 44 billion dollars in taxes in 1944, approximately 3½ billion more than in the preceding year.

At almost 24 billion dollars, income taxes topped the list, with liquor levies next at 2⅛ billion; miscellaneous, 1 billion, 430 million; tobacco, 930 million; manufacturers' excises on goods, 782 million; jewelry, furs, toilet preparations and luggage, 424 million; amusements, 357 million, and auto stamps, 128 million.

Representing an increase of over 40 million dollars over 1943, employment taxes totalled over 1 billion, 779 million.

AGRICULTURE:
Reorganize Department

Created in 1933 to help lift farmers out of the depression slough, and revamped in 1936 to give them a greater voice in its formulation of programs, the Agricultural Adjustment agency—the famed triple AAA—passed out of existence in a reorganization of the department of agriculture by Secretary Clinton Anderson.

Henceforth, AAA duties will be undertaken by a new super-agency charged with integrating the varied department of agriculture operations. Thousands of local and state AAA agents will be retained for the production and marketing programs, while crop adjustment legislation remains on the statute books for future use.

Organized primarily along commodity lines, the new super-agency, known as the production and marketing administration, will be headed by J. B. Hutson, with directors for the livestock, dairy, poultry, fats and oils, fruits and vegetables, sugar, grains and tobacco industries.

In addition to AAA, the new production and marketing administration will take over the offices of basic commodities, supply, marketing services, requirements and allocations, price, transportation, materials and facilities, labor, home food supply of investigatory services and the surplus commodities and federal crop insurance corporations.

Polio Fund Collections Top Record

Topping last year's unprecedented donations by more than 50 per cent, the U. S. contributed $16,589,874 to the 1945 March of Dimes of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, as against $10,973,491 for 1944, it was revealed.

Of the total amount of funds raised, 50 per cent is allocated to national headquarters of the National Foundation to finance research into the cure and prevention of infantile paralysis, and a broad educational program which includes scholarships and fellowships in orthopedic nursing, physical therapy, orthopedic surgery, virology and health education, as well as to maintain an emergency epidemic fund to aid county chapters in areas hard hit by outbreaks of the disease.

MEAT:
Remove Set Asides

Reflecting decreased military demands and prospects of a heavy run of cattle in the coming months, the government removed set-aside orders of beef, veal and ham under which packers were required to reserve certain output for the services.

As in the case of the removal of rationing of canned fruits and vegetables because of heavy reductions in military orders, smaller service requirements may also result in an early end to meat control.

Though the government still will be seeking large quantities of meat for the services and relief programs abroad, the new ruling suspending set-asides means that its procurement agencies will have to bid for products along with civilians.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS:
British Policy

Though the British Laborite and Conservative may differ on internal problems, they stand as one on foreign affairs for the preservation of the country's vital overseas interests, and this could not have been demonstrated more strongly than in the foreign minister's declaration of the new government's policy before commons.

In enunciating the policy, big and burly Ernest Bevin revealed that the Laborites would hew to the path worked out by Churchill's coalition government and embracing a strong union of Democratic nations in western Europe; preservation of vital economic and military interests in the Near East, and retention of the Asiatic empire.

Though Britain's No. 1 labor boss, Bevin handled Russia roughly, declaring that the present Red-backed Bulgarian, Hungarian and Romanian governments represented a switch from one brand of totalitarianism to another, and could not be recognized by London.

Try Quisling

Charged with military and civil treason, 16 specific murders and various other crimes, Vidkun Quisling stood trial in Oslo, Norway, for collaboration with the Germans, openly defiant despite the array of evidence presented by the prosecution.

Vidkun Quisling

So nooner had the trial opened than Prosecutor Schjoedt threw a bombshell into the proceedings by declaring that Quisling had received $80,000 in gold for his part in planning the German invasion of the country. The whole operation was conducted in conformity with information Quisling had supplied in frequent visits to Germany, Schjoedt said, basing his charges on documents reportedly discovered in the Reich.

Hard pressed, Quisling asserted that his collaboration spared not only Norway but the entire Scandinavian peninsula from becoming a battleground.

Free Elections

Hopes for U. S., British, French and Russian assurance of free elections in Red-dominated European states were dimmed by Moscow's refusal to participate in the observation of the forthcoming Greek balloting on the grounds that it did not approve of interference in the voting of foreign governments.

Russia defined its position even as the U. S. and Britain raked the Red-backed Bulgarian government's election plans, calling for the balloting on only one slate of candidates picked by the coalition regime. Opposition was based on the allegation that the coalition government is not widely representative of the Bulgarian people, but is dominated by communists, who put up a single slate sympathetic to the party.

In refusing to jointly participate in guaranteeing free elections, Russia could hearken back to the Potsdam declaration, which failed to set up machinery to assure unfettered voting in Poland.

LEND-LEASE:
Comes to End

Passed to aid countries whose defense was considered vital to the U. S., the $40,000,000,000 lend-lease program was brought to an end as observers speculated on the effects of the termination upon war-shattered European economies.

Because of the desire to avoid social unrest and political disturbances, credit may be quickly extended to foreign purchasers through the recently expanded Export-Import bank of the U. S., set up to finance American buying and selling abroad.

Though lend-lease was officially ended, requisitions presently contracted for on behalf of France, Belgium and the Netherlands under special repayment plans will be completed.

FEEDER STOCK:

Although estimates of actual numbers of cattle on feed on August 1 have not been made, available information indicates that the number this year, while 16 per cent larger than last, was smaller than the August 1 number in any other year since 1937.

Compared with last year, the numbers on feed on August 1 this year were up in all but Ohio, Indiana and Michigan, with the largest increases in the western corn belt states.

India's Army Force For Unifying Country

Common Language and Habits Tend to Break Down Former Prejudices; Troops Take Leadership in Communal Affairs.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, 1616 Eye Street NW, Washington, D. C.

One heartening postwar picture arose out of the welter of hope, fear and expectation which held Washington in its grip through the news of the atomic bombs, the entrance of Russia into the war and then the exciting flash from Japan that kept us on tenter-hooks so long. When there seemed little to contemplate about but the lush growth of evil which had sprung from the planting of the dragon's teeth of war, I found, strangely enough, in the office of the representative of India in Washington the belief that the war would turn out to be, in one respect, a blessing to that perturbed country.

India has furnished an army of 2½ million men (the largest volunteer force in the world) in the prosecution of this war and that army has turned out to be "the greatest school of adult education" in the world. That's what the Indians proudly call it. True, soldiers in other armies have been "taught while they fought," but few have ever been able to add so much to the total knowledge of their nation.

I am told that after the last war, when an Indian village was found, especially in the Punjab, which was a little better run, with more progressive ideas and a more active social consciousness, it would also be discovered that its moving spirit was an ex-soldier—an Indian (Hindu or Moslem, Rajput or Sikh, no matter) who had brought home ideas on sanitation and hygiene, cooperation and understanding, absorbed during his period of service at home or abroad. But now the potentialities of this military missionaryship are immensely greater. Not merely because the Indian army is so much bigger, but because already it has served as a great melting pot, breaking down ancient prejudices and taboos which heretofore have made Indian unity impossible.

General's Spirit Hopeful Sign

If tall, lean and eager General Cariappa, with whom I talked at length when he was here on a mission connected with the founding of a new military academy in India, is typical, the army is indeed a force. His enthusiasm, his optimism and his energy are hopeful signs in themselves. I enjoyed that interview, seated in the office of the Agent General for India, where I heard this earnest man speak with an apparent sincerity and conviction which could not help but impress anyone who heard him.

General Cariappa was one of the first Indian cadets to be commissioned in the Indian army in 1920. As a young man he had not yet attained his majority. He has been in the army ever since and was the first Indian officer to command a battalion. He raised a machine-gun outfit himself and as lieutenant - colonel led his men through the bitter days of the Burma campaign. Now he is a general staff officer, one of India's four brigadiers, and also a member of the army reorganization committee. It was in the latter capacity that he has just completed a tour of inspection of the British military schools at Woolwich and Sandhurst, then the Canadian school at Kingston, and finally West Point and some of our specialist schools. He hopes to take acceptable features of all these schools and combine them in the new Indian Military academy, the site of which has not yet been determined but the plans for which are well under way. The committee on reorganization also hopes to revise Indian preliminary education so that it will develop leadership.

When I saw General Cariappa he was politely but none the less deeply pained over some of the reports in the American press which belittled India's participation in the war. He explained (which we in Washington knew) that there were two Indian soldiers to every one British soldier in the Burma fighting.

General Cariappa is working to prepare a completely independent Indian army. It is also, I dare to suggest, for an independent India. As a soldier, the general refused to discuss politics, but he said that naturally every loyal Indian looks forward to the independence of his country — "Something," he said, "which every one of our soldiers who has been fighting for the ideals of the United Nations expects." Like his fellow-countrymen and the British officers with whom I have talked, General Cariappa is proud of the seeds of unity which have been sown in the army.

In the first place, the army speaks and also reads and writes one language. Most of the soldiers when they enlist are of the peasant class and are illiterate. When their training commences they are immediately taught to read and write in Roman Urdu, which is a simplified Hindustani written with English (Roman) letters. Aside from the value of eradicating illiteracy, the knowledge and use of a common language removes one of the chief obstacles to harmony and understanding among the people. (There are 12 principal languages and 100 dialects spoken in India.) Many prejudices go when the language barrier is broken down. When the war is over at least 2½ million Indians will have the bond of a common tongue.

But more than that, they will have lived together, eaten together, in the field at least, lived in close companionship in barracks and developed teamwork and tolerance. There has been some suggestion that Basic English be made the official language of the army in India, and while, for the present, Hindustani appears more practical, the former has been taught on a large scale.

General Cariappa has a sense of humor and a perfect command of English (basic, colloquial and classic) in which to express it. (He went to school in England as a boy.) He told me the following story to illustrate the ramifications of the language problem in the Indian army:

A young British officer remarked to his native sergeant that it was really remarkable that in his comparatively small unit of only 300 men, six different languages were spoken.

"Oh, more than that, sir," the sergeant answered. "Nine different languages are spoken here. There are the six provincial languages. Then there is English, which you and I speak. Then there is Hindustani, which we all must speak. Then there is YOUR Hindustani."

Army With a Language Problem

It is true that most of the Indian army has remained within the continental limits of the country, but that is not really strange, General Cariappa explained, since it takes 18 men "in the tail" as he put it, to keep one fighting man going. Many foreigners, seeing so many uniforms in India, received the impression that the whole army was "sitting down." These men, of course, are not combat troops held back for political or other reasons, the general said, but are largely the work troops, the great service of supply required to keep the armies in the field going.

The general claims that Indian soldiers are second to none as fighting men. The greater proportion of them are Madrashi, not at all the traditional fighting tribes who in the past have constituted what was called the "martial race." That term, long outmoded, has long since been dropped. The excuse for its use disappeared much earlier.

In the past there may have been some basis for this concept. Fighting begets fighters. As the British conquest of India moved slowly northward it left peace behind it, but ignited war ahead of it. So the northerners were the last whose vocation, or at least avocation, was mortal combat. The southerners returned to the gentler arts. But to return to the general. He quoted that truism which all military men know is sound: "There are no bad soldiers. There are only bad officers."

Let me end this column as I began it. If General Cariappa is typical of India's officers, there is hope, not only for a powerful Indian army, which I, with the rest of you, pray India will never need, but hope that here among these 2½ million men who have found a common tongue and a common purpose has been planted the leven of tolerance that may bring about the unity of a free India.

Kidneys Must Work Well-

For You To Feel Well

24 hours every day, 7 days every week, never stopping, the kidneys filter waste matter from the blood.

If more people were aware of how the kidneys must constantly remove surplus fluid, excess acids and other waste matter that cannot stay in the blood without injury to health, there would be better understanding of why the whole system is upset when kidneys fail to function properly.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination sometimes warns that something is wrong. You may suffer nagging backache, headaches, dizziness, rheumatic pains, getting up at nights, swellings.

Why not try Doan's Pills? You will be using a medicine recommended the country over. Doan's stimulate the function of the kidneys and help them to flush out poisonous waste from the blood. They contain nothing harmful. Get Doan's today. Use with confidence. At all drug stores.

Confesses Crime For Which Broker Went to Prison

Innocent Man Who Served 3 Years Is Cleared by Notorious Forger.

NEW YORK. — A man identified by government agents as one of the "smoothest" check forgers in the country admitted in federal court that he was guilty of a forgery for which a former Wall street broker was sent to Sing Sing in June, 1938, a special to the Chicago Tribune reports.

The man who confessed the crime is Alexander D. L. Thiel, 57, who was sentenced to four years in prison on another forgery charge by Federal Judge Arthur D. Healey. Thiel's forgeries since 1930 in various parts of the country were estimated to have netted $480,000.

Victim Gained Parole.

The innocent victim of Thiel's activities was identified by Assistant United States Atty. John J. Donovan Jr. as Bertram M. Campbell, 57, who lives with his wife and three children at Floral Park, N. Y. Campbell was paroled after serving 3 years and 4 months of a 5 to 10 years' sentence. He has been working as a coal dealer's clerk, being unable to resume his Wall street business.

Donovan said that Thiel opened an account in the Trust Company of North America here in November, 1937, under the name of F. W. Blackstone. He deposited checks for $3,000 and $4,575 drawn on the Central Hanover Bank and Trust company under the name of George Workmaster, and before the end of the month drew out $3,150.

Tried to Aid Victim.

When Workmaster received his bank statement, he complained to the bank and the police. Campbell, similar in appearance to Thiel, was arrested, charged with the crime, and convicted when bank employes identified him as the man who opened the account. In addition, Thiel had given the bank the telephone number of a business office in which Campbell had had dealings in the past.

Thiel finally was arrested in March for another case while undergoing treatment for drug addiction in a hospital at Lexington, Ky. The forgery for which he was sent to prison involved a $4,000 check drawn on a Boston bank.

Donovan said Thiel's conscience bothered him to the extent that he tried to help Campbell by committing a similar forgery early in 1941 to show the real criminal was still at large.

Campbell will ask Governor Dewey for a full pardon and will seek legislative permission to sue the state to recover damages for his false imprisonment.

Doughboy's Rifle Ends Jap's Eerie Death Chant

WITH THE 24TH DIVISION NEAR DAVAO. — For more than 15 minutes the lone Jap chanted his eerie song of death. Then he died.

It was in fierce fighting around Ula, west of Davao. Pfc. Cloves H. Lee, Leesville, La., veteran rifleman with the 34th infantry regiment, was on sentry duty that dismal night, when he heard noise near his foxhole. He picked out a target and fired.

Several seconds silence followed. Then the song filtered through the night, mournful and weird. The Jap chanted while the doughboys listened. The sharp flare of a match stabbed through the night as the Jap lit a fuse. Lee's rifle cracked, and the explosive slid from a pair of lifeless hands, the fuse still sizzling.

An instant later an explosion filled the air with grenade fragments and bits of Jap.

Roll of Pennies Leads to Arrest of Safecracker

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.—A six-year-old boy, youngest safecracker on record, admitted to police he opened a safe in a market and fled with four rolls of pennies amounting to $2.

The child said he entered a market near midnight, saw no one near the safe, and went to work on it. He said he had seen employees of the store turn the knob and vaguely remembered the combination.

When the safe door swung open after a bit of knob-twisting, he scooped up the money and left. A street railway inspector who saw him flashing the pennies at a neighborhood corner turned him over to authorities.

Foster Parents Chain 2 Boys to Basement Pipes

PROVO, UTAH.—Two young boys were released after sheriff's officers found them chained to plumbing pipes in the basement of their home because they had refused to help with the chores on their foster parents' farm.

The captives, Neil Smith, 11, and Jimmy Hart, 14, told investigating officers they were imprisoned by their foster parents, Mr. and Mrs. Earl Dalley.

Officers said they found the youths tethered by the ankles with a heavy 15-foot chain.

Dalley admitted charges of mistreatment, officers said, but his wife denied guilt.

Man Killed by Laugh Over Full Stomach

PRINCE RUPERT, B. C. — A hearty laugh over a dinner table joke led to the death of Charles Biehl, 60.

"Biehl's stomach was filled with food and created a pressure on his heart, which caused it to stop beating when he leaned forward during his laugh," Coroner R. E. Coleman testified.

Yank Finds Wife Married to Pal

First Husband Was Reported Killed in Action.

SPOKANE. — Two soldiers, one of whom returned from a Jap prison camp to find his bride married again and the mother of a three-month-old daughter by her new husband, waited for the girl to make her choice.

The girl remarried after her husband had been reported killed in action and the government began sending her insurance checks. Now the first soldier has returned and is convalescing at Fort Lewis, Wash. His identity had been unknown for more than a year at the Jap camp because of a temporary loss of memory.

The story was disclosed recently by the Rev. D. A. Russell, Presbyterian pastor and director of the Interchurch Servicemen's center here.

He said that the second husband had told him of the case after he had entered the service center to make a long-distance telephone call to the first husband. The pastor said he did not know the names of those involved.

"What makes the case so poignant is the fact that the two husbands are close friends, and both courted the girl two years ago," the pastor said. "The Spokane boy bowed out in favor of his pal then. When his friend was reported killed, however, he married the girl."

The two soldier-friends agreed to let their wife make her choice, and now "she is in a terrible state of mind because she loves them both and doesn't want to hurt either of them," the Rev. Mr. Russell said.

Sherman Tank Attacked By Frightened Horse

WITH THE MARINES.—Marine tanks were meeting little opposition during the early days on Okinawa, that is until they ran up against one unit of unmounted Jap "cavalry."

A 32-ton Sherman tank commanded by Gy/Sgt. William R. Ford of Duquoin, Ill., actually was attacked by a frightened horse, according to Sgt. A. D. Hawkins, USMC combat correspondent.

"The horse got up on its front legs and tried to kick in the side of our tank with its hoofs. We stopped the tank so the horse wouldn't get hurt. After we let him blast away a while he got tired. Finally he trotted off in a huff."

Veteran Strikes Gold In Old Leased Mine

CRIPPLE CREEK, COLO.—Herman Conrow found a gold-lined foxhole when he was discharged from the army six months ago. He says he has taken $25,000 out of it.

He obtained a lease on the Portland Gold Mine's No. 1 shaft under the split-check leasing system, with no investment except his labor.

In a few days he picked into gold ore so rich that it was sacked for shipment to the mill, instead of being loaded into cars in the customary fashion. Much of this ore ran 80 ounces of gold (at $35 an ounce) to the ton.

Under the leasing system the mining company furnishes all equipment; Conrow does the work, and they split 50-50.

Private John Doe Was Expectant of Good Meal

REGINA, SASK. — Tom Melville, recently returned to Canada from a German prisoner of war camp, told this story:

Liberated prisoners of war flocked back to England in such large numbers that authorities were unable to supply them food ration cards. However, there was an abundance of extra ration cards for expectant mothers.

In order to eat, a group of Dieppe prisoners were given cards which read: "It is hereby certified that Pvt. John Doe is an expectant mother and in need of extra rations."

Destiny Works Overtime, Finally Unites Brothers

NEW YORK. — The long arm of coincidence, after much persuasion, brought two soldier-brothers home together from Europe.

Pvts. Vestil and Isaac Lawing of Greenville, Tenn., hadn't seen each other for four years, during which two other brothers in the family were killed in action.

Vestil and Isaac were 40 miles apart at Munich after V-E Day and didn't know it. Next they were in the same army camp near London for five days and didn't know it. Finally, they didn't know they were in the same room together until they looked up

JOSEPH'S PLACE IN GOD'S PLAN

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 39:20-23; 41:14-16, 25, 41-43.

GOLDEN TEXT—Seest thou a man diligent in his business? he shall stand before kings.—Proverbs 22:29.

Does it pay to trust God? Does He know about the sorrows and the troubles of His people? Does He have anything to do with the affairs of the world? Men are asking such questions in our day, and we have the answer in God's dealings with men in the past.

The story of Joseph is fascinating from almost any angle, but it holds no more important truth than that the man who honors God in his life will be honored by God (I Sam. 2:30), even in the hardest place, yes, and in the highest position.

Joseph appears before us in our lesson as

I. A Prisoner Prospered by God (39:20-23).

It is surprising how often one finds God's men in the Scriptures in prison. Their determination to live upright and honorable lives ran so counter to the plans of the world that in the inevitable clash there came persecution.

The story of how Joseph became the object of his brother's jealousy and was sold as a slave into Egypt; how he prospered there only to be disgraced and imprisoned because of the lying accusation of an angry woman—all these are in the background of our lesson.

Now that he was in prison, presumably his influence was gone and his usefulness at an end. Not so, for God can be with a man in the prison as well as in the palace.

He soon became the head man of the jail. Imagine a prisoner taking over the keeper's work! Then, too, he there met the king's chief butler who, though forgetting for a time, did eventually say the word which brought Joseph back into power (see Gen. 40:14-23; 41:9-13).

The obvious lesson and blessed truth here is that when one of God's people finds himself in a difficult place, he can rest assured that God is still working out His own blessed purpose. Why not trust Him and look for His deliverance?

Joseph the God-prospered prisoner now becomes

II. A Prophet Prepared by God (41:14-16, 25).

The hour had come when a man was needed who had a word from God. In preparation for the awful years of famine the Lord wanted to use the land of Egypt as His great granary. He wanted thus to preserve the chosen nation of Israel, as well as to meet the needs of others.

The vision of the king, plain as it seemed when interpreted, was unintelligible without the key from God, and He had his man prepared. Joseph was ready to be called from prison to speak the right word at the right time.

How important it is that the Lord's messengers be prepared and ready to respond in the hour of His blessing and opportunity! Many eager Christians look forward to the months and years just ahead of us as the greatest opportunity the Church has had to spread the gospel.

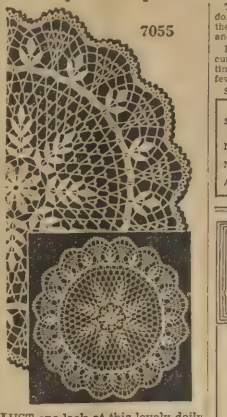
Notice that Joseph gave God the glory (vv. 16-25). The one who really knows what is going on in the world is quick to recognize that only the wisdom and the grace of God are sufficient for man's need. Let the voice of boasting mankind be silenced and let the voice of God speak!

Joseph's prophetic word marked him as God's man to carry out God's plan, so we see him now as

III. A Premier Promoted by God (41:41-43).

"I have set thee over all the land," said Pharaoh, and so he had, but in reality it was God who had planned it, the whole matter. He wanted Joseph there at this time, and there he was.

It may be well to stress the fact that God is interested in government and in the men who hold public office. In fact, the only true foundation for government is found in God. We are told to "be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God" (Rom. 13:1).



The Bible clearly teaches that every governmental agency and every public servant, from the policeman on the corner to the President in the White House, is permitted to exercise authority over his fellowmen only because God has ordained that there should be such government.

Clear it is that every right-thinking official of state and nation should be humble, teachable, discreet, and wise in the exercise of his power, and God-fearing in the discharge of his responsibility.

He who reads may apply the truth of God's Word to himself and find personal blessing. It is a rich and powerful and stimulating Word. Let us use it for God's glory!

Household Hints

When threading a sewing machine needle, hold something white under the needle and it will thread more easily.

To exterminate white flies on house plants, cover with a newspaper canopy and have someone blow smoke under it.

Wash burners on gas stove once a week in a solution made of one gallon water, two tablespoons washing soda and soap flakes. Rinse and dry well.

Wipe off the fruit you have bought with a clean, slightly damp cloth before putting it away. This will clean it and check any rot that may have gotten on it from other fruits.

To keep a hem even, in a dress or other garment, after you have sewn an inch or two, insert a piece of cardboard the width of the hem and about six inches long and slip it along as you sew.

CLANTON RECAPPING SERVES PUBLIC WELL

Organized Here 2 Years Ago Have Handled More Than 80,000 Tires

The Clanton Recapping Company, of which Mr. H. G. Morgan is resident manager, opened their doors for business two years ago and since that time have served residents of Central Alabama with thousands of tires and tubes. The principal business and their specialty is recapping. Mr. Morgan says if the extra miles he has put into old tires with his recapping since coming to Chilton County, could be laid end to end it would reach many times around the world.

Mr. Morgan is a factory-trained expert in recapping and has had 17 years experience in this work. When you want recapping done or want good advice about your tires, the employees at Clanton Recapping Company are ready to serve you. Consult with them about your next tire trouble.

LEGAL NOTICES

The State of Alabama, Chilton County —Circuit Court in Equity. No. 2357 Evelyn Mitchell Lacy, Complainant vs. Horace Denver Lacy, Defendant

In this cause it is made to appear to the Register by the affidavit of Evelyn Mitchell Lacy that the Defendant is a non-resident, and that his place of residence and post office address is unknown, and that such address cannot be ascertained after reasonable effort; and, further, that, in the belief of said affiant, the Defendant is over the age of twenty-one years.

It is therefore, ordered by the Register that publication be made in the Chilton County News, a newspaper published in the County of Chilton, once a week for four consecutive weeks, requiring him, the said Horace Denver Lacy, to plead, answer, or demur to the bill of complaint in this cause by the 6th day of October, 1945, or, in thirty days thereafter, a decree pro confesso may be taken against him.

Done at office in Clanton, Alabama, this 6th day of August, 1945.

OURS HAS BEEN A WAR JOB . . .

"GOD has crowned our arms with victory and a stirring chapter in the history of our country comes to a close—a chapter in which at all times you have met war's all-out demands for telephone service with speed and skill and devotion.

"The determined manner in which telephone folks accepted and discharged their high responsibility—the 3,705 who served as members of the armed forces and those of you who stayed at your post—deserves the highest praise. You did your job well and you made other important contributions through your splendid record of War Bond purchases, your blood donations and other essential homefront activities. With an overwhelming sense of pride in the sort of folks you are I say, my sincere thanks to you all.

"With thankfulness in our hearts in the triumph of our Nation and its Allies, we look forward to the return of the men and women who left us to enter the Armed Forces. We shall bear forever in our hearts the memory of those who made the Supreme Sacrifice."

FSA Is Prepared For Rush Of Veterans Seeking Farms

An increased number of applications for farm ownership and farm operating loans in the Farm Security Administration program was forecast today by Robert O. Williams, Acting County FSA Supervisor, as the homecoming tide of veterans and war workers continues to rise.

The Congress, he said, recently authorized $25,000,000 in earmarked funds for veterans of World War II to purchase family type farms through the FSA under terms of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act. Under this act loans are made by FSA to veterans for the outright purchase of farms and for the construction of needed buildings on the farm. The loans are for a maximum period of 40 years and bear interest at three per cent. Veterans experienced in farming and who are unable to obtain credit from private sources or who are in need of the technical guidance offered by FSA are eligible to apply for the loans. Applications may be filed with the County FSA Supervisor.

Veterans and war workers who wish to rent farms and are unable to obtain operating loans from other sources are eligible for consideration for operating loans in the rehabilitation program. These loans may be used for the purchase of livestock, workstock, seed, feed, fertilizer, tools and all farm and home operating needs. They extend usually for a period of five years and bear interest at five per cent.

All applications are subject to the approval of the County Farm Security Administration Committee, composed of well-known local farmers.

SEWING MACHINE REPAIR SHOP MOVING

The Clanton Sewing Machine Repair Shop that has been located next to Bean Grocery for the past several weeks is moving next Monday to their new home in the building formerly occupied by Matson's Cafe. Mr. Miller, proprietor, is adding a used furniture line in connection with his sewing machine repair business.

COX CONCRETE PRODUCTS SUPPLIES HEAVY DEMAND FOR BLOCKS

Shortage of lumber and forest products have turned many home builders to concrete products in the past two years. Seeing the demand for such Mr. Charlie Cox organized the Cox Concrete Products, located in South Clanton. Mr. Cox and his crew turn out nearly fifteen hundred blocks per day. He is also equipped to make concrete pipe from four inches to 48 inches.

The concrete blocks take anywhere from three to five days before they are ready for use and the demand is so great that Mr Cox cannot make them as fast as they are called for. Along with these services Mr Cox also mixes concrete for the public and solicits the business of anyone desiring this type of work.

Training Institute To Be Held Here September 17-21

Chilton County's first Recreation Training Institute, sponsored by the Chilton County Board of Education, will be held September 17-21 in the high school gymnasium with Mr. D. P. Culp, Director, and Mr. Patterson Hicks, Chairman of General Arrangements. The two daily sessions of the Institute will be conducted by Miss Ruth G. Ehlers, a highly trained representative from the National Recreation Association. Miss Ehlers conducted a successful recreation course last winter in Montgomery.

The Recreation Training Institute is designed to instruct any adult in the county who is interested in recreation, particularly those who are leaders in school, church and club activities, and those who provide entertainment for young people. The Institute is for the benefit of any person who wishes to help with the recreation problem of his community. Through actual participation in varied types of recreation, the members of the Institute will learn what they will in turn teach other in the county.

Post-war recreation, adult recreation, the planning of programs for different age interests, sources of material, the community recreation center and qualities of the recreational leader will be among the subjects discussed. The principal activities in which members will participate will be get acquainted games, musical mixers, singing games, quiet games in small spaces, dramatics, stunts and nature hike. On the final day of the Institute, there will be a community party demonstration with all members participating.

Any one who desires to become a member is requested to turn in his name to Miss Elsie Schuster, Clanton, Ala. Since membership will be limited to only 200 people, all those interested are urged to submit their names promptly. Next week a list of committees will be published with other information concerning the institute.

PILOT CLUB HOLDS PROGRAM MEETING

Mollie Belle Smith was hostess to the Clanton Pilot Club on last Tuesday night when they enjoyed a program meeting in charge of Misses Jones and Miriam Gerald. Games, contests that were both interesting and educational, were part of the program. Useful prizes were given to winners.

A salad plate, with refreshing punch, was served to a large percentage of Club members and guests.

The next meeting will be business at the home of Mae Vinson on Lay Dam Road September 11th.

Sericea Stand Satisfactory

Some of the cooperators of the North Central Soil Conservation District seem to be somewhat disappointed in their new stands of sericea and were thinking about plowing up the sericea and planting more next year. They thought that the stand of sericea were too thin; but after a careful inspection, plenty of sericea was found on the ground. If you are in doubt, ask someone who knows something about sericea before you plow it up. After a careful inspection of an apparently thin stand, you may find sericea plants of all sizes. Some plants may be small but they are all right.

Three cooperators in the Training School Community, are going to establish crotalaria on their row-crop land next year by planting one row to crotalaria and two rows to corn. With crotalaria in every third row, enough seed will be made the first year to give a good covering and add a satisfactory amount of nitrogen and organic matter to the soil. In order to get the most good from the crotalaria, they plan to arrange their row crops on the land so that it will produce a good crop of seed every other year.

City Officials Plan Improvements For Post-War Clanton

Amusement Tax Scheduled To Repay Cost Of Nine Months School

Mayor F. Leo Thompson and the City Council have already started their post-war planning and big things are promised within the next few years.

On September 1st, Mr. S. D. Brown of Atlanta, accepted the office here as City Engineer. His duties will be maintenance of all city property now owned as well as street and other engineering work in the future. Mr. Brown has brought his family here to live.

Canvass was made this week by the Parent Teachers Association and local clubs as to the advisability of placing a two-cent amusement tax on the populace. Sentiment it appears is for the tax as the money will go to extending the Grammar School term to nine months. Other cities over the State of like size are already running a full nine-months term and the extra month is badly needed in our school.

According to Mayor Thompson in a statement Monday, any excess money derived from the tax will go into a Park and Recreation Center Fund. This is another forward step taken by the City Council that has been needed here for a long time.

In cooperation with the State Planning Board, a local planning board has been named consisting of six members: H. G. Arnold, Chairman; Gee Jester, J. Hance Alred, I. S. Levine, Mrs. Lee Smith and Patterson Hicks. Two members of the Council were named to assist this Board. They are H. G. Heflin and James Wade.

Duties of the Board are to survey plans and specifications furnished by the State Board and determine most suitable methods applicable to Clanton.

Program For Pastors Conference Next Saturday

We are glad to report that the Chilton County Pastors Conference which meets at the Clanton Baptist Church on Saturday evening before the second Sunday in each month is taking on unusual interest on the part of many pastors. We take this means of inviting all the pastors to our next meeting which will be next Saturday evening at 3 o'clock.

Below is the program for the evening conference next Saturday:

1. A 15-minute devotional by Rev. Homer Carroll.
2. Business meeting or round table discussion.
3. "The Need of the Ministry Standing Together in the Reconstruction Period Just Ahead," by Rev. Roswell E. Owens. You will do well to avail yourselves of the opportunity of attending this service.

Come and bring other ministers with you.—G. G. Williams, Edwin Wilkins, Page Kelly, Chairman, M. Lockhart, Secretary-Treasurer.

Kathleen Norris Says:

When the Lonely Wife Flirts

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

"This man is married, has a wife and two daughters in some eastern state. He is about 32, and very attractive."

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

ON MY desk today is a letter from a girl in Seattle, Wash., whose problem is poised between loyalty to the father who is away in the service, and the wife he left behind him.

"My own mother died when I was nine," writes Jo-Ann Davis. "Two years later my father married a lovely gentle woman who had been my mother's friend. She was a true mother to me, and until her sudden death in a motor accident two years ago, my father and I were happy. Six months after the accident he married a third wife, whom I will call Betty. My father is 44, Betty 28. I am 19.

"Dad met Betty on a trip to Chicago; they had known each other but three weeks when they were married. I had never seen her until she came to the house to be my new mother. I am a nurses' aid, and it was a great relief to have Betty there managing things, planning good meals and keeping my adored father happy. I have grown very fond of her; it is impossible not to like her, she is so helpful, cheerful, enthusiastic and affectionate.

"The trouble is that Dad, who is a lieutenant in the army, was ordered away overseas about seven months ago, and immediately after he left a change came over my young stepmother. She began to go out nights with various men, dancing and dining, and, of course, drinking somewhat, and often not home until early morning hours. Since we were just two women this wasn't so important, for I manage my own breakfast and lunch at the hospital, but what seems to me important is that there is now one man with whom Betty is falling in love. He is constantly here—he is a naval officer on duty near here; all the others have dropped away. Betty has been absent from home all night more than once in the last month, and she laughs and flushes when I make any comment on the affair.

He Is 'Very Attractive.'

"This man is married, has a wife and two daughters in some eastern state. He is about 32, and very attractive. The other day he walked to the piano and turned my father's portrait face down, saying jokingly, 'I don't think I like this man, Betty.' I was at the other end of the room, telephoning to a friend, but I heard it and saw it. Betty stood the portrait up, and it still stands, but it shows how he feels.

"What I want to know is whether it is my duty to write my father of this state of affairs. It is very hard to write him at all and not mention Paul. Yet I don't know what he could do about it, and it seems terrible to tell tales on Betty. I've gone as far as to say to her that I hoped Paul wasn't dimming her memory of a much finer man, and for a moment she was serious—then her usual laughter broke out and her only answer was, 'Jo-Ann, life is fun!'

"Life isn't always fun, and it oughtn't be," this letter concludes. "I feel as if I couldn't just look on at this affair any longer, but I don't know what I can do."

My dear worried little Jo-Ann, I say in answer, I think you have gone as far as you need go, in giving the flirtatious Betty a hint that she is letting the handsome officer infringe upon your father's rights. I wouldn't write him; I think that would be a great mistake. Written words are hard and unmanageable things; to write these words to your father would be to crush the happiest and most confident belief he has.

Your loyalty to him involves only your own conduct, not Betty's. Keep as friendly and unsuspicious as you can; plenty of other tongues will be ready to inform your father of what is going on, if anything really serious is going on. Let your voice always be one of affection for Betty and trust in her.

Leave Betty Isolated.

It would be a good thing if you could go away for awhile, visit an aunt, combine resources with some girl friend, or take a room in the hospital itself. Nothing will straighten Betty out so fast as to feel that she is completely on her own; nothing will warn her admirer more eloquently than to feel that the decks are cleared and that he and she must either end their affair or face possibly serious consequences. Most men with nice wives far away, and baby daughters, have no permanent intentions in regard to a love affair.

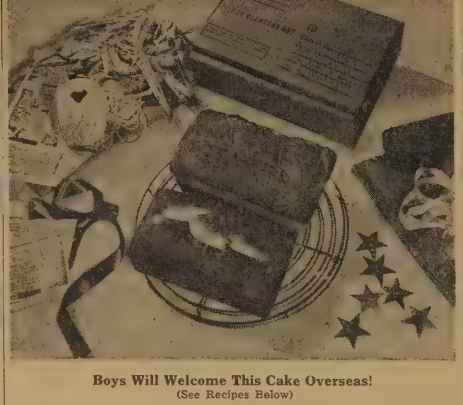
But it's a good rule for us all, mothers and mothers-in-law, neighbors, spies, gossips, children—not to write suspicions to our servicemen. A casual criticism lightly penned in a pleasant morning-room, with peaceful skies overhead, may gather momentum as it goes overseas, and land with the effect of a block-buster on a lonely heart. There'll be a lot of explaining and straightening-out to do when your Dad comes home. Leave it to Betty.

"Is it my duty to tell my father?"

A DAUGHTER'S DUTY

Has a daughter a duty to tell her father how her stepmother is behaving while he is away in the army? That is the question posed by a reader, Jo-Ann. She is 19, her stepmother is 28, her father 44. Betty, the stepmother, is very nice, affectionate both to Jo-Ann and her father. Furthermore, she is a good cook and home-manager. Everything was splendid until Jo-Ann's father, an army officer, went overseas.

Betty then began to run around with men, stay out late, drink and dance. Lately she has been seeing only one man, a handsome naval officer named Paul. The affair is getting serious, Jo-Ann realizes. She has mentioned the matter to Betty as delicately as she could, but all Betty replied was "Jo-Ann, life is fun!"



To complicate a bad situation, Paul is married and has two children. Jo-Ann doesn't know what to do. She hates to "tattle" on Betty, whom she still likes very much, yet she feels her father ought to know of his wife's infidelity.

Wringer Shells Peas

A home-made gadget being used by many farm wives is a pea-sheller made of a clothes wringer hitched to a small electric motor. William Jones of Ballantine, Mont., recently rigged up a sheller of this type. He found an old washing machine wringer, mounted it on a base, added pulleys to regulate the speed of the rollers, then hooked on a small one-fourth horsepower motor. The pods split when they are fed to the rollers, the peas pop out, and the shells pass through to the other side.

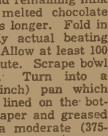
Boys Will Welcome This Cake Overseas!
(See Recipes Below)

Send It Overseas!

It won't be long now before you can start those Christmas presents on their way to the soldiers overseas. Of course, you can send baked goods at any time to the boys in camp here in this country; and sailors and marines stationed overseas can also receive packages at any time.

For your local service centers, you can bake luscious, frosted cakes, but you will have to reserve cakes that will pack well and travel easily for "over there." It has been found that cakes with fruits and nuts stay fresh longer than plainer ones.



Use frosting that doesn't rub off easily or crack if you are sending the cake to some camp in this country. For overseas, it's best to send unfrosted cakes.

The use of cake flour will give a cake fine grain, and such a cake will not crumble easily during shipment. And do pack both cakes and cookies as tightly and securely as you can to assure their arriving in the best possible condition.

Here are some of the nominations for cakes and cookies that pack well and travel easily. The first is an easily mixed fudge type cake:

Fudge Nut Cake.
2 cups sifted cake flour
1 teaspoon soda
¾ teaspoon salt
½ cup vegetable shortening
1¼ cups milk
1 teaspoon vanilla
1½ cups brown sugar, firmly packed
2 eggs, unbeaten
3 squares unsweetened chocolate, melted over boiling water
1 cup coarsely chopped nuts

Sift flour once, measure into a sifter with soda and salt. Have shortening at room temperature, mix or stir to soften. Sift in dry ingredients. Add brown sugar, forcing through a sieve to remove lumps, if necessary. Add ¾ cup milk, vanilla and eggs. Mix until all the flour is dampened, then beat 1 minute. Add remaining milk and blend. Add melted chocolate and beat 2 minutes longer. Fold in nuts. (Count only actual beating time or strokes.) Allow at least 100 strokes to the minute. Scrape bowl and spoon often. Turn into a greased (13x9x2 inch) pan which has been greased lined on the bottom with waxed paper and greased again. Bake in a moderate (375-degree) oven for 35 minutes or until done.

Another good, substantial cake with the flavor of orange, honey and nuts is also a good choice for overseas shipping:

Lynn Says

Try These Tips: Transform yesterday's roast into a scalloped casserole, a quick stew, Shepherd's pie or hash.

Bits of cheese and eggs and vegetables can be ground up, mixed with mayonnaise or salad dressing to make delicious sandwich fillings.

Leftover vegetables are also welcome in soups. Or, add them to meat loaves or mold in gelatin salads.

Leftover sandwiches can be toasted to add new, delightful flavor to them. Call them toast-wiches.

Several kinds of leftover canned or fresh fruit can be a topping for upside-down cake.

Dried out cake and cookies can be used for bread pudding.

Leftover rice makes de luxe waffles or griddle cakes.

Orange Honey Nut Cake.
2 cups sifted cake flour
3½ teaspoons baking powder
¾ teaspoon salt
½ cup butter or shortening
½ cup sugar
⅔ cup honey
2 egg yolks
½ cup orange juice
2 egg whites, stiffly beaten
⅔ cup nuts, if desired

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt and sift together three times. Cream butter thoroughly, add sugar gradually, and cream together until light and fluffy. Add honey slowly and blend. Add egg yolks and beat thoroughly. Add flour, alternately with orange juice, a small amount at a time, beating after each addition until smooth. Fold in egg whites. Bake in two greased 9-inch layer cake pans in a moderate (350-degree) oven 30 to 35 minutes.

There are any number of cookies which will keep easily and travel well even if they travel far. Here are suggestions for those camp and overseas boxes:

Honey Chocolate Chip Cookies.
½ cup butter or substitute
½ cup honey
1 small egg
1 cup sifted flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon vanilla
½ cup semi-sweet chocolate chips
¼ cup nutmeats, chopped

Cream butter and honey until light and fluffy. Add egg and beat well. Sift flour, baking powder and salt twice. Add flour mixture to butter mixture; then add vanilla and blend all well. Fold in chocolate chips and nuts. Chill and drop by spoonfuls on a greased cookie sheet. Bake in a fairly hot (375-degree) oven for 12 minutes.

Honey Pecan Cookies.
½ cup butter or substitute
1 cup honey
1 egg
¼ cup sour milk
2 cups flour
½ teaspoon soda
½ teaspoon salt
¾ cup pecans
¾ cup each of raisins, candied cherries and dates

Cream butter and honey. Add the egg, sour milk, flour which has been sifted with soda and salt. Add the fruits and nuts. Drop on greased tins and bake at 350 degrees for 15 minutes.

Spicy and sweet are these fruit spice bar cookies. They are easy to pack and they mellow with age:

Fruit Spice Bars.
1 cup sifted flour
¼ teaspoon soda
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon ginger
¼ cup shortening
¼ cup brown sugar
½ cup molasses
2 eggs, beaten
¼ teaspoon vanilla
1 cup raisins
¼ cup nuts

Sift together flour, soda, salt and ginger. Cream together shortening and sugar until light and fluffy. Add molasses and blend well. Add eggs and vanilla extract. Mix well. Add flour mixture gradually to creamed mixture, blending well. Fold in raisins and nuts. Spread batter into a greased pan 7x11 inches. Bake in a moderate (350-degree) oven. Cut in bars.

Veterans' SERVICE BUREAU

EDITOR'S NOTE: This newspaper, through special arrangement with the Washington Bureau of Western Newspaper Union at 1616 Eye Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., is able to bring readers this weekly column on problems of the veteran and serviceman and his family. Questions may be addressed to the above Bureau and they will be answered in a subsequent column. No replies can be made direct by mail, but only in the column which will appear in this newspaper regularly.

Employment of Handicapped

Both as an inducement for industry to hire handicapped veterans and a protection to both industry and the veteran, 28 state legislatures have now enacted second-injury-fund statutes which, in general, require employers to pay workmen's compensation only for specific second injuries.

The fund pays the additional costs of permanent total disability resulting from the loss of a hand, arm, foot, leg or eye, following a previous loss of one of these members or organs. The fund is usually financed by payments of fixed amounts by an employer or his insurance company in the case of death of an employee having no dependents. Freed from the fear of heavy permanent total disability charges in these cases, employers are much more willing to employ handicapped workers.

According to records submitted by the department of labor, the cost of maintaining second injury funds is small, for recent studies show handicapped workers are actually more careful than normal employees and have a lower accident frequency.

Employers had been reluctant to hire these handicapped veterans lest they suffer second injuries, become permanently and totally disabled and cost employers increased workmen's compensation charges.

States which have established these second injury funds include Arkansas, Idaho, Illinois, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Utah, Arizona, Colorado, Iowa, Kansas, Maryland, Oregon, Tennessee, Washington and Wyoming. Wisconsin, North Dakota, Ohio and West Virginia have equivalent arrangements while California, Connecticut and Pennsylvania have such legislation pending.

Questions and Answers

Q.—Can the mother of an illegitimate child file an application for family allowance, if a soldier is the father?

A.—Yes, the mother may file application for the child, but she must either have a court order declaring the soldier to be the child's father, or she must have a statement from the soldier admitting parenthood. She must also have a certified copy of the child's birth record. The mother herself is not entitled to family allowance.

Q.—Can a dishonorable discharge be changed to an honorable one?

A.—A former officer or enlisted man or woman may request a rehearing or a review of his case before a five-member board in the war and navy departments. The discharge may be corrected in accordance with the facts. However, these boards may not change the sentence of a court martial.

Q.—Is there an artificial hand available that looks like a hand, and different from the ordinary "hooks" which are most common?

A.—Yes, the navy has developed an artificial hand, made of plastic, that looks like a hand and eliminates the necessity of wearing gloves. It has the consistency of pure rubber and is tinted to match the individual skin. It is operated by a one-pound cam mechanism hidden inside the hand, spring controlled and made of duralumin and permits natural movement of the fingers. Mechanism is operated by a tiny cord running up the arm and around the shoulder, controlled by action of the shoulder muscles.

Q.—I was in the regular army before the war and was discharged due to injury in December, 1940. I have since been working in a war plant and I have a pretty good business opportunity. Do I come under the G.I. Bill of Rights or have I waited too long after my discharge to apply for benefits?

A.—As long as some of your service was after September 16, 1940, you are eligible for G.I. benefits. Assuming you had other than a dishonorable discharge, you may still apply for benefits, since the law requires they must be claimed and secured within two years after discharge, or the end of the war, whichever is later.

Q.—When a soldier's wife receives maternity care under the EMIC government plan, must the application be filed with the Soldier's Relief for payment from the war department?

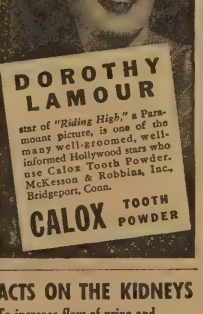
A.—No, the application should be filed with the state health department, through the personal physician or the hospital.

Q.—May a young man marry while he is a cadet in the U. S. Coast Guard Academy?

A.—The navy department says that cadets are not permitted to marry until they have graduated from the coast guard academy.

SNAPPY FACTS about RUBBER

"Hard Sponge," a new synthetic rubber product developed by B. F. Goodrich, combines great strength with extreme lightness. Experiments point to its possible use in airplane wings.



A type of vine recently discovered in China, which attaches itself to trees and other objects, has been found to yield latex (natural rubber). Stems grow to 50 feet in length and yield about a pound of latex.

Inner tubes made with a special type of synthetic rubber hold air much longer than tubes made of natural rubber.

Tomorrow is Forever

by GWEN BRISTOW

THE STORY THUS FAR: Spratt Herlong, successful motion picture producer, had married Elizabeth, after her first husband, Arthur Kittredge, had been reported killed in World War I. They had three children, Dick, Cherry and Brian. Elizabeth had been orphaned when a baby and had been raised by her aunt and uncle in Tulsa. One summer vacation she met Arthur at the country club. They were married soon afterwards. Within a year he enlisted and before long was sent overseas. Then came the telegram from the war department, announcing that Arthur was killed in action. The light seemed to have gone out for Elizabeth.

CHAPTER VI

Elizabeth took the pen and looked at it an instant, then as though it were a horrid object she threw it down on the blotter and stood up. "No!" she exclaimed, and she meant it, though she could not just then have told what prompted her. "No. I don't want the government to pay me for Arthur. I can earn my own living. I'd rather."

Before they could reply she ran out of the bank, leaving Uncle Clarence to apologize for her strange behavior, and the banker to answer Uncle Clarence that it was quite all right, he understood, the poor girl was young and had no idea of money, and she had undoubtedly received a great blow, just come back when she's more reasonable, glad to see you both any time.

Elizabeth was walking quickly along the street. She felt somehow strong and free, stronger and freer than she had felt since the day she had received that terrible telegram. All her senses were abruptly alert. She noticed that there was a tingle of spring in the air. People were walking fast, as if they had somewhere of importance to go. All of a sudden she stopped in front of a store window and said "Ah!"—not an audible exclamation, just the swift little catch of her breath that she would have given this time last year at the sight of a smart black hat with a red feather.

Her thrill was gone in an instant. She had time only to think, "Why, this is the first time I've noticed anything," before the tiredness was back on her and she was saying to herself, "What difference does it make what I wear now?" Looking up at the store front, she remembered that she had bought many hats here in the past. One afternoon she had called Arthur and told him to pick her up here on his way home. He had come in while she was still hesitating, and had made the choice for her—"Here's the one for you, Elizabeth, black with a red feather." She caught her breath again, but this time it was to stifle a sob, and she hurried home as fast as she could.

Once at home she sat down tensely, asking herself with a sense of desperation, "Can't I ever get away from this?" Then, suddenly, she became aware that in asking the question she had unconsciously, by the words she was using, provided the answer. She had to get away.

But though the answer had come, it was not clear. For a few moments this morning she had been exhilarated, until the hat with the feather had brought him back. What was it, she asked herself now, that had given her that brief bright sense of being alive again?

It was something that had happened at the bank. She had said she did not want to be paid for losing Arthur. No wonder they had heard her with such surprise, for on the face of it that was a foolish thing to say. Nobody could believe a war widow lost her self-respect by receiving a government pension. But her words had given her the impression of shaking off a burden. As she thought of it she remembered what else she had said. "I can earn my own living. I'd rather."

Naturally they had been startled. She knew no more about earning her own living than a child. The idea of such a possibility had never occurred to her before. She had spoken without thinking, and yet she had somehow been thinking of something much more vital than the source of her income. She sought to recall it, more than once drawing back, for the operation was too painful to be continued without pause, but at last she found what she was looking for. "I was thinking of something, not about a pension or about my going to work. Just for a minute I got a flash of it and it was like being waked up with a dash of cold water—I know—I was realizing that I didn't have to keep on being dependent on Arthur."

That hurt. She stood up and walked around, her whole spirit protesting against the hurt of it. "I want to be dependent on him! I was so happy when all day I was thinking of him. I'll tell Arthur about this, he'll laugh and laugh.' 'I must ask how she makes that sponge-cake, Arthur would love it.' 'Do you really like my bracelet? Arthur gave it to me.' Arthur, Arthur, all the time, never anything but Arthur. Stop it, Elizabeth! I don't care how it hurts, stop it! Arthur is dead. Yes, say it and get used to it. He's dead, and you're burning yourself up like those Oriental women who lie down on their husbands' funeral pyres. Arthur wouldn't want this. He loved living and he wasn't afraid of dying, but he'd hate this imitation death you've been slipping into. If you're ever going to be anything better than a sick vegetable, you've got to learn to count on yourself. The only minute you've felt alive since you lost Arthur was the minute you said you didn't have to depend on him any more."

But as she walked around the house, or looked out at the sidewalk and its familiar trees, she knew more and more certainly that as long as she stayed within sight of these things she would continue to lean on her memory of him. She would be, not an individual, but Arthur's widow, a poor object standing around like something a traveler had forgotten to take with him on his journey. But if she turned down that pension and went to live in a strange environment it would mean she would have to take care of herself, no matter how much her resolution might waver. Her fists doubled up and her whole body tense with the effort, Elizabeth faced the necessity. She had to go. She was going.

She chose California because neither she nor Arthur had ever been

"No, I don't want the government to pay me for Arthur."

there. Neither of them knew anybody who lived west of the Rockies, and there was nothing in California that would remind her of him. Once her decision was made she set about vigorously getting ready to leave Tulsa, doing everything briskly lest she be overwhelmed with the pain of parting. Her first act was to buy a ticket for Los Angeles. Having it there bolstered her determination on the occasions when she thought she could not go through with it. The ticket safely in her desk, she began deliberately to strip herself of the physical objects that linked her with Arthur. She had to do this, because if she had taken them with her she would simply have built up another home like this one, where she could not pick up any article of use without remembering that Arthur had touched it. She sold most of her household possessions, and what she could not sell she gave away. It was hard to do, but not as hard as it would have been to live among these reminders of her lost happiness. Her acquaintances were puzzled by her vehemence, and Aunt Grace was volubly shocked. They could not understand what she was doing, and believing like most other people that if they could not understand a matter it had no explanation, they said, "Who would have thought Elizabeth was so heartless?" Aunt Grace agreed sadly, and told them Elizabeth had not only sold the desk where Arthur had worked, but had even given his clothes to the Salvation Army. Oh well, said Uncle Clarence, Elizabeth was young, and the young were noted for their springing adaptability. But Aunt Grace shook her head. "She has no soul," said Aunt Grace. "And after all we've tried to do for her." Contemplation of Elizabeth's lack of soul sometimes moved Aunt Grace to tears.

Since it was useless to explain to Aunt Grace, Elizabeth kept quiet and went on doing what she had to do. If she was going to leave, the break had to be entire. There was no other way. She parted with everything except a few keepsakes too precious to be given into alien hands, but even these she packed in a covered box which she put underneath the clothes in her trunk when she took the train for Los Angeles.

As she crossed the continent she looked out with amazement at the immensity of her native land. No book of geography had given her any conception of such a space. This, she told herself as she looked out at the cities, the ranches, the desert, this was what Arthur had died for. Every acre of it was a safe place where Americans could live in security. Watching the states go by, Elizabeth felt as if she was drawing strength from the strength of her country.

In Los Angeles she learned to typewrite, and took the first job that offered itself through the employment office of the business school. It happened to be a minor clerkship in a law office, where a large part of the business was concerned with the contracts of Hollywood actors. This was before the days of the great agencies, and actors were supposed to handle their own contracts with the advice of privately retained lawyers. Elizabeth's work was mostly routine, answering the telephone and copying legal documents, but the moving picture business was young and even her own small contact with its bounding growth was interesting enough to demand all her attention.

When she woke up in the morning she no longer faced the blankness of an empty day, and at night she was tired enough to go to sleep. She had an apartment consisting of one room with a bath and kitchenette, but she was not uncomfortable. With the other girls in the office she talked about the immediate affairs of the day. She never talked about Arthur. They had not known him and could not be interested in him, and this was the reason why she had come to California.

As for the men in the office, they might have been sexless for all the thought she gave them. The first time one of them asked her to have dinner with him she felt startled, with a curious under-feeling of resentment; but it was the most ordinary sort of invitation from a friendly young fellow who disliked eating alone, and she accepted, though still with a sense of strangeness. But they had a pleasant evening, talking about nothing more personal than the bad temper of their boss and the unreasonableness of all actors, and when she came back to her apartment she looked at herself in the glass thinking, "I do believe I'm getting normal again."

She was getting normal again; she could feel it, like the return of equilibrium after dizziness. Her fellow-workers liked her and she was beginning to enjoy their companionship. When she got a promotion and a raise she felt a justification of herself that was real delight. As her job in the office brought her into contact with a great many employees of the moving picture industry, her acquaintance increased and with it her invitations. She lost her sense of strangeness at going about with men who were not Arthur. There were plenty of them to go out with, and there was nothing unpleasant in discovering again that she was an attractive woman. She did not try to pretend to herself that she was happy, but she was not unhappy either. There were still hours when she ached for Arthur, but she was grateful for what she had.

She had been in California two years when she met Spratt Herlong.

Spratt worked in a studio publicity department. It was sometimes necessary for him to visit the office where Elizabeth was employed, to get information about screen players under contract to his company. The girls in the office liked him, because while he was always friendly he never stared meaningfully at their legs while he talked to them, or sat on their desks killing time that they would have to make up by staying an extra hour to finish the day's assignment. Though she had not been long in Hollywood, Elizabeth had already had sufficient experience of both these habits to appreciate the lack of them. She observed also that Spratt worked hard and got results in the form of a great deal of magazine and newspaper space for the actresses he was paid to publicize, and her own brief career in the business world had taught her to admire anybody who concentrated his attention on doing his job well.

As Spratt was invariably good-humored and reasonable in his requests—in contrast to some of his colleagues, who were too impressed with ideas of their own importance to take the trouble of being either pleasant or reasonable with office clerks—she responded by giving him all the assistance she could, even when it meant extra effort on her part. Spratt was grateful, and proved it not only by telling her so but by sending her tickets to premieres, coming by to drive her home in the evening, or calling up for lunch or dinner. Elizabeth liked him increasingly. Before long she found herself hoping, when she started for work in the morning, that there would be a call from him to enliven her day.

Spratt was very unlike Arthur. Later, Elizabeth thought that one reason for her immediate pleasure in his company had been that he roused her interest without at the same time rousing her memories. Spratt was terse, practical and coolly ambitious. He liked the moving picture business and intended to be successful in it. His expectation had no elements of uncertainty—he was as matter-of-fact about it as a man who walks toward a chosen destination with the purpose of reaching it. Elizabeth had no doubt of his getting what he wanted. Spratt knew his trade, though he had never done anything in a studio more important than direct publicity build-ups.

Put FRAM Oil Filters on All Three!

HERE'S how to save a lot of long, costly repairs . . . lengthen the life of your car, truck, tractor or stationary engine. Just install Fram oil filters!

WHY EVERY ENGINE NEEDS FRAM

During normal operation, dirt, dust, grit and other abrasives are sucked into engines. At the same time carbon and sludge are formed within the engines. Unless filtered out, the dirt and carbon grind away moving parts, while the sticky sludge clogs oil channels to hamper lubrication and increase wear. But with a Fram, these impurities are filtered out, to keep motor oil visually clean! That's why millions of Fram filters and cartridges are used by our armed forces—why Fram is standard equipment on more than 75 famous car, truck, tractor, bus, marine and stationary engines. Experts agree on Fram!

MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE

Remember, a Fram oil filter must satisfy you, or you get your money back. If your equipment is already filter-equipped, Fram replacement cartridges can be put in present filters to step up performance. Remember, Fram oil filters are easy to install and cartridges may be changed in a jiffy. So see your dealer today! Find out "How's Your Oil Filter?" The Dipstick tells the story!

FOLKS & THINGS ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

Isn't it strange that princes and kings
And clowns that caper in sawdust rings,
And common folks like you and me
Are builders for eternity?
To each is given a bag of tools,
A shapeless mass and a book of rules;
And each must make 'ere life has flown,
A stumbling block or a stepping stone.
—R. L. SHARP.

All is vanity. We don't remember who said that, maybe it was Shakespeare, but, alas, 'tis true. Last week we were too busy to write "Folks & Things" and it really did our heart good to be "jacked-up" about leaving it out. Hundreds of our subscribers—no, maybe it was only about thirty; well we'll settle for a dozen dozens of our subscribers rather stopped us on the street or called to remind us that it wasn't in the paper and wanted to know why. We can only say we're sorry and it absolutely will not happen again. Thanks.

In less time than you can say, "Jack Robinson," we sold 62,000 tires last week for Henry Morgan at the Clanton Recapping Company. Henry being a good scout didn't raise cain with us but he should have. In his advertisement in last week's Chilton County News, we stated that in the past two years he had handled 80,000 tires. That should have read 18,000 tires 'Course a little thing like 62,000 tires doesn't amount to much, but when you can't even get one to replace that right rear that is liable to go "boom" any minute, then 62,000 is a lot of tires. And too, Henry is wondering what the boss in Birmingham is going to think when he sees where he has sold so awful many tires.

Guess it will seem like the same old theme, but Clanton still needs more than anything else right now a public park or playground. The kids should have a place to go to let off the excess energy that nature bestowed upon them. It is the duty of the grownups to see that they have it.

Don't tell us that Clanton i "getting cityfied." Whad'da 'ya know, we got a city bus line now. If you live on the outskirts of our city or you do not feel up to walking, all you have to do is stand out on the streets and within a short time a bus will stop and pick you up. The "bus stops" are clearly marked throughout the city and we think that it is a forward step for Clanton to have buses.

"Tommie" Thompson, our badacious apprentice, told us this week that he had never been fired from a job in his life. However, he did say that he had to quit one because of illness. When we asked him the nature of the illness he stated, "The boss got sick of me."

Looks like "Big Jim" Folsom is gaining new friends in Chilton County every day. Runner-up in the last guberatorial campaign, "Big Jim" has served in the Army and the Merchant Marines since the memorable "Pearl Harbor." The only trouble was they never found a uniform big enough to fit him. Scores of his friends in this county are lining up with him for his next race. Looks like Mr. Folsom will be our next Governor.

S. A. Jones, Melvin Mims and Buck Bice are going to have to work extra shifts at their hatcheries if the wives and mothers of all these G.I. Joes feed them all the fried chicken they have been promised since they left home. Seems like every soldier overseas or on this side wants only Southern style fried chicken, and plenty of it, when he gets back. Well, all we got to say is, by golly, if that's what they want, let's give it to them—and in large quantities.

Our daughter, Carolyn, who was operated on recently for appendicitis was at Central Alabama Hospital After about three days of fasting, after the operation, one morning the nurse came in and told her that she could have some oat meal that day. Having just about starved to death, she thought, Carolyn was somewhat surprised by the offer. She turned to her mother and said, "Mother, I didn't know they had anything to eat in this hospital."

It just ain't fair. This sending boys to the South Pacific and Japan who have already done their bit and suffered in the European Area. With millions of men in the States who have seen no combat service or even been out of the States still here, it seems only fair that they should go to do the policing necessary in Germany and Japan. It wouldn't surprise us one bit of the "powers that be" didn't know much more about their business than we do, but we still say, "it ain't fair."

The Dean of girls at a certain coeducational college was making an announcement before the student body. "The president of the college and I," she said sternly, "have decided to stop necking on the campus." Greeted with gales of laughter, she became flustered and attempted to explain. "What I mean is, all this kissing that's been going on under my nose must stop."—Coronet.

Welcome to Clanton, our new City Engineer. Mayor Leo Thompson informed us this week that starting September First, Clanton now has a full-time City Engineer. What with all the building and maintenance work that will be necessary in the next few years we will have need of one. We haven't met the gentleman yet, but we sure hope that the City Fathers chose a good one. We expect Clanton to grow fast within the next ten years and the planning now is what will be of real worth to us in the years to come. You know—an ounce of prevention etc. . . .The Mayor is catching the devil now because someone couldn't see a few years ahead and put down a three-quarter inch water pipe line to serve a dozen houses.

Yep, you'er right, people are funny. And then again people are wonderful. Take, for instance, the good lady in South Clanton, who, last week gave possession of her home to a friend and her husband. They wanted to find living quarters here and the only way was to be here for a few days and make contacts. They found the living quarters. When time came to leave the husband wanted to pay the good lady for her hospitality and trouble. Said the good lady: "No, thanks, you served several years overseas; I can't do enough to show you my appreciation. You see, my husband didn't have to go."

STATE OF ALABAMA

A PROCLAMATION

BY THE GOVERNOR

WHEREAS, the Legislature of Alabama, at the Regular Session 1945, ordered an election to be held by the qualified electors of the State of Alabama upon a certain proposed amendment to the Constitution of Alabama, which said amendment is herein set out, and ordered that said election be held on the first Tuesday following the expiration of three months after the final adjournment of the regular session of the 1945 Legislature; and

WHEREAS, the first Tuesday following the expiration of three months after the final adjournment of the regular session of the 1945 Legislature will be and occur on Tuesday, October 2, 1945; and

WHEREAS, notice of such election, together with the proposed amendment is required by law, and by the provisions of the Act submitting the amendment, to be given by a proclamation of the Governor to be published in each county in the State of Alabama once a week for four successive weeks next preceding the said 2nd day of October:

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Chauncey Sparks, as Governor of the State of Alabama, do hereby give notice, direct and proclaim that on Tuesday, the 2nd day of October, 1945, an election will be held at the several polling places within the State of Alabama, in the manner and form provided by law, upon the following proposed amendment to the Constitution of the State of Alabama of 1901:

"Article XXII. The Legislature shall have the power to levy and collect taxes for state purposes on net incomes from whatever source derived within this state, including the incomes derived from salaries, fees and compensation paid from the state, county, municipality, and any agency or creature thereof, for the calendar year, 1933, and thereafter, and to designate and define the incomes to be taxed and to fix the rates of taxes provided that the rate shall not exceed 5 per cent nor 3 per cent on corporations. Income shall not be deemed property for purposes of ad valorem taxes. From net income an exemption of not less than fifteen hundred dollars ($1,500.00) shall be allowed to unmarried persons and an exemption of not less than three thousand dollars ($3,000.00) shall be allowed to the head of a family, provided that only one exemption shall be allowed to husband and wife where they are living together and make separate returns for income tax. An exemption of not less than three hundred dollars ($300.00) shall be allowed for each dependent member of the family of an income tax payer under the age of 18 years. Such tax must be levied upon the salaries, income, fees, or other compensation of state, county and municipal officers and employees, on the same basis as such income taxes are levied upon other persons. The proceeds of such tax, after provision has been made for the payment of administrative expenses and the next two maturing installments of interest on the warrant refunding bonds issued to fund the floating debt existing October 1, 1932, must be used only in the manner and the order following: 1) to create a trust fund for the payment of the principal of all outstanding warrant refunding bonds issued under the authority of Act No. 14, approved February 5, 1935, and Act No. 50, approved February 8, 1935, to fund the floating debt existing October 1, 1932; 2) to become a part of and to supplement the sinking fund heretofore created for the payment of the "Old Bonded Debt", as evidenced by Class A Renewal Bonds, Class C Renewal Bonds, and Funding Renewal Bonds, to the extent that the fund, which hereafter shall be an irrevocable trust fund, when invested and the earnings thereon calculated to the maturities of the outstanding bonds, will equal the principal of the unpaid debt; 3) to replace revenues lost to the several funds by reason of exemption of homesteads from the state ad valorem tax; 4) the residue shall be paid into in the state treasury. The corpus of any fund hereby created, and the income from the trust fund for the payment of the "Old Bonded Debt", may be invested by the Governor in the bonds or other obligations of the United States or the State of Alabama. Any earnings on the investment of the trust fund for the payment of the "Old Bonded Debt" shall be payable into and become a part of the fund, and all earnings and income from the investment of the trust fund for the payment of warrant refunding bonds shall be deposited with and become a part of the fund into which the proceeds of the income tax are paid. After a sufficient amount is accumulated in any fund to equal the principal of the outstanding bonds against the payment of which the fund is created, (except as to interest which shall be an annual charge or may be included in the trust fund) the debt shall be considered paid. All laws relating to the income tax, not in conflict herewith and valid on the date of the ratification of this amendment, are hereby validated and confirmed. The provisions hereof with respect to the creation of funds and the use thereof are declared to be self-executing."

I furtner direct and proclaim that notice of this election upon Tuesday, the 2nd day of October, 1945, upon the above set forth amendment to the Constitution of the State of Alabama of 1901, be given by publishing the same once a week for four successive weeks next preceding Tuesday the 2nd day of October, 1945, in each county in the State of Alabama in a newspaper published in said county.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and have caused the Great Seal of the State of Alabama to be affixed by the Secretary of State at the Capitol in the City of Montgomery, on this the 26th day of July, 1945.

POST-WAR FLYING IN YOUR HOME TOWN

By C. C. CAMPBELL, Member, Aviation Writers Association, Washington, D. C.

Eldon's Model Airpark

Now, a good deal of the guesswork is to be removed from decisions upon the relative advantages and costs of local airpark construction.

A model airpark is being built in a typical small community, Eldon, Missouri, population 2,590. The idea was conceived by Eugene V. Fryhoff, in charge of the aviation section of the Missouri State Department of Resources and Development. Planned as a public improvement, the citizens of Eldon, led by their energetic and progressive mayor, Robert Reed, and his far-seeing associates, expect their airpark to pay dividends in attracting new enterprises and aiding in general the substantial growth of their city.

MODEL AIRPARK being constructed at Eldon, Mo. Two turf flight strips 300'x2,000' and 300'x2,300'. Estimated cost to Eldon citizens, $25,000, including Service Building. This does not include hangar buildings, shown in sketch. The airpark is five blocks from the business district.

Interest in its development, however, is not confined to the immediate locality or even to the state in which it is to be established. For Eldon Airpark is to be a model from which communities in all parts of the country can obtain basic knowledge of airpark site selection, construction, cost and operation.

At Eldon, an ideal airpark site was located only five blocks from the business district. Within a short time after the plans were laid, an educational plan to acquaint residents with all details was conducted. As a result, the civic-minded people of the community voted in a ratio of nine to one in favor of an airpark bond issue of $25,000. Eldon officials have agreed to keep complete, accurate records of all transactions regarding the development.

Airpark equipment research is to continue for at least five years. Permanent exhibits of hangars, fueling equipment, ground marking aids, and communication equipment are planned. Future improvements in lighting equipment and surfacing material for runways and taxi strips are also projected and these and other facility improvements will be tried out from time to time.

The model airpark at Eldon has been endorsed by three national aviation organizations: the National Aeronautic Association; the National Aviation Trades Association; and the Personal Aircraft Council of the Aircraft Industries Association of America.

"Vote Yes, Scratch No and Watch Eldon Grow" was the slogan that put over $25,000 worth of Model Airpark bonds. Newspaper articles, advertising sponsored by most of the leading citizens and merchants of the town and the Lake of the Ozarks resort owners nearby; letters written home by local men in various branches of the armed services; a personal canvass of taxpayers to whom a full explanation of the project was made; and placards placed in most of the local business establishments were all effective in promoting the bonds.

Election day found a sound truck reminding people to vote for the installation with such slogans as "Vote Yes for Progress", "Put Eldon on the Air Map", "A live town grows, a weak town dies", etc.

Later a news commentator on a New York City radio told listeners: "Little Eldon, Missouri, population 2,590, shows big New York, population umpteen millions, how to get an airpark."

This is the seventh of a series of articles on post-war flying and its effect on community life. The next article, "National Groups Aid in Airpark Planning," will appear in an early issue.

CANE CREEK

The ones on the sick list are better —some able to attend church service Sunday. Service was good and a very good attendance.

Little Bobby Barker is better. He was on the sick list last week. He is the son of Mrs. Gertie Lee Jones Barker.

Mr. Winston Coggins is discharged and is at home with his wife, Mrs. Edna Giles Coggins, and baby, Elouise. The baby hadn't seen her daddy, only a picture of him, but it was a sight to see so little a child make over her daddy and know him so well. We all welcome Winston home and long for all our boys to come home too.

Mr. and Mrs. Tug Willis had their children home over the week end: Mrs. Mary Kate Willis McGlothon and Mrs. Sue Beth Willis Wren, both of Tennessee; Mrs. Buddie Willis and the others from Clanton. All enjoyed the home-coming, especially mother and daddy.

Mrs. Pack Parrish spent Saturday night at Mrs. Floyd Bailey.

There will be an all-day singing in the old books here one Sunday this Fall for the old people in their honor. We invite all the old people in this community to come, for it is to your honor. The time will be announced later when the arrangement can be made with the singers.

MACEDONIA — BEAT 14

Next Sunday is our regular preaching day. Everyone come to both morning and night services.

There was a good crowd at Sunday School last Sunday. We had several visitors — Mr. and Mrs. Elvin Ward and children, Jo Ann and Elvin, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Hall of Ensley. Miss Lucille Rasberry of Montgomery and Mrs. Wilbur Jones. Visitors are always welcome.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Davenport and Mr. and Mrs. Ermon Rasberry and family spent Sunday with Mrs Rasberry's parents, Mr. and Mrs Easterling of Selma.

We were glad to have two of our soldiers at church Sunday. They were Pvt. Andy Davenport of Fort Sill, Okla., and Pvt. Robert Pool of Camp Rucker, Ala.

Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Oates and family attended a reunion at Mr. Harvey Mims Sunday in honor of Woodrow Mims, who has a discharge from the Army.

Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Nix are the proud parents of a baby boy.

Mr. and Mrs. Pratt Crumpton visisted their parents, Mr. and Mrs Childress, of the Pleasant Grove Community Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Clint Veasey spent Sunday afternoon with Mr. and Mrs D. E. Moore

Mrs Becky Kates of Selma is spending a while with her son, Morgan Davenport, and family.

Mrs. Bronzelle Langston spent Sunday with parents. Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Gibson.

Mr and Mrs. Fleetwood Rasberry had all their children as guests Sunday—Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Hall, Mr. and Mrs. Woodie Rasberry, Mrs. Briggs Gibson, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Rasberry, Miss Lucille Rasberry and Coy Rasberry.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Taylor and family visited Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Gibson Sunday.

Lies the Might of America

CALIFORNIA PROSPERITY

The 49's stirred up prosperity in California but they would be amazed to read the figures on industrial and agricultural gains of recent years. Between 1940 and 1944, total civilian employment gained 37 percent; income and savings shot up 138 percent; farm crops, 175 percent; mining and oil, 37 percent and manufacturing 157 percent. The increased earnings of men and firms build the Nation's resources to guarantee your War Bonds.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Old Glory Flies Over Japan; Seek Replacements for Army; Europe Asks Reconstruction Aid

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

While army trucks loaded with tons of powdered milk, flour and potatoes stream into hungry Berlin, German women express joy at being able to obtain white bread for first time since the end of the war in former bomb-shattered Reich capital.

JAPAN:
U. S. Lands

Spruced up in full dress uniforms with clanking samurai swords and beribboned blouses, Japanese generals were on hand to greet the first contingent of American airborne troops descending on Atsugi airfield southwest of Tokyo to prepare the ground for the mass landings headed by Supreme Commander MacArthur.

Almost simultaneously, Admiral Halsey's mighty 3rd fleet sailed into Tokyo bay, with the 45,000-ton superbattleship Missouri leading the parade and closely followed by the U. S. dreadnaughts Iowa and South Dakota and the British flagship Duke of York.

Preparatory to the general occupation of the defeated nation and the formal signing of surrender terms aboard the Missouri in Tokyo bay the preliminary operations ran so smoothly that an American naval commander described the event in picturesque U. S. language. Said he: "No runs, no hits, no errors."

Despite evidences of Japanese good faith, General MacArthur's forces took no chances in carrying out the initial operations. While Halsey ploughed into Tokyo bay, scores of aircraft hovered overhead and all hands were in battle dress. Though white flags fluttered from dismantled 116-caliber coastal guns guarding the entrance into Tokyo bay, U. S. forces were put ashore to check on the disarmament.

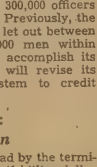
Surrender ceremonies aboard the Missouri promised to be packed with drama, with Lt. Gen. Jonathan Wainwright, rescued three years after giving up at Corregidor during the early enemy sweep in 1942, attending to witness the capitulation of the once cocky imperial staff. While MacArthur was to accept the surrender for the Allies as a whole, Admiral Nimitz was to counter-sign for the U. S.

Though coming in as conquerors, U. S. occupation forces will be used in a supervisory rather than executive capacity, with General MacArthur's orders transmitted from the emperor down through the national and local governments.

At all times, the U. S. military organization will be on the watch to prevent the subversion of MacArthur's dictates, while also exerting control to avert the reascendance of the Japanese army clique to its former position of power. Along with public services and utilities, banks, schools, newspapers and radio stations may be permitted to operate, with all channels of communication under the strict eye of censorship.

Under terms of the occupation, Japan will be responsible for supplying the U. S. forces food and housing. Though the country's agricultural regions were reported virtually untouched by the war, many of the important industrial centers have been gutted by Allied bombs, and the government has undertaken to speed up reconstruction to restore essential services.

DEMOBILIZATION:
Replacements Sought



In the face of reports that the army planned to retain 2,500,000 men for occupation, garrison and regular duties, Pres. Harry S. Truman called upon congress to extend the draft of 18 to 25-year-olds for two years to release present soldiers from lengthy overseas service.

In asking for a retention of the draft for younger men, Mr. Truman said that it did not appear as though the army could raise enough volunteers to meet future needs. In an effort to boost recruiting, however, the President recommended that congress furnish inducements, presumably bonuses, for volunteers.

While army plans called for discharge of 6,000,000 men, the navy speeded up its demobilization program by preparing for the release of 2,839,000 men and 300,000 officers within the next year. Previously, the navy had planned to let out between 1,500,000 and 2,500,000 men within 12 to 18 months. To accomplish its objective, the navy will revise its point discharge system to credit overseas service.

U. S. CREDITS:
Burning Question

Furor caused abroad by the termination of the huge 41-billion-dollar lend-lease program has posed the question of postwar aid to friendly nations for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of war-battered economies.

Gen. De Gaulle

In the U. S. for conferences with President Truman in Washington, D. C., 6 foot 6 inch Gen. Charles de Gaulle has pointed up the European view that American assistance is vital to the restoration of the continent. Said the lank, brusque liberation leader: "I want to be frank with you right to the end. Frenchmen are relying upon you Americans. It is not that we are asking for gifts; but it is true we are asking for your help. . . ."

In addressing President Truman, De Gaulle knew what he wanted: (1) The re-distribution of German productive facilities in western Europe) (2) supplies of raw materials and agricultural and industrial equipment to enable France to speedily rebuild its economy for home and export purposes.

With U. S. aid already proffered, De Gaulle said, France has taken a long step toward reconstruction of its war devastated economy. Today, once broken ports are able to handle 1,500,000 tons per month; 2,500 of 4,000 bridges have been repaired; 7,000 of 18,000 locomotives are running, and coal mines are operating at three-fourths of capacity.

While De Gaulle already was on the spot to discuss future U. S. aid, the British, recovering from their expressed surprise at termination of lend-lease, were prepared to send Ambassador Halifax back to this country to talk over continued assistance.

To an exporting nation like Britain, U. S. aid is vital since the British asset position was greatly reduced during the war by purchases abroad, and the need for imports during the reconstruction period must be somewhat balanced by foreign sales if the country is not to go too deeply into the hole.

Though terminating lend - lease, the U. S. offered to advance upwards of 6 billion dollars in credits to friendly nations to help enable them to purchase cancelled lend-lease inventories or other goods. Credits also could be used to procure American materials remaining on foreign soil.

Much of the American financing of Allied governments will be accomplished through the 3 billion dollar Export-Import bank, whose assets recently were increased to allow for interim help until the 10 billion dollar Bretton Woods bank of reconstruction and rehabilitation begins operations in mid-1946 or later.

ELECTRIFICATION:

Relaxation of government control over the sale of steel, copper and aluminum is stimulating construction by borrowers of the Rural Electrification administration in all parts of the country, Claude R. Wickard, REA administrator, said.

Congress has authorized total appropriations for this year of $200,000,000 for loans to REA borrowers. In addition, approximately $100,000,000 previously allotted to borrowers will be spent now.

RECONVERSION:
Goods on Way

Despite shortages of rubber, textile and tin, the automobile industry expects to produce 500,000 cars during the rest of this year as a result of the government's removal of all controls over output.

With production due to soar, all rationing of vehicles may be rescinded after monthly manufacture reaches 100,000. Notwithstanding the recent wave of rumors, prices are expected to closely parallel those of 1942 under OPA regulations, which are designed to include increased wage and material costs in the general 10 to 19 per cent price boosts manufacturers made in 1942.

Along the whole reconversion front, there were signs of an increasing supply of merchandise as the government removed most bars to civilian production.

Knives and scissors will be in abundance soon with vacuum cleaners fairly plentiful by January 1. Refrigerators, percolators, mixers and electric ranges will become available this fall and in fair supply by 1946.

Because of the removal of restrictions on the manufacture of a large variety of converted paper and paperboard products, facial tissues, paper towels, wax paper and toilet paper are due to hit the market in greater quantities soon. In lifting controls on nylon, silk and rayon, the government assured the early stocking of hosiery counters.

Forecast Tax Cut

Individuals and corporations alike can look forward to reduced income taxes in the early postwar period though rates will continue high to defray an annual 28 billion dollar budget.

Spokesmen for both parties predicted substantial cuts in future levies, with Rep. Knutson (Rep., Minn.) forecasting a 20 per cent slash in individual liabilities; elimination of the excess profits tax on corporations, and other relief for businesses to ease reconversion readjustments.

At 28 billion dollars, the early peacetime budget would compare with 9 billion dollars in prewar 1940. While 8 billion dollars would be expended for ordinary government costs, 6 billion dollars each would be paid out for interest on the national debt, veterans' benefits and national defense.

CHINA:
Russ Pact

Russian recognition of the sovereignty of the Chinese government of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek on the one hand, and China's acknowledgment of vital Russian interests in the far east on the other, marked the give-and-take bound up in the 30 year friendship treaty between the two countries.

Under the terms of the pact concluded after lengthy negotiations in which the U. S. figured as backing the regime of Chiang Kai-shek, the Russians agreed to turn over Manchuria to China; refrain from interference in the country's internal politics; and back the Generalissimo's government.

In return, the Chinese agreed to joint operation with the Russians of the northern and eastern Manchurian railroads, giving the Reds access to the newly-established free port of Dairen on the Yellow sea and Vladivostok in Siberia. Terms also called for China's sharing of the Manchurian harbor of Port Arthur with Russia as a military and naval base.

EUROPE:
Speedy Reparations

Equipment and goods running into the millions of dollars were stripped from American-controlled establishments in the Berlin area by the Russians prior to the entrance of U. S. troops. Taken into custody by the American Military government, the properties are to be returned to their owners.

With the Russian requisitions considered as part of their exaction of reparations from eastern Germany in conformity with the Potsdam agreements, it was reported that the Reds took over most of the cash, spare parts and supplies of the Ford Werke A. G. (Ford Motor Company); all equipment of Ferdinand Schuchart (International Telephone and Telegraph), and all razor blades (Ruth-Buchner (Gillette Safety Razor company).

Practically all stocks were reported removed from three stores of F. W. Woolworth; most equipment from George von Giesche Erben (51 per cent owned by the Anaconda Copper company), and about one-third of the machinery from Deutsche Hollerith Maschinen (90 per cent controlled by the International Business Machines company).

FOR SALE:

Two hundred fifty-two government-owned plants, built at an estimated cost of 1½ billion dollars, will shortly be available for disposal through the Reconstruction Finance corporation.

Consisting of 220 establishments serving the service forces and 32 producing for the air forces, the types of plants include aircraft, tanks, explosives, artillery and small arms, chemicals, steel, radio and radar, shipbuilding and ammunition.

Gas Levies Mount

Upswing in gross collections from motor fuel and gasoline taxes levied by the states since March of this year indicates that total collections may be higher this year than in 1943 and 1944.

The gross collections from motor fuel and gasoline taxes, levied by 48 states during 1944, amounted to $747,388,000, or 38.6 per cent of the $1,936,517,000 collected by all the states from the major excise taxes.

Stricken Europe Needs Large Imports of Food

Never Able to Raise Enough Fare for Its Teeming Masses, Old World's Demands Aggravated by Ravages of War.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, 1616 Eye Street, NW, Washington, D. C.

I've just come up from the barnyard of a Maryland farm. In the barn was a comfortable crop of hay and wheat, outside a herd of fat Guernseys of all ages from a two weeks' old calf up. Most of the chickens were already cooling themselves in a locker. There was only one thing for the farmer to complain about and the hogs got a break out of that—the oats.

"Just too wet this year," he said. For fear it would set the barn afire, if he stored it in that condition, the farmer explained that he "had to dump it" and a batch of shoats were leaping around in the spoiled grain like jack-rabbits. Most of the farmers hereabouts lost their oats, too.

All week in Washington, I'd been reading, talking and thinking about farm products along with our other reconversion problems. We, in the United States, are going to get only about three-quarters of what we raise this year, according to unofficial estimates. Europe is going to need about 25 per cent more food and textiles than she normally needs.

I hear the questions asked: Why should we be expected to send all this food to Europe? Why can't she produce her own? Are the people too lazy, or inefficient or what?

I put those two questions to a member of the department of agriculture who is just back from an inspection tour of Europe.

"Europe has always imported food, in peace and in war, in fat years and lean," he answered. "To send food to Europe is the natural thing. Not to send it would be unnatural."

Food Production To Dip Further

"In 1945, Europe's production was 10 per cent under her normal production. Next year, production will be 15 per cent under this year. That means the people of Europe will need 25 per cent more than in normal times. It does not necessarily mean that the United States will furnish a total of 25 per cent more of everything. For instance, Canada will furnish more wheat than before so we won't have to increase our quota, but we shall probably be called upon for more of the protein foods, especially the milk products."

Before answering my second question, my friend explained the paradox that peace has cut down Europe's producing power. While the European nations were overrun with a conquering army, he elucidated, while part of the fields of the continent were being riddled with shells and later gutted with trenches, production fell off only some 10 per cent from normal. This is the reason:

The Germans had to maintain a working economy in the nations they occupied and also they did not wish to destroy the resources of territory which they hoped to exploit. When they knew they were beaten, they stole what they could eat or carry and tried to destroy what they couldn't move; much breeding stock had already been slaughtered.

Of course, we must not be led astray by this figure of 10 per cent as the decrease in the total production in Europe in wartime. There was a sharp cut in certain products and an increase in others. The entire pattern of the agriculture was altered. For example, the livestock raisers always imported feed. When it was cut off there had to be a shift from livestock to root crops. Potatoes and beets make for a very monotonous diet, but they were filling while they lasted.

The Germans organized and regimented farm labor in all countries including their own. They maintained transportation fairly well until just before the invasion. Now transportation is utterly disrupted, there are millions of displaced persons, farm machinery is broken down.

But this doesn't answer question number two: Why can't Europe feed herself in normal times? Are the people so much lazier or behind-the-times that they can't make things grow as we do?

Before answering that question, my friend reminded me that it was true that nobody always works at maximum efficiency, that most people can do more when they have to than when they don't, especially when there is some extraordinary urge such as war. Take our own case: with thousands of farm boys in the munitions factories and with the armed forces, what did America do?

American farm production in 1944 was increased, despite its handicap, 36 per cent beyond the 1935 to 1939 level.

Britain's Farm Output High

But what about England where the boys were in the army and the munitions factories, too; where farmers had to farm in the blackout and around the shell-craters in their fields? The British increased their production 65 per cent — they were nearer to the front than we were. They had a greater incentive.

For the same reason, the distribution was far better than in America. Regimentation was more stringent. The government in England bought all the food and distributed it itself. It cracked down hard on the black markets. In this country, popular opinion prevented such interference with private enterprise. And so in America we permitted the processing and distribution industries to operate at a profit. In Britain, it was a non-profit, government operation. Rationing was stricter, too.

So much for Britain's wartime effort. Now, what about the efficiency of her production in normal times?

My informant gave me some impressive figures.

He pointed to America's two typical farm states which taken together are just about equal to Britain in area: Iowa and Indiana. Believe it or not in normal times Britain produces more wheat, barley and oats than those two states combined.

Britain also produces more cattle than Texas which is six times as large—more potatoes than all our chief potato states including Maine and Idaho, more dairy products than Wisconsin.

"Then why on earth," I interrupted, "don't they feed themselves over there?"

Back came the answer: "For the same reason that New York state with its skilled farmers, its splendid soil, its up-to-date methods, can't feed itself any more than the District of Columbia can. In Europe as in these more heavily populated areas in the United States, there are just too many people."

If we want these Europeans to live and prosper and earn the money to buy our automobiles and typewriters and other gadgets which keep our factories running, we'll have to keep on sending food to Europe as we always have.

Recently I was asked to make a recording which was to be deposited in the archives of George Washington university, as part of a series made for the use of the class of the year 2007. It is a somewhat fantastic idea to be sure, but it is seriously undertaken and I responded in as serious a vein as I could muster. I can't repeat what I said as that is supposed to be held as a big surprise for the class of 2007. However, the whole idea intrigues me so much that I have been thinking about it ever since.

The fact that this year begins what some people call the "atomic age" makes the speculation all the more interesting. In 1939 when the first successful experiment in "splitting the atom," and releasing the vast power which literally holds the world together was reported chiefly in scientific publications, as of great academic importance. One writer said the experiment might have no results of interests beyond the laboratory. Six years later continuation of those experiments ended the Japanese war.

The forces released, however, were largely uncontrolled and purely destructive.

Will the class of 2007 have to look up the word "coal" because it has been forgotten? Will all our modern means of generating power be displaced by the atom's forces, carefully controlled and directed to the uses of peace and progress?

The surrender day vigil at the White House spawned many epigrams. The secretary of state disappeared at one time. The officials would tell us nothing, so: "The state department fiddles while Byrnes roams."

Reconversion query: Will redeployment mean re-employment, or how soon will the redeployed become the re-employed?

Don't say American business can't come back fast — the day after surrender day a silk hose salesman called at my office. And I expect the re-tired auto salesman will be next.

Pattillo Conducts Special Program At Kiwanis Club

The program of the Kiwanis Club at its regular weekly meeting last week was in charge of the Committee on Support of Churches and Their Spiritual Aims. Kiwanian J. C. Pattillo is chairman of this committee and when he could not get some one to do credit to this subject, he did it himself.

He gave a very interesting discussion of the church and what the church had meant to civilization. He pointed out that wherever Christianity had gone there had followed better living conditions, equal rights to all men, more consideration for the welfare of women and children. Mr. Pattillo stressed the importance of the community's support of the church, saying that no minister, no matter how able, could ever build a great church without a cooperating congregation. He went on to say that with the end of this world war religion was going to be the most important factor in working out a satisfactory solution of many of the world's problems.

At the close of his talk many questions were asked by the members showing that his remarks has struck a responsive chord in the thinking of the men present.

Thursday of this week the program is in charge of the Committee on Classification and Membership. A Reedie Taylor, chairman. A good program is promised and each member is reminded to wear his "button" if he wants to be in line for a prize.

TWO RECIPES GIVEN FOR MAKING SOAPS

Two standard recipes for making uncooked and cooked soap are presented by home economists of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

Six pounds of fat with two and one-half pint of cold water, and one can of lye will make about nine pounds of soap. Six pounds of fat is equal to 13 and one-half standard measuring cups of liquid fat.

Pour water into a small enamel, stone, or glass container. Dissolve the lye in the water, stirring with a wood en spoon or paddle until dissolved. Mix in a well ventilated room but not in a breeze. Let the lye water cool until the container feels cool to the hand. Melt the fat in an enameled pan and stir with an enameled spoon or a woden paddle. Cool the fat to the correct temperature throughout the pan.

Cool the fat until the spoon begins to leave a track in the mixture. Pour the lye solution into the fat in a small steady stream, stirring slowly in one direction. Continue stirring until the mixture is a honey-like texture. Let it stand for 10 to 15 minutes until the mixture becomes thick like salad dressing and then pour into molds or wooden boxes, lined with waxed paper. After 24 hours it is ready to cut. Cure soap for several weeks before using and never let it freeze.

The formula for cooked soap is 2 quarts of melted fat, 1 can of lye, 1 cup of liquid ammonia, 1 quart water, and 1 tablespoonful of borax dissolved in one-half cup of hot water. Dissolve the lye in water and let stand until lukewarm. Add slowly to the fat stirring constantly until jelly like. Cook slowly. Add borax water and mix thoroughly. Remove from fire, add ammonia, and stir until about the consistancy of thick honey. Pour into molds and cure for six weeks.

County Welfare Board Held Meeting Recently

Effects of 1945 legislation on Chilton County's public welfare program were discussed at a recent meeting of the Chilton County Board of Public Welfare, which was held to discuss budget-planning for the 1945-46 fiscal year, beginning October 1, 1945.

New money totalling $2,479.32 will be available to Chilton County in October for public welfare out of the $500,000.00 absolute appropriation made by the 1945 Legislature for public welfare. The remaining $13,016.40, which would come to Chilton County, is conditioned indirectly or directly on the ratification of the Income Tax Amendment on October 2, 1945.

The Board reviewed figures presented by Miss Meggison County Director of Public Welfare, showing that the guaranteed new money would allow very little increase in the number receiving assistance, and would increase average grants only a very small amount for all groups of assistance.

The total appropriations, however if the income tax amendment is ratified, would make possible an increase in case load from 452 to 573, and an increase in average old age assistance grants from $10.64 per family per month to approximately $21.36 per family per month. Grants to other recipients would be increased in proportion. If the income tax amendment is not ratified, the public welfare program in Chilton County will lose $35,928.38.

The Board also discussed the needs of the people in the county, particularly since average old age grants cover only approximately 60 per cent of each family's budgeted minimum needs for food, clothing, shelter and medical care. Grants to other groups also cover far less than the amount needed. At the end of July there were 13 families in need for whom no funds were available and 26 applications for aid in process of investigation.

CELEBRATES 89TH BIRTHDAY

On August 5th the children of P. A. Vance met at the home of his daughter, Mrs. B. M. Bean to celebrate his 89th birthday. All the children were present except one. The large birthday cake, which bore 89 candles, was centered on the table with all the rest of good things that it takes for a beautiful dinner.

Many friends and several preachers were present.

When the news came that the Japs had surrendered he forgot his old age and said he had lived to see four wars end. He told the boys he would show them how to celebrate in the water. So they all got on a truck and went to the swimming pool down on Swift Creek. He swam and dived, rolled over in the water and went down to the bottom and set down and came up again.

After the frolic at the creek, they came home. It was rumored that there was going to be a music celebration down at Jodie Wilson's home and he went down there and stayed until midnight.

He has six grandsons in the service, some are in Foreign lands, he thinks he will see all of them some time in the near future.

NOTICE

Rev. A. T. Hickman will preach services at Walnut Creek church Sunday, September 9th, at 3 o'clock. Everyone is urged to attend.

NIGHT LIGHTS WILL INCREASE EGG YIELDS

Will artificial light stimulate, or increase winter egg production? If so, give recommendation.

John Ivey Alabama Polytechnic Institute extension poultryman replies as follows:

Egg production is usually in direct proportion to amount of feed consumed by hens. Use of lights will prolong the feeding hours, consequently more feed intake, thus more winter eggs.

Two systems of using lights, with many variations of each are recognized, namely: All Night Lights and Early Morning Lights. If lights are used start them about September 15.

If all night lights are used—for each 100 hens, or a 20x20 foot room, use one 20-watt light bulb at the beginning. The intensity of the light may be increased by putting in a larger bulb from time to time to increase greater feed consumption.

If morning lights are used, turn them on at 4:00 a. m., using a 40-watt light bulb for each 100 hens, or 20x20 foot room.

Next April when the lights are to be discontinued, gradually decrease the number of hours the lights are on. If discontinued all of a sudden serious results might follow.

Planting good [illegible] including winter legumes, [illegible] most crops will be increased substantially. High production soils [illegible] greater efficiency in the use of land, labor and materials.

To secure the best results from winter legume crops, good seed should be used. Seed should be planted early. Seed should be inoculated and planted properly and the crop should be fertilized with superphosphate," he continued.

Where peanuts are harvested for nuts it is important that cover crops be sowed to give protection to the bare land and replace part of the fertility removed by the peanuts.

Assistance is offered by the AAA for seed and phosphate used in growing winter legume crops, Mr. Glasscock stated, and that many Chilton County farms have substantial AAA allowances that are not yet used. Mr. Glasscock further stated that basic slag is now available and can be delivered to the nearest railroad station at an early date.

All farmers interested in additional slag for pasture improvement or winter legumes should make their applications at an early date.

RADAR
Spotted Enemy Targets Through Darkness, Smoke or Fog
The Bell System—
The largest source of Radar for our fighting forces
THIS is not surprising for Radar development and production stems from the same roots that produced and continue to nourish this country's telephone system.
Radar, the instrument which enabled our land, sea and air forces to spot enemy targets through darkness, smoke or fog, was one of the outstanding new fighting instruments of the war.
Two years before Pearl Harbor the Government asked Bell Telephone Laboratories to put its wide experience and knowledge of electronics to work to help perfect Radar as a military instrument. From then on the Laboratories co-operated closely in the Radar program with the National Defense Research Committee, with Army and Navy specialists, and with scientists of Great Britain.
The Western Electric Company, manufacturing branch of the Bell System, became the Nation's largest supplier of Radar systems. One type it made was universally used by B-29's in the Pacific for navigation, target location and high altitude bombing. Another played an important part in aiming the guns on our warships.
If you're waiting for a home telephone, it helps a little to know that Radar is one of the reasons. For years telephone manufacturing plants were devoted to war needs.

Big Jim Folsom Says Governor's Mansion Will Have To Have Plenty Room For Children To Play

(By Jane Aldridge, Feature Writer, for the Birmingham Post)
Courtesy Birmingham Post

Cullman, Ala. — Just where to fit Cullman's lanky "Big Jim" Folsom, six-foot eight-inch runnerup in the last governor's race into the current political picture, is a question that still has most observers guessing.

"Big Jim," thoroughly enjoying their discomfiture, is doing and saying little to lessen their bafflement.

"Let 'em stew," he says with his slow grin. "There's plenty of time to talk about political platforms and programs in the months to come."

The gangling Cullman insurance salesman is by all odds the most colorful and at the same time, the most unorthodox of the current crop of gubernatorial contenders.

Upset Predictions

In the last campaign, veteran prognosticators attempted to write him off as a political buffoon and an "also ran." He promptly upset their predictions by coming uncomfortably close, as he puts it, to "getting on the payroll."

Running a close second to Governor Chauncey Sparks in the hotly contested race, he is credited with placing either first or second in 41 counties.

His campaign personality, plus his tremendous height, are perhaps his biggest stock in trade. Big Jim knows it, and what's more to the point, he knows how to capitalize on it.

Flaunts His Big 16's

Take his big feet. Those size 16's might embarrass lesser men, but never Big Jim. Where others would try to hide them or at least, to camouflage their size, he openly flaunts them.

He even directs attention to them when he makes a speech.

"Just look at these feet," he'll drawl. "You know, I've never been able to get a pair of shoes to fit in two years. Something's got to be done."

Then likely as not, he'll obligingly pull up his trouser legs to display not too shapely, but certainly, very bare legs.

Audiences Howl In Delight

The audiences howls with delight. More important, it goes home and gleefully recounts the incident to friends and neighbors, which of course, is good politics and exactly what Big Jim wanted all the time.

Then there's the story of his frustrated Army career. Early in the war, Folsom volunteered for military service. Always athletic—he played football and basketball back in his school days—he was now eager to do his bit in the war. He passed his physical with flying colors, and then with considerable fanfare, left for the wars ready to "do or die."

But his Army career was brief and inglorious through no fault of his own. Quite literally, Big Jim was just "too much" for the Army.

Army Couldn't Fit Him Out

"I not only never got near the shootin' I never even got in a uniform," he admitted ruefully.

For the Army was able to fit him only in fatigue pants, shirt and tie. After six months of trying to find a uniform for him, the Army admitted its defeat. Big Jim was sent home with an honorable discharge.

"Whether you like him or not," explained one of his supporters, "one thing is certain: If you ever meet him, you'll remember him. Because to forget Big Jim is a physical impossibility. . . He's honest and sincere. I think he's the next governor."

But Folks Vote For Him

A rival politician, looking over the prospects of the various candidates shrugged helplessly when he came to the name of the Cullman's elongated son. "He's the sort of chap you just can't tell about in advance," he said. "Jim appeals to the popular imagination. He's like a big awkward puppy. People love him on sight and for no apparent reason, feel kindly toward him. It doesn't seem to matter what he says or does, or even if he says or does anything. They just vote for him regardless. To them he's not a politician, . .he's the guy down the street or the man next door."

All of which pleases "Big Jim" immensely. "Why shouldn't they feel like that?" he grins. "It's exactly what I am. Just a big old country boy with a program."

Here's His Program

"My program," he hastened to add, "is really quite simple: I'm for what's right and I'm agin' what's wrong."

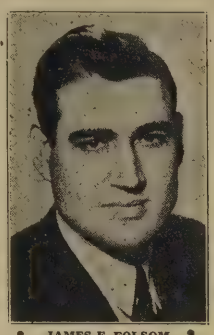
It's a typical Folsom rejoinder to questions seeking to pin him down to definite campaign talk.

Though loathe to discuss his political plans, Big Jim is loquacious and even eloquent on another subject—his two little girls, Rachael, aged six, and Melissa, "going on three."

"I'm Paw and Maw both to them," he explained. "It's a mighty big responsibility. . .more important certainly than being governor or holding any other political office."

His wife, the former Sarah Carnley, of Elba, died unexpectedly last year on the eve of Big Jim's only political success to date.

Elected National Delegate



Determined to get in on some phase of the war, he enlisted in the merchant marine after his Army discharge. While he was at sea serving on an Army transport, he was elected, without any effort on his part, a delegate to the National Democratic Convention in Chicago.

So Big Jim rushed back to the states to attend the convention. About the time he got home, however, his wife was taken to the hospital for an emergency operation. . . and died.

Reluctantly, Big Jim went on to the convention and managed somehow to get through it. When he got back to Cullman, he collapsed. Unable to stand even the sight of the house that had been home, he immediately moved his family up the street. There in new surroundings, he and the little girls are picking up the threads again and starting over.

His Girls Know How

It really is a moot question as to who rules whom in the household now.

• JAMES E. FOLSOM •

The two little girls order their big papa around with all the assurance of top sergeants — and he meekly obeys.

More than one political and business consultant has been startled on arrival at the Folsom home for a conference to find the living room furniture awry, and Big Jim down on the floor just "playing" with his children.

"I can't announce for governor," he announced gravely, "until I investigate to see if the governor's manston is okay for playing marbles and hide-and-seek."

By following a few simple rules, farmers can prevent, or at least cut down considerably, insect damage to grain stored on the farm. Heres how: Store grain in clean bins, clean bins well before storage, do not fill bins too full, keep the grain dry and cool, inspect often, and fumigate if necessary.

Farmers Advised To Watch Land Prices

Farm land prices have advanced on the average of one percent a month for the last four years and are now higher than they were in the late twenties.

During the 12-month period ending July 1, 1945, prices for farm land rose 11 per cent. This yearly increase has been topped only twice in the last 34 years. Values rose 15 per cent during the year ended in March 1944, and 21 per cent in 1919-20 when the World War I was at its peak.

Welcoming Hands

A CORDIAL invitation has been extended to all former employees in military service to resume their employment with us. Some of them have already been released and all who have applied have been re-employed either at their old jobs, or other jobs of equal seniority and pay. We will sincerely try to fit into suitable jobs those employees who return disabled as a result of their war experiences. In Alabama Power Company, the hands of 2,800 officers, supervisors and other employees are ready to be extended in welcome to the more than 700 former employees still in military service.
Their pre-war experience is needed so that as materials become more plentiful we'll have the capable help required to extend electric service to more and more homes and do the many other things we have planned for the post-war period.

UNIVERSAL has given us another of those top-notch psychological mysteries, one as good as "The Suspect." This time it's "Uncle Harry," with a star-studded cast — George Sanders, Geraldine Fitzgerald, Ella Raines and Sara Allgood, who has only to walk across a room to steal the scene from everybody else.

GERALDINE FITZGERALD

You'll see superb acting all through the picture, especially in some of Geraldine Fitzgerald's scenes. It's a picture that causes rather violent reactions — people are going to like it tremendously or argue about it for weeks because they wanted a different ending. And that's a sure sign that a picture is exceptional; if it isn't nobody cares how it turns out.

Dennis Morgan, star of "Christmas in Connecticut," is the only Hollywood star who has worked in pictures under three different names, so far as we know. At Metro he used his own name, Stanley Morner. At Paramount, Richard Stanley. Warners' gave him his present name.

If you've just stubbed your toe on a disappointment, here's encouragement for you. Clark Gable lost his first film job because "his ears are too big." George Brent and Humphrey Bogart were dropped by contract holders because they "weren't convincing in western drama." And Bette Davis' name must still embarrass certain executives who let her go "because she has no sex appeal."

It looks as if the movie stars can't resist the restaurant business. During filming of "Young Widow," Louis Hayward had an architect make plans for a cafe to be opened when the war ended, and Alan Ladd's going into partnership in a hamburger stand.

Frank Sinatra seems to be set for the next five years in radio. He's signed a contract for 39 weeks with a cigarette company, with options covering that time. He'll replace "Which is Which," for which "Detect and Collect" substituted this summer. He'll be heard Wednesday nights, on CBS. He says one of the best things about the program is the fact that Mann Holiner will be the producer — thinks Holiner's the best producer in the business.

The only motion picture footage of the atom smasher, which played an important part in experiments leading to the development of the atomic bomb, will be seen in "Miracle Makers," a Warner's short subject now ready for immediate release. Dr. O. E. Lawrence, who developed the cyclotron, as it's called, was technical adviser on the sequence and appears in the film.

Jack Smith, who now has his own show on CBS, joins Bing Crosby, Ginny Simms and all the others who've started on the air singing with a trio and graduated to stardom. Jack was in high school when he and two friends landed the job vacated by Bing Crosby's Rhythm Boys at the Cocoanut Grove. He spends his free time teaching returned soldiers at the New York School of Artcraft Instruments.

Twentieth Century - Fox's "The House on 92nd Street," dealing with the development of the atomic bomb, is based entirely on records of the FBI, showing their work in counteracting enemy agents' attempts to obtain the secret. It was made secretly in New York, Washington and other locales, and sequences dealing directly with the bomb were omitted till after it had been used in Japan.

ODDS AND ENDS—Guest ghosts galore will haunt "Inner Sanctum," now back again on CBS, with Paul McGrath as Your Host. . . . Jane Wyman liked that leopard coat she wears in "The Lost Weekend" so much that she had a duplicate made for her own wardrobe. . . . Many of the servicemen now in hospitals are learning the inside stories of actions they participated in, by listening to Don Seymour's "Now It Can Be Told" series. . . . Bing Crosby sings 22 songs in Irving Berlin's "Blue Skies"—a treat for Crosby fans, who won't be hearing him weekly if he carries out his threat to abandon those Thursday night broadcasts

These Gallaghers Do Get Around and About

PHILADELPHIA. — "My, my, isn't that a coincidence?" said John Gallagher at a police station.

A man he said had robbed him told police his name also was Gallagher—Joseph Gallagher.

"A coincidence!" said the policeman who made the arrest. "Why, shake hands, brother. I'm Charlie Gallagher."

Helps Hubby Who Lost Four Limbs

Says She Finds Problem of Aiding Soldier Simple.

BATTLE CREEK. — Soldiers at Percy Jones hospital have become accustomed to seeing a pretty dark-haired girl with a quick smile and a southern accent, sitting in the corridor of their ward.

When she isn't there, they know she is in the room with her husband, M/Sgt. Frederic Hensel, the first soldier to lose parts of all four limbs in battle in this war.

She is Jewell Hensel, attractive girl from the Kentucky hill country. The soldiers know what she didn't—that Sergeant Hensel will get well faster because of her and that there are women who, because they can't take it, aren't much help to their wounded husbands.

"I didn't know there were wives like that," she commented with honest surprise. Then she added, rather indignantly for her, "I don't see why there should be. They are the same men who went away. Inside they haven't changed a bit.

"You marry for better or worse, don't you?" she asked, "and when you have trouble you have it together."

Tall and slender, Mrs. Hensel has long, wavy brown hair, big brown eyes and high cheekbones, which probably come from her Cherokee Indian ancestors a few generations back.

Both the Hensels grew up on Kentucky farms—the sergeant, an orphan, lived with relatives in his youth. Eight years ago he joined the army, and five years later returned to Corbin, Ky., to marry Jewell Carty.

It was on June 2, after he had been overseas since March, 1944, that Hensel stepped on an anti-tank mine on Okinawa. The explosion blew off both legs, his left arm above the elbow and injured his right forearm so that it, too, had to be amputated.

To her the problem of helping her husband is very simple — she acts the way she feels. But first off, she doesn't think about herself.

Learn of Largest Flying Boat Built by Germans

HAMBURG. — The German aircraft industry had completed the world's largest flying boat, only to have it destroyed by American fighter planes, had tried unsuccessfully to replace buzz bombs with cheaper glide-bombs, and had at least one new high altitude fighter ready for production when the surrender came.

The mammoth seaplane was a 100-ton, six-engine monster built by Blohm and Voss in 1943 from plans drawn by Dr. Vogt for an ultra-long range reconnaissance craft for use over the Atlantic. It was about 25 tons heavier than the Martin Mars, currently the biggest American plane, and half the weight of the 200-ton Kaiser - Hughes flying boat now nearing completion at Culver City, Calif.

Artilleryman Discovers Marines Hard to Please

WITH THE MARINES. — As far as one artilleryman is concerned, it is impossible to do anything to please the marine infantry, says S/Sgt. J. B. T. Campbell Jr., a USMC combat correspondent.

The artilleryman made his gripe as he paused for a breath in his seemingly endless task of loading a smoking piece.

"This morning these infantry marines were ready to kiss us when they saw our big guns rolling ashore behind them," the artilleryman muttered.

"Now what happens? Now the Nips are trying to smack these guns, so naturally we draw more Jap fire to this area—and the line troops curse us!"

Jap Trick Shown Up by Yank Who Knows Babies

WITH THE MARINES.—An alert marine sentry who knew there was a right way and a wrong way to carry a baby, was responsible for capturing a Jap soldier attempting to infiltrate through our lines on Okinawa.

Warned to be on the lookout for Jap troops posing as civilians, the sentry became suspicious when he noticed how awkwardly an infant was being carried by its "mother." When he halted the "mother," he discovered that "she" was a Jap soldier trying to slip through the marine lines.

The Japs have been going to elaborate lengths to masquerade as civilians, but the use of an innocent baby as an aid to the disguise is the newest device, according to the report of S/Sgt. Ray Fitzpatrick, a USMC combat correspondent.

Father, Daughter Commit Suicide, Leap From Bridge

Child Obeys Parental Order In Blind Faith and Dives to Death.

SAN FRANCISCO. — Five-year-old Marilyn Demont, obeying in her childish faith a parental command to commit suicide, leaped unhesitatingly from the 220-foot high Golden Gate bridge, followed seconds later by her father, says the United Press.

The girl climbed the railing of the windswept span and without a look backward plunged head over heels into the swirling tides of San Francisco bay where they flow into the Pacific. It appeared she ended her young life voluntarily, without a protest or last-minute: "Why?"

The father, 37-year-old August C. Demont, a mechanic, left a note explaining only that "I and my daughter committed suicide."

Two witnesses to the bizarre double suicide watched daughter and father jump in quick succession and saw the bodies a moment before they disappeared. Coastguardsmen said after a three-hour search that the bodies probably were carried out into the Pacific ocean by the changing tide.

Marilyn, who would have celebrated her sixth birthday in two weeks, stepped out of her father's car and ran quickly to the four-foot bridge railing near the south tower of the span, according to two painters, Jack Ricketts and Al Maloux.

Jumped Voluntarily.

She paused briefly, crawled down to a girder and then jumped voluntarily, they told highway patrolmen.

The father walked about 30 feet farther along the bridge, poised himself on the railing and then dived headlong into the water.

On the seat of the car officers found a note which said simply:

"This auto belongs to Mrs. A. C. Demont, 4356 26th street, San Francisco. I and my daughter have committed suicide." the note was signed "A. C. Demont."

Neither the note nor the distraught mother offered any explanation of the tragedy, or any reason why the child was persuaded to make the leap.

Psychologists, when told of the double leap, said it was most unusual for any individual, even as young as Marilyn, to voluntarily follow instructions which mean destruction.

Took Marilyn Along.

Demont's wife, Carolyn, said her husband had been injured several weeks ago while repairing an elevator, and had left their home at 8:30 a. m. to go to a doctor's office and receive a report on his condition.

He insisted on taking Marilyn with him, despite his wife's protests. Another daughter, Carol, 8, was home in bed with the measles.

Demont did not go to the doctor's office, and his wife apparently had a premonition of tragedy as he left.

When asked if she had expected such tragic news, she sobbed:

"Oh, yes. I knew it, I knew it."

Mrs. Demont and her mother said the father "had been ill for some time." But fellow workmen where he had been employed for 16 years described him as "efficient, stable and well liked," and said he had recovered from his injury.

Gives Up Suicide, Then Kills Self by Mistake

VAN NUYS, CALIF. — James Ambrose Milliken, 28, quarreled with his wife, detective Arthur Embler reported, threatened to shoot himself, but was disarmed by Mrs. Milliken.

Then they made up and Milliken seized his rifle, swung it against a post and exclaimed:

"Let's forget the whole thing. I'll bust this — gun."

A cartridge, overlooked by Milliken when he unloaded the gun, was discharged, shooting him in the abdomen. He died in a hospital shortly afterwards.

Poison Liquor Kills 188 G.I.s in Europe

PARIS. — The army disclosed recently that 188 American soldiers died in Germany and France from January 1 to July 10 from drinking disguised methyl alcohol.

All troops in those countries were warned to be extremely careful where they get their liquor.

Forty-four soldiers died of poison liquor in one week of May. The overall figure for the year outstripped the number of deaths by communicable diseases among troops on the continent in the same period.

B-29 Bomber Blows Off Lid, Then Catches It

GUAM.—The B-29ers have brought back a souvenir from a town of the Jap homeland—inadvertently.

It's a large piece of tin roofing, snagged on the wing of a superfort piloted by Capt. Samuel B. Hanford, Saybrook, Conn., over Sakai, a suburb of Osaka. The crew ripped it to bits to provide souvenirs for all.

The 20th air force explained the bomber entered the intensely hot updraft from the flaming target just in time to catch the soaring roofing on a wing.

A NATION GOD USED

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 41:46-57.
GOLDEN TEXT—He hath given meat unto them that fear him: he will ever be mindful of his covenant.—Psalm 111:5.

Conservation of natural resources —that phrase has a modern touch to it, and yet we would do well to turn back to the story of Joseph in Egypt and learn anew the importance of not wasting what we have if we are to be fed in the days of shortage.

Certain it is that we should face at once the shameful record of waste in the manufacture and sale of intoxicants. This is temperance Sunday. Let us not fail to stress this truth.

Joseph recognized the provision of God and made use of it for His glory and the good of the people.

I. Food—God's Provision (vv. 46-49).

As men work with God in the cultivation of the land they are apt to begin to think of themselves as producers, when they are actually only the servants of the Lord in the orderly care of that which He provides.

We need to renew our sense of complete dependence upon God lest we become proud of our own supposed attainments and forget Him. Then He will have to withhold His bountiful hand and we shall stand with empty measures.

Remember, too, that what God has given to feed the nations cannot with impunity be used for the manufacture of intoxicating beverages which are designed and used for no good purpose—only for destruction. Let's not forget that God could send us a famine, too!

The manner in which Joseph cared for the gathering of the grain is worth noting. He did not sit in his royal office and send out an edict. He went throughout the land building storehouses, seeing that the grain was properly conserved.

We need more of that personal touch in government. Too much of life is controlled by "directives" and "rules" with too little of the touch of human kindness and a personal knowledge of the needs of the people.

Observe also the wisdom of storing the food in the place where it was raised and where it would eventually be needed. No shipping and re-shipping, no undue centralization, and no temptation to form a special "grain bureaucracy."

II. Family—God's Gift (vv. 50-52).

From among the Gentiles, Joseph took himself a bride. While it is not indicated, we have reason to assume that she was a believer in the true God. One cannot imagine a man of Joseph's character and spiritual integrity marrying an unbeliever.

The sons which came into the home were recognized as God's gift. Note how God was counted into the life of these boys and of the home.

We spoke above about the need of conserving grain. Think now of the infinitely more important conservation of boys and girls.

The liquor interests have used this war to create a taste for beer on the part of millions of young men and women, both in the armed services and in our war plants. They have broken down the objections and the religious principles of many and we are almost at the point where one who objects is regarded as a foolish fanatic.

If America cannot with impunity use her grain to make booze, do you think God will hold us guiltless if we stand idly by and let the rapacious breweries and distilleries take our boys and girls? It is high time that we awakened to our responsibility and stood up for our convictions, come what may!

III. Famine — God's Opportunity (vv. 53-57).

Now the time had come when God's word to Joseph was proved to be true. When His loyal servant stood before the world as the one who was in touch with the infinite One, he had the food to give out because he had obeyed God's command.

It is in the crises of life that the things of God prove themselves. When man's hand drops in weakness and despair, God steps in and does the abundant thing; that is, if we are willing to recognize Him.

There is another sense in which the coming of famine was God's opportunity, for it gave Him the chance He wanted to speak to men. In the days of plenty and prosperity mankind is self-sufficient and too busy to listen to God, but when there is no food to eat, he has time to hear God.

One wonders, with a wonder that is almost agonizing at times, whether America is going to force God to bring hunger of body to her children in order to make their hearts hunger for Him. Will we wait to cry out to God until we have felt the sharp pangs of hunger, or will we by our obedience and gratitude of heart encourage Him to continue His abundance toward us? Reader, how do you feel in your own heart?

CHILTON COUNTY NEWS

VOLUMN XXIII — CLANTON, ALABAMA, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1945 — NUMBER 37

Clanton Country Club Off To Good Start

At a recent meeting of those interested in the Country Club 32 charter members were taken in and it has been suggested that the charter membership be limited to 35.

The charter members have purchased one hundred ten acres of land and work will soon start, a golf course and other forms of entertainment will be installed and it is predicted that, as time passes, Clanton will have a Country Club that will compare favorably with any town in the State.

The charter members will own the Club and will, of course, have control of its operation. Associate members will be invited to join on an annual membership basis, the terms of which will be announced shortly. Service men now absent from home will be given an opportunity to become charter members when they return.

The interest is very pronounced now and if this continues it is likely that the charter membership limit might be raised in order to take in those who have not, as yet, joined.

U. S. Employment Prepared To Handle Servicemen Appeals

With its war-time problem of finding jobs for workers, the U. S. Employment Service is getting braced to keep unemployment to a minimum, Albert M. Beasley, Clanton USES Manager said today.

Appealing to all employers to list their job openings with the office, Mr. Beasley descrined the function of USES as providing a clearinghouse of ready information about available work and available workers.

"Job seekers who have registered their qualifications with us constitute a reservoir of available workers with which to promptly fill employer orders. When we take the application of a worker, we record complete data determining all the jobs he is qualified for, and the job he is best qualified for. This application is checked against the employer's requirements for a particular job to insure that the workers we refer will meet employer specifications, Mr. Beasley pointed out.

Special emphasis is placed on service to returning veterans. USES is notified of all veterans returning to this county subsequent to discharge, and to each a letter is written outlining the services available to him at USES.

Affirming that the office is pledged to keep unemployment down to the lowest possible minimum, Mr. Beasley clairified its function as a receiving agency for Unemployment Compensation claims.

"There has been some public misunderstanding of this aspect of our work," he said, "and a few people have had the mistaken belief that the Employment Service solicited claims. When an unemployed worker files a claim, to be eligible for unemployment benefits he must be available for work, able to work and seeking work."

Mr. Beasley stated that at the time a worker files his claim for benefits his application for work is taken and continuous effort is made to place him in suitable employment. If he refuses to accept suitable employment, his benefits are discontinued on the grounds that he is not actually available for work.

"Our Employment Service Office," Mr. Beasley said, " is here to serve all employers and workers of Chilton County. We urge the fullest possible utilization of our facilities on the part of local employers in order that we may be of real assistance to this community in keeping unemployment down."

The wedding will be an event of early November.

Hunting Dates Little Changed From Last Year

State Adds 9 Days to Deer Campaign; Government Retains Split Dove Season But Alters Dates

Other than an additional nine days granted deer hunters by Conservation Director Ben C. Morgan and altering of the dates of the split dove season by the Federal government, the 1945-46 hunting seasons are the same as those which were in effect last year. Some few changes have been made in supplementary regulations, one of which extends to 90 days the length of time in which game may be held in possession after the close of the season on the particular species held.

The Federal government will have a split dove season of October 1 to 15 and December 18-January 31, effective all over the state. Bag and possession limits remain at 10 per day.

Duck, geese and coot (poule d'eaux) seasons remain November 2-January 20, although Uncle Sam has rescinded the "bonus bag limit" of last year and restricts duck hunters to 10 ducks per day in aggregate of all species with 20 allowed in possession except on opening day when only 10 are permitted. Not more than one wood duck may be taken daily or held in possession. Two geese a day or four in possession is the bag limit on honkers, except that 4 blue geese may also be taken with 8 allowed in possession. Twenty-five coots may be taken daily or held in possession. A season of November 20-January 21 will be in effect for rails, gallinules and sora with 15 per day or in possession allowed on first named two species and 25 per day or in possession permitted on sora.

North Alabama squirrel hunters will open the resident game seasons October 1, continuing their activities north of U. S. Highway 80 through January 1. South of that line, squirrel hunters open the season October 15 and close January 15. Ten squirrels a day may be taken.

October 1 will also see the opening of the O'possum, rabbit and raccoon seasons when these fur-bearers are hunted as game. The seasons close February 20 with no bag limit in effect.

The three most treasured Alabama game species will not become legal prey for gunners until November 20, bobwhite quail, deer and wild turkeys. Twelve bobwhites may be taken daily or held in possession—except under special permit from the Department of Conservation—through February 20. One pronged antlered buck deer may be taken daily or a total of three during the season of November 20-January 10. One wild turkey gobbler may be taken daily or a total of five for the combined seasons of November 20-January 1 and March 20-April 15.

All resident game may be shot during the hours from daylight to sunset while migratory game — ducks, geese, coot, doves, rails and gallinules —may be shot from one-half hour before sunrise to sunset. All Alabama hunters over the age of 16 years are required to have a $1.00 county license if hunting within the county of legal residence or $3 state license for hunting in counties other than that of legal residence. In addition, persons over 16 years of age are required to purchase a $1.00 Federal migratory bird hunting stamp for shooting waterfowl. It is unlawful to lend, borrow, alter or deface a hunting license.

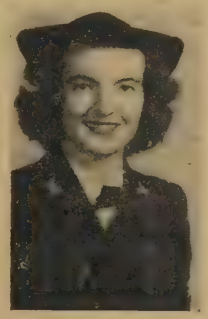
As a friendly tip, there are no open seasons in Alabama on bear, beaver, otter, alligator, Wilson snipe or jacksnipe, pheasant, chukar partridge or woodcock.

Plans Nearing Completion For Training Institute

Great numbers of interested people throughout the county are registering for the Recreation Training Institute September 17-21, to be held in the High School Gymnasium. Plans are made for a banquet to be given the final night of the Institute.

Sponsored by the Chilton County Board of Education, the classes in recreation will be conducted by Miss Ruth G. Ehlers, a capable representative from the National Recreation Association. There will be an afternoon session from 3 until 5, and also an evening class membership will be limited to 100 people for each class. No children whatsoever will be permitted to attend these sessions.

Besides learning how to conduct different types of recreation in the community, members will discuss problems of post-war recreation and means of making the community the center of recreation for both young and old.



All people interested in church, school, club or in any other type of community recreation should turn in their names to Elsie Schurter, attendance chairman, or to Patterson Hicks, Chairman of Local Arrangements, or to D. P. Culp, Director of the Institute.

ADDS TO BUSINESS

Mr. R. B. Miller, owner of the Clanton Trading Post & Sewing Machine Shop, has taken over the Bossinger Stove Exchange in connection with his business.

Mr. Miller invites all of his old friends and those of Mr. Bossinger to visit him at his place.

MISS JUANITA MILLER IS MARRIED TO CHARLES WILLIAM COLQUITT

The marriage of Miss Juanita Lillian Miller, neice of Mr. and Mrs. Reuben W. Lowe, and Charles William Colquitt, USNR, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Colquitt of Seale, Ala., took place at 6:30 Friday, August 21, at the home of Rev. P. D. Walker, pastor of the Oakdale Baptist Church, Mobile, Ala.

The bride wore the Wave white dress uniform.

Following the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Colquitt left on a short trip, after which they will make their home in Mobile, where they are both stationed.

School Community Relationship Voted Aim Of Year

At the Teachers' Institute held last Monday in Clanton, the County Association adopted better relationships between the community and the school as the primary aim of the schools for the coming year. The County Board of Education also agrees that this is the most urgent need of education in Chilton County.

With the school as the community center, the association hopes to reach five specific goals:

1. To get parents to organize, join and attend Parent-Teachers Associations at their schools. To visit schools, to become familiar with their set-up parents and teachers to know, respect understand each other. These are to receive the first emphasis.

2. To keep in school every day, every child that should be in school. To make the child's illness or an emergency the only condition for allowing him to be absent.

3. To provide recreation for parents as well as students. To use the school building as the place and school buses as the means of necessary transportation.

4. To improve the health of school children. To emphasize better programs in physical education.

5. To improve the appearance of school grounds and buildings; to keep them clean and attractive.

With the help of the people of this county, education forces expect to reach these goals. Without such help, they know they cannot.

Spending Spree To Follow Okey Of Tax Diversion

One of the greatest spending sprees in the history of Alabama's government will follow ratification of the income tax diversion amendment like night follows day, it was predicted in Montgomery this week by Senator Bruce Henderson, chairman of the Alabama Home, Farm and Business Protective Association, which has been organized to defeat the amendment.

The real purpose of the amendment, Senator Henderson said, was concealed behind an appeal for education but could be discovered in this provision, "The residue shall be paid into the State Treasury."

"This is the main provision of the Sparks amendment," Senator Henderson said. "It is disguised and buried deep in a maze of legal phraseology. It is hidden by two other provisions for debt retirement which have already been provided for otherwise. It is hidden by a provision for homestead exemption which has already been provided for otherwise."

Senator Henderson then pointed out that the real purpose of the amendment was to get a "slice" into the treasury where it would be handy for the professional spenders to get their hands on it. "They have talked about education, welfare and other humanitarian subjects," he said, "and many other things not mentioned in their proposed diversion amendment. That is just so much camouflage for their real purpose. They could not afford to tell what they have in their amendment."

"Governor Sparks, his lieutenants in House and Senate, and his department heads fought every effort to earmark revenue from the income tax for education, welfare and health for which they now say the money is needed. They fought every effort to earmark the income tax for homestead exemption from county taxes which they now say is the way it should be written.

"Educational leaders had for so long been going about the State putting legislators on the spot in their demand for the earmarking of all educational funds, and specifically income tax funds, that the SAME legislators were shocked when they came to Montgomery and found the SAME educational leaders with 'rings in their noses' advocating that the income tax money be put in the State Treasury, where they know and the public knows it will be frittered away by 'long division' for enlarging State departments and for 101 things which are the pet projects of pressure groups but which do not have public approval."

"The sad, sordid fact is," Senator Henderson concluded, "that some sinister purpose of getting a huge chunk of public money at the free disposal of political spenders is being camouflaged as aid for education, welfare and public health."

MACEDONIA — BEAT 14

Our pastor, Rev. Oden, brought two wonderful sermons Sunday.

Visitors at church Sunday were: Mr. and Mrs. Dink McCarty, Mr. and Mrs. Hattie Hicks Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Ward and Mrs. J. D. Ward.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Yanks Find Jap Cities in Ruins; Global War's Cost Tops Trillion; Congress Faces Busy Session

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Aerial survey by U. S. naval planes discloses extensive bomb damage in downtown Tokyo, with only modern fireproof structures surviving hair-raising raids.

JAPAN:
Sad Sight

Pouring into Japan for occupation duties, U. S. troops saw the devastating effects of the American aerial war all about in the larger industrial areas.

Emphasizing the ruin of Japan's great urban centers, Air Force Commanders Le May, Doolittle and Twining declared bomb damage even surpassed their own estimates, with the Nipponese making no effort to repair the wreckage like the Germans did.

Whereas reconnaissance led the air force to believe 60 per cent of the aircraft assembly plant on the east side of the river at Nagoya was wiped out, an inspection showed that nothing at all was left. And whereas the celebrated Mitshubushi plant in the same city was estimated to be 95 per cent destroyed, it was found totally ruined, with only the steel framework remaining.

While damage at Nagoya was typical of the destruction at Tokyo, Yokohama, Shizuoka, Kobe and other cities, with the inflammable wooden oriental dwellings igniting like tinder under the spark of fire bombs, Premier Higashi-Kuni reported that the death toll from raids approximated 450,000. No less than 95,000 persons were said to have perished in the atomic bombing of Hiroshima, with people still dying from burns incurred.

But if Jap cities were hell on earth during the heavy raids, so were many of the enemy prison camps, where large numbers of U. S. captives suffered mistreatment and malnutrition. First set upon by angry Jap civilians in parachuting from damaged planes, fliers later were mishandled by Nipponese prison guards, seeking vital information.

Quick repatriation of U. S. prisoners was among the early objectives of General MacArthur's occupation forces, settling down to the big job ahead following the official signing of the surrender terms aboard the USS Missouri in Tokyo bay. In preparation for an estimated army of 400,000 men, MacArthur ordered the Nipponese to provide adequate housing, office space, storage space, hospitals and communications.

WAR'S COST:
Staggering

Bloodiest and most destructive conflict in history, World War II cost both Allied and Axis nations over 14,000,000 dead and $1,000,000,000,000, late estimates showed.

No less than 252,885 American fighting men lost their lives on the far-flung battle-fronts, with 651,218 wounded, 43,969 missing and 122,747 captured. Among the wounded were 17,300 survivors of surgical amputations, 7,300 men deafened in some degree and 1,190 blinded in one or both eyes.

Spending $287,000,000,000 from the beginning of the rearmament program in 1940, the U. S. put 1,500 fighting ships and 100,000 auxiliary vessels to sea; built over 223,000 airplanes, and produced in excess of 119,000 tanks and armored cars; 1,-000,000 artilley pieces; 18,000,000 small arms; 180,000 tractors, bulldozers and construction equipment, and 2,400,000 trucks, not to mention other items.

Against U. S. costs, Germany spent $280,000,000,000; Russia, $136,-000,000,000; Italy, $95,000,000; Great Britain, $64,000,000,000; Japan, $49,-000,000,000; France, $13,000,000,000, and Canada, $7,000,000,000.

CONGRESS:
Back to Work

Their vacations cut short a month by V-J Day, congressmen and senators hustled back to Washington, D. C., for a resumption of business, with the working calendar loaded with important domestic, foreign and military matters.

Of a dozen top-flight issues, the question of court-martials or a congressional investigation of the Pearl Harbor debacle of December 7, 1941, promises to become the hottest, with Democrats and Republicans alike seeking an exposure of all the facts upon which army and navy boards based recent reports fixing the blame for the disaster.

While the question of clarifying the responsibility for Pearl Harbor promised the most exciting fireworks, other important issues pending include:

Overhauling of the tax structure, with probable reductions in individual and corporate levies; extension of the draft for youth 18 to 25; termination of executive wartime emergency powers, OPA reconversion pricing; reorganization of the executive branch of the government as proposed by President Truman, and passage of the bill entrusting the government to plan for full employment.

Other important issues include increased unemployment compensation payments up to $25 weekly for 26 weeks for discharged workers; size of the postwar army and navy, with the former calling for 1,500,000 men and the latter 550,000; disposal of $100,000,000,000 of surplus property without disturbing the postwar business structure, and final settlement of the huge $42,000,000,000 lend-lease debt, which President Truman asked be cancelled.

VETS:
Job Rights

The long smouldering battle over veterans' job rights promises to come to a head when congress acts on a bill of Representative Knutson (R., Minn.) giving G.I.s seniority credit for time spent in the service in applying for old and new positions.

Supported by both the Veterans of Foreign Wars and American Legion, with their mounting membership of over 3,000,000, the measure is being bucked by the AFL and CIO, with their 15,300,000 workers.

Nub of the bill lies in the provision permitting veterans to use service seniority in obtaining new positions. While both the AFL and CIO have recognized the G.I.s right to assert his service seniority in getting his old job back, they oppose any move to give him preference in plants where he has not worked before.

Atom Likely Source of Heat

The most probable utilization of nuclear energy, the basis for the atomic bomb, is as a source of heat, according to engineering and research heads.

Concerning the possible use of nuclear energy as a source of power to heat and light homes and buildings, operate factories, propel ships, locomotives, airplanes and automobiles, scientists predicted that several prospective uses of nuclear energy will become technically possible, but that it is too early to predict whether such uses will be economically practical.

In stating that the most probable utilization of nuclear energy is as a source of heat, scientists said that such heat in turn may produce steam or hot gases for use in power generating.

DEMOBILIZATION:
Speed Discharges

In order to meet its avowed goal of releasing five million men within a year of V-J Day, the army announced revision of its discharge rules.

The point score necessary for release was lowered from 85 to 80, with personnel permitted to count up to date rather than merely up to V-E Day, as previously provided. G.I.s 35 years of age or older, with a minimum of two years of service, now become eligible for discharge upon application.

Availability of transport will continue to govern rate of discharges, the army related, though all vacant space aboard both ships and planes will be utilized to return overseas personnel.

AGRICULTURE:
World Parley

Most pressing international food and farm problems will receive major attention from delegates when the Allied nations meet to establish their food and agricultural organization (FAO) in Canada October 16.

Born at the international food conference in Hot Springs, Va., in 1943, the solely advisory FAO has as its objectives:

1. Improvement in efficiency in the production and distribution of all food and agricultural products.

2. Raising levels of nutrition and standards of living.

3. Betterment of the conditions of rural populations.

Before the FAO can develop a comprehensive program, however, the U. S. state and war departments and the foreign economic administration are formulating immediate measures to help relieve the serious food crisis in Europe.

TAX MODERNIZATION

Though taxes will remain heavy to support a prospective 25 billion dollar a year federal budget, modernization of the whole tax structure is necessary for the achievement and maintenance of full employment, Secretary of the Treasury Vinson declared.

Sec. Vinson

In calling for an overhauling of the tax machinery, Vinson averred that any sound tax program must permit profitable investment to stimulate employment, and only a minimum encumbrance on the workers' pocketbook to allow him to buy industry's products.

Vinson's tax declarations followed earlier congressional reports that individual rates may be slashed 20 per cent in the forthcoming revenue bill. Business would be provided with relief by repeal of the excess profits tax.

RECONVERSION:
Running Well

Free from wartime encumbrances, and meeting no unforeseen difficulties, American industry continues to reconvert at top speed, with Chairman Krug of the War Production board predicting that the rate of dollar output would be 12 per cent higher by the end of this year than in the normal prewar period of 1939-41.

By next June, Krug said, the production rate will have soared to 187 per cent of normal, with employment 33 per cent over the 1939-41 mark. One of the pace-setters of modern American production, the automobile industry figures to be turning out over 504,000 passenger cars per month by then.

Indicative of the ambitious production programs of industry as a whole, manufacturers expect to be putting out 2,177 electric appliance units per month by next June compared with the prewar rate of 1,440; 495,000 washers and ironers against 186,000, and 474,000 refrigerators against 316,000.

NATIONAL BANKS:
Boost Assets

Boasting of total assets of nearly 82 billion dollars as of June 30, 5,021 national banks stand in an extremely strong position to help finance the nation's rapid shift to a peacetime economy.

A breakdown of assets showed deposits of 77 billion dollars; holdings in government obligations of over 47 billion dollars; unimpaired capital stock of over 1½ billion dollars; surplus, undivided profits and reserves of over 1½ billion dollars.

At the same time, the Federal Deposit Insurance corporation, government agency set up to protect depositors, indicated the general strength of the banking industry by reporting that no insured institutions have gone into receivership since May, 1944.

YANK SINKINGS:
Total Small

Four thousand, six hundred and twelve American soldiers lost their lives at sea in World War II, with total embarkations to all theaters — in actions against both the Germans and the Japs — numbering 6,753,261 troops through the end of July, 1945.

Of the total, 1,008 went down in the Pacific, the war department's review of the troop sinkings revealed.

Veterans' SERVICE BUREAU

EDITOR'S NOTE: This newspaper through special arrangement with the Washington Bureau of Western Newspaper Union at 1616 Eye Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., is able to bring readers this weekly column on problems of the veteran and serviceman and his family. Questions may be addressed to the above Bureau and they will be answered in a subsequent column. No replies can be made direct by mail, but only in the column which will appear in this newspaper regularly.

Disability Rate Change

Because of the much greater percentage of survival from gunshot wounds of the brain, chest and abdomen in this war than in World War I and because of new disabilities incident to service in the tropics, the Veterans administration has adopted a new rating schedule in determining the degree of disability suffered by veterans of this war.

The schedule, which has been in preparation for two years, replaces and liberalizes many provisions of one prepared in 1933 and lists, for example, 176 separate disabilities of bones, joints and muscles with numerous gradations within each, as compared to 126 listings in the previous schedule.

Special attention has been given in the new service-connected disability ratings to scars resulting from explosions, oil burns and the residuals from frozen or immersion foot. A number of tropical diseases have been listed as cause for disability with special ratings adapted for each, although only malaria and filariasis have been encountered among discharged veterans.

Changes in the medical concept of the relationship of specific diseases to other conditions and to their service connection are also reflected in the new schedule. This has resulted in the inclusion of many new disabilities, some of which are rated as high as 100 per cent on a temporary basis where they are not expected to produce more than a 10 per cent permanent disability. All changes are designed to facilitate more accurate and more equitable ratings for the various types of disabilities.

In using the new rating schedule, however, the basic policy of the Veterans administration remains unchanged and the veteran is allowed the benefit of the doubt as between the higher of two ratings, in determining whether or not a disability is service-connected.

Questions and Answers

Q. How does the death rate of wounded soldiers in the present war compare with that of the First World war?

A. According to the war department announcement June 1, the death rate of our wounded soldiers in this war is 8 per cent. The death rate of wounded soldiers, who lived long enough to reach surgery in the First World war was 24 per cent.

Q. Would transfer to a different outfit overseas account for the demotion of a corporal to a private?

A. The war department says that a soldier could be demoted, without prejudice, to the grade of private if he was transferred into an organization where there was no vacancy in his grade.

Q. Is a former member of the Seabees, who participated in the action at Vella Lavella entitled to a star?

A. One star has been authorized to be worn on the Asiatic - Pacific area service ribbon for participation in one or more of the following actions: Vella Gulf action, August 6 and 7, 1943; Vella Lavella occupation, August 15 - October 16, 1943, and action off Vella Lavella October 6-7, 1943.

Q. How soon after filing application for a pension can the widow of a war veteran expect payment?

A. There would be no way of telling the exact time which would elapse, but the pension would be retroactive from the date of application.

Q. Would you advise dropping government insurance policy?

A. Most service officers believe it advisable not to drop government insurance, especially if you have a service disability and likely will not be able to pass a physical examination for private insurance. A majority of veterans are converting their government insurance into 20-payment or other form of private life insurance. At least, the veteran should permit his insurance to run its present term until he has a chance to analyze his ability to keep up an insurance schedule of payments. We suggest that you consult your local draft board, veterans administration or your private insurance company.

Q. Can a veteran of either this war or the First World war enter a hospital in another state to take advantage of a better climate, or must he remain in the hospital within the state in which he lives?

A. According to the Veterans administration, it is possible in some cases to be transferred to a hospital outside his state. His transportation would not be paid for unless the physician in charge ordered such a transfer. You should refer the matter to the regional office of the Veterans administration which rated you and is handling your case.

Ship's Paying-Off Pennant Extends Length of Vessel

One of the oddest signals flown by a ship is the white paying-off pennant which is hoisted on a British naval vessel to show that it is homeward bound to be put out of commission, says Collier's.

Although this pennant is only two inches wide, its length is equivalent to that of the ship, which may be hundreds of feet. Therefore, a small balloon has to be attached to the end of the ribbonlike streamer to keep it in the air.

THE STORY THUS FAR: Spratt Herlong, motion picture producer, had married Elizabeth, after her first husband, Arthur Kittredge, had been reported killed in World War I. Elizabeth had been orphaned when a baby and had been raised by her aunt and uncle in Tulsa. One summer vacation she met Arthur at the country club. They were married soon afterwards. Within a year he enlisted and before long was reported killed in action. After a long period of soul deadness, Elizabeth decided to go to Los Angeles and start a new life. In her office she met Spratt Herlong, who she immediately liked for his character and ability.

CHAPTER VII

"Hollywood is a factory town, where several big industrial plants manufacture a product that is packed in tin cans and shipped out to be sold to consumers. The honest manufacturers do their best to turn out a product that will be worth the money they get for it. That's all."

Elizabeth smiled appreciatively. "It's refreshing to meet a man as honest as you are."

"Thanks," returned Spratt, "though I didn't know there was any special virtue in speaking one's mind."

"There is in knowing one's mind," said Elizabeth.

Spratt laughed a little. They had finished dinner in a restaurant, and as Spratt happened not to have a show to cover that evening they had ordered more coffee and stayed to talk. She asked,

"What do you want to do in pictures ultimately, Spratt?"

"Produce them," he answered without hesitation. "I like the executive end. But I shouldn't want to be a producer until I've had some experience in writing, or at least supervising a story, and directing. It's a good thing to know what other people are doing before you try to tell them how to do it."

"And you'll do your best," she added, "to pack an honest product in your little tin cans?"

"Certainly," he said, laughing frankly. "A first - class product worth a first-class price."

She laughed back at him. "You're not an idealist, are you, Spratt?"

"Not the classic variety, at any rate." He paused a moment, and remarked, "Elizabeth, it's so much easier to dream about the ideals we can't reach than to do the best job we're capable of doing." He paused again, poured cream into his coffee, and in a rare expression of confidence he added, "I guess I saw too much of that when I was a youngster. I come from a long line of visionaries who were too sensitive to take the world as they found it and get anything done. I don't like it."

"Please go on," she urged.

"Half my father's salary was always going to support relatives so delicate-minded they couldn't do anything but write bits of verse for the magazines and lament the decline of culture. The other half went mostly for books, and soap. Books, soap, toothbrushes, neat patches and the appurtenances of gentility." He shivered.

"I think I'm really getting to know you," said Elizabeth. "May I venture a guess?"

"Go ahead."

"So now half your salary goes for postage on letters to the delicate-minded relatives, telling them they can either go to work or starve, it's all one to you."

"How right you are," said Spratt. They began to laugh again, and Elizabeth started telling him about Aunt Grace and her cups of tea. "My aunt would really be sorry to see the millennium arrive, for if there were no affliction there'd be nobody for her to pester with good works. In consequence I sometimes think I'm hard-hearted. But I simply loathe patronizing the poor."

"Now we do understand each other," said Spratt. He gave her a companionable smile across the table. "I like you, Elizabeth."

"I like you too," she said.

By this time they were spending their evenings together several times a week. It was characteristic of Spratt's forthright habit of mind that several nights later, when they were having dinner again, he suddenly interrupted a pause in the conversation to say to her,

"Elizabeth, may I ask you a personal question?"

"You can ask it, of course," she returned, "though if it's very personal I don't promise to answer it. What do you want to know?"

"About your husband," he said.

Elizabeth looked down at the reflection of an overhead light on the surface of her coffee. "My husband was killed in the war," she answered briefly.

"Forgive me, won't you?" said Spratt.

She looked up. Spratt was regarding her with a friendly contrition.

"I'm sorry," he continued. "I can see it's not easy for you to recall it."

"No, it's not," said Elizabeth. After an instant's pause she went on, "Why did you want to know?"

He smiled. "Frankly, for self-protection. Shall I explain?"

"Why yes, I wish you would."

He leaned a trifle nearer her. "Well, this isn't an easy town to get around in, Elizabeth. You are Mrs., and you wear a wedding ring, but you live alone and I've never heard you mention your husband. We've been seeing a good deal of each other, and I'd like to keep on seeing you, but I wanted to make sure. I've had—well," he said with a shrug, "one or two embarrassing experiences with unexpected husbands turning up. I hope this doesn't make you angry," he added.

"Why no, of course it doesn't. I don't mind saying it surprises me. I suppose I take it for granted that everyone knows I'm a widow, or at least that if I weren't widowed or thoroughly divorced I shouldn't be going out with men as casually as I do. But maybe I've been a bit naive for Hollywood—and anyway, as you noticed, I'm still reluctant to talk about it."

"Then we shan't talk about it," he said gently. "Thank you for understanding why I brought it up."

There was a pause. "Were you in the army?" she asked.

"For a little while. I never got across."

"And when did you come here?"

"In the first winter of the world's hangover." He spoke readily, evidently glad to turn the course of her attention. "Before we went into the war I had worked for an advertising agency in New York. We handled a lot of moving picture advertising, so after the war they sent me out to organize a branch office in Los Angeles. Then I got a chance to do studio publicity."

"My husband was killed in the war."

From there the talk went back to moving pictures. As he drove her home, Spratt said, "I'd like to see you over the week-end if you can manage it."

"I can, easily."

"Good. Would you rather go dancing at a night club Saturday night or spend Sunday at a swimming pool?"

"Sunday, swimming."

"Terrific, so would I. I've got to do a layout on one of my beauties, and I can do it either Saturday night or Sunday. So I'll get rid of it Saturday night, and pick you up Sunday morning. I belong to a rather good country club and we'll go there—swim, late lunch by the pool, get sunburnt in the afternoon. Right?"

"Splendid."

He stopped the car in front of her apartment house and went up with her. At her door Spratt said,

"Elizabeth, about what came up at dinner. Don't run away from it. Look at it hard, and take it."

"I do try to, Spratt," she said in a low voice. "I've been trying to for a long time now, but I can't always. Sometimes it—comes back. As if it had just happened yesterday."

"I think I understand. Though maybe I don't—nothing's easier than believing we understand experiences we've never had. But the longer you live the more you find out that life consists mostly of getting used to things we don't like. Keep trying."

"I will, Spratt."

He went on, "You know, most of us, when we say happiness, mean the absence of change. And that's just fighting the facts. Our lives are always changing in spite of anything we can do about it. Eventually, if we learn anything, we learn to take what happens and go on with it." He stopped abruptly, half abashed. "Queer, my talking like this. I don't often. But there it is—I wish I could offer you more consolation."

"Why, you have," said Elizabeth.

"Have I? How?"

"By being you. It's hard to explain."

"Thank you." He took both her hands in his and gave them a hard grip. "You're a swell girl, Elizabeth."

When she went into her room and turned on the light she felt a new elation. She had not seen this side of Spratt's nature before. Finding it made her feel that for the first time since she came to California she had acquired, not another companion to amuse her leisure, but a friend who would be there when she needed him.

The following Sunday, as they were driving home, after a brisk day of sun and water, she leaned back in the car, saying drowsily, "I'll probably be asleep by eight o'clock tonight. I'm so tired!"

"I am too," said Spratt, "fun-tired. Let's do this often."

"I'd like to. But I thought you worked most of your week-ends."

"So I do, but that's been because there was nobody interesting to play with. I work too hard."

"Are you just beginning to realize that?" she asked.

"Not exactly, but I'm just beginning to admit it. Work can be like liquor sometimes, an escape from too much of one's own company."

She glanced up, expecting him to go on, but Spratt remarked on the coloring of the desert hills in the sunset and said no more about himself. Remembering his remark later, however, she thought she should have expected it. She might have realized long ago that like so many other brilliant and ambitious men, Spratt was essentially lonely. Yet she had not realized it, and she was glad to do so now. She needed his friendship; it was good to know that in spite of his self-assurance Spratt also had need of her.

When he asked her to marry him she was not surprised. She did not answer him at once. Spratt had given her so much, more than she knew until now, when she had to consider the possibility of letting him go. But she wanted to be fair, and in fairness there were matters that had to be explained.

She explained them on an evening when they were in her apartment, Spratt listening with quiet attention while she spoke. She told him how she had loved Arthur, and how she had suffered at being told he was dead. "It can't be easy for you to hear this," she said.

"It's easier now than it'll ever be again," he answered. "Go on."

Elizabeth stood up. Moving around behind her chair she put her hands on the back of it and held it while she talked.

"Spratt, you told me to take this out and face it. I've tried to. I've tried to be practical, to tell myself everything I might tell somebody else. I've said to myself that maybe Arthur wasn't worth what I gave him, maybe nobody ever born could deserve so much.

"Yes. But you haven't said whether or not you want to marry me."

"I do want to. But I'm not sure you're going to want to marry me. If you don't want to, say so. You're too fine and honest to have anything less than the truth from me, or to let me have anything less than that from you. Spratt, when Arthur died something died in me. What I feel for you—it's strange to call it love, because it's so different. It's not adoration that sees no faults. It's thoughtful and realistic. I like you, I admire you, I have tremendous respect for you. I trust you completely. I'd tell you anything. I know you'll never fail me. But I can't give you what I gave Arthur, because I haven't got it to give. It's just not there any more."

She looked across the room at him, listening steadily in the half-glow of a reading lamp some distance away. She concluded,

"It would hurt me terribly to lose you. But it would be worse to know I had been less than completely honest with you. There may be another woman who can give you what I can't, and if that's what you want, please, please tell me so."

She heard a soft, smothered little sound from his direction, and saw to her amazement that Spratt was laughing. He stood up and came over to her.

"My darling girl, you told me I was honest. I am, and I'm going to prove it. If any woman offered me the sort of total worship you're talking about, she'd throw me into a panic."

He put his hands on her shoulders and squeezed them as he continued, in comradely fashion. "Forgive me for laughing. I wasn't laughing at you, but at the idea that anybody could possibly think I might want to be adored like that, which you'll have to admit is ridiculous. Elizabeth, if I may be brutally frank—if that's what you were like when you were a young girl I'm glad you got rid of it before I met you. I want you the way you are."

Quite suddenly, she began to laugh too. This way of talking about marriage was so different from the shining rapture with which she and Arthur had talked about it.

"Then you do want me, Spratt?"

"You bet I do."

"You're not going to be sorry for what's past?"

"I should say not. You see, Elizabeth, it's really quite simple. I love you as you are. What you are must be the result of what's happened to you before. If it had happened differently, you'd have been a different sort of woman now, and I shouldn't have loved you. It makes sense."

"You're the only man I know," said Elizabeth, "who always makes sense."

They were married soon after that. She had never had reason to be sorry. Spratt had been brilliantly successful in his work, they had their three children, their long unbroken affection, and the peace of mind that came from knowing themselves of supreme importance to each other. It was a good life.

JUDAH'S CONCERN FOR HIS FAMILY

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 44:18-34.
GOLDEN TEXT—How shall I go up to my father, and the lad be not with me?—Genesis 44:34.

The family is the fundamental unit of society, and is therefore of more importance than the church, the state, or the social order of which it is a vital part. Every force which encourages the breakdown of the sacred relationships of the home and family is set for the destruction of society itself.

Men have too often chosen to go the way of the flesh, and therefore they have disregarded God's plan and purpose. But the home is just as sacred as ever in His sight, and brotherly love still finds a high place among the virtues of real men.

The family comes before us as we continue the study of Joseph's life. As we study it we bear in mind Joseph's dealings with his brethren, who as yet did not recognize him as the one they had sold into captivity. He was bringing them kindly but definitely to the point of real repentance, so that he could show himself gracious to them.

To do so he had brought disaster upon them. Being happily on their way homeward with a new supply of food, they were overtaken and proved to be thieves, and Benjamin, the beloved of their father Jacob, stood condemned to death by their own words.

In that crisis the mouths of the others seemed closed, but Judah, who had really saved Joseph's life (Gen. 37:26, 27), and who had apparently finally come to himself as a man of essential goodness, pleaded for Benjamin's life.

That plea presented a truly sacrificial brotherly love, as he manifested

I. Courage (v. 18).

Easy rests the yoke of family life as long as all is joyful and prosperous. But when adversity strikes, when sorrow comes, or sickness, or sin, then the true test of devotion is at hand.

It was a brave and manly thing for Judah to stand before the one whom he knew only as the man who was "even as Pharaoh." The circumstances were all against him. He expected the flaming anger of the offended ruler. His brethren had collapsed in despair. It was one of those dark hours which come to every family when someone must demonstrate true love by being strong-hearted and fearless.

II. Intelligence (vv. 19-29).

We have become so accustomed to accomplishing things by the use of words that we are in danger of substituting speech for action. Even in times of sorrow or need we send a well-worded card or telegram, and regard our mission as accomplished.

Words have their place, but there comes a time when they must be coupled with intelligent action. Crises call for more than a cheerful smile or an encouraging word, much as they may mean in such an hour. We must be prepared by our close contact with our loved ones to speak and act with vigor and assurance.

III. Self-denial (vv. 30-33).

One step deeper goes the devotion of this man to his father and his brother. He had done no wrong that merited punishment, but evidently his brother Benjamin had been guilty. Had he been of the spirit of Cain he would have said, "Am I my brother's keeper?" and let him answer for himself. Why should Judah suffer for another? Why should he allow himself to be imprisoned in a strange land to save his father from sorrow and his brother from what seemed to be the just reward for his deeds?

Thus reasons the man of the world, but such is not the language of the true brother. He says, "Let thy servant abide instead of the lad as a bondman." Well and courageously spoken!

IV. Love (v. 34).

Love for father and brother underlies all of the courage, conviction and self-sacrifice of a man like Judah. In his younger years, and possibly under the influence of his brothers, he had failed in that respect, but now his real devotion to his brother was evident.

That affection was a real, powerful and beautiful thing, and yet it is but a faint prefiguring of the affection of the One who "sticketh closer than a brother," who "though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich" (Prov. 18:24, II Cor. 8:9).

Let us improve the opportunity to review our relations with our own family, to determine whether there is aught that we in intelligent and courageous self-sacrifice should do for our own. Concern for family will pay rich dividends, especially in these days of broken homes and disturbed personal relationships. Love will do more than anything else to hold us together.

Alabama War Chest Appeal Begins On October 9th

Urgency of the fourth and final Alabama War Chest Appeal, which begins October 9th, was underscored in a statement made here today by Joe S. Campbell, County War Chest Appeal chairman, setting forth the purposes for which funds raised will be used.

"Directors of the National War Chest fund who set the budget for this last appeal point out that these next six months will be one of the most critical periods in human history," Mr. Campbell's statement said.

"Victory in the Pacific and the morale problems of occupation, demobilization and convalescence mean a peak load for the USO and USO Camp Shows with no possible retrenchment possible until next Spring. The USO cannot stop helping those in occupation forces of our armies overseas not our men still in service over here. More than half the fund to be raised this year will go to USO and other agencies that serve the men and women of our armed forces.

"The crisis in Europe with Germany defeated, but with real victory not yet won, means that these six months will settle for millions of the liberated the grim question of sheer survival and also will largely shape the kind of peace and the kind of work with which we shall have to live.

"Funds raised in this final campaign will finance 19 National War Fund Agencies either in liquidation or to January 1, 1947. To accomplish this the National War Fund budget was set at the same amount as last year, viz.: $115,000,000. Hence the State quota had to be the same as last year.

"I am confident that our county's quota will be raised in full because our people will not let down in their loyalty to those in our armed forces who have won the victory nor fail our striken Allied neighbors in their time of greatest need."

A state-wide agriculture and industry meeting will be held in Auburn on September 11 and 12. Several area meetings have been held.

The AVERAGE MAN'S FIGHT

Isn't Financed by Money Out Of State Treasury

YOUR HELP NEEDED

The fight to defeat the Sparks income tax diversion amendment is the fight of the little taxpayers of Alabama to protect themselves and their property. The big taxpayers are strong enough and smart enough to protect themselves. The Alabama Home, Farm and Business Protective Association, as it's name implies, is an organization to fight the battle of the average man and woman of this State. The money it is spending to send speakers into every nook and cranny of Alabama, to buy advertising space in newspapers, to spread the alarm among Alabama's taxpayer, is made up of small, voluntary contributions which are being sent in by average men and women. The Alabama Home, Farm and Business Protective Association cannot draw on the State Treasury to finance its fight. It is dependent on your contributions and the contributions of your neighbor. Your property is in danger! Five dollars or one dollar will help.

You who care to help finance its fight may send check or money order direct to headquarters.

1. Because he is a young and energetic man now fifty years of age.
2. Because he is a native Alabamian. His people have lived in Northeast Alabama for over one hundred years.
3. Because he is a farmer. He was born and reared on a farm, and has successfully carried on farming operations all of his life, and knows the problems of the farmer.
4. Because he is religious. He and all members of his family have been identified with religious activities in Northeast Alabama for one hundred years, his grandfather and two uncles being Ministers of the Gospel.
5. Because he is fair to labor. He has employed thousands of men in his business career, and in all of his dealings with them his record is clear.
6. Because he has excellent executive ability. He has operated successfully a country store, cotton gins, sawmills, planing mills, wholesale lumber companies, building and construction companies, and continues to head and guide efficiently many enterprises in Alabama. From this experience, he knows the problems of Alabama.
7. Because he is a firm believer in education.
8. Because he has and still supports old age assistance in his various enterprises, and knows the value of this assistance.
9. Because he has constructed various farm-to-market roads, and realizes their importance for the public welfare.
10. Because he has encouraged and brought to Alabama new industries, with a full realization of their value to the State and its people.

GROW FEED

PROTECT & IMPROVE SOIL WITH WINTER LEGUMES, SMALL GRAIN

THE EASY WAY

These Hogs Are Working For You

Hogs gathering their own feed save you labor and feeding expense. Produce healthier animals and winter cover protects your land.

These Cows Are Producing Economically

Grazing crops---One acre per cow: 1. Crimson Clover and rye grass. 2. Small grain and vetch or Austrian peas. 3. Small grain. For Hay and (or) Grazing: 1. Oats and Vetch; 2. Oats alone. For Soil Improvement: 1. Vetch; 2. Austrian Winter Peas.

"CHILTON COUNTY WILL COME INTO ITS OWN WHEN HER FIELDS ARE GREEN IN WINTER"

Cotton, which remains the major cash crop on most Chilton county farms, will possibly have to have a crutch to walk on when normal production and marketing conditions again exist. By all farm management standards the production and marketing of livestick and livestock products will be a strong crutch to help cotton produce an adequate farm income on many Chilton county farms.

To be able to realize the goal and strengthen our farming systems and farm incomes with livestock and livestock product sales we must produce economically. That is, we must produce cheaply enough to be able to take a part of the market away from the established livestock producing areas. To do this we must continue to increase our per acre yields of row crops and produce feed for livestock production on all remaining acres.

Labor saved by producing crops that can be harvested in the fields by livestock will largely determine whether or not our livestock and livestock product sales will show a profit. Preparing land and producing grazing crops will help spread the farm jobs throughout the year. Livestock and livestock product sales will also help make the farm income lager enough to meet the farm family needs throughout the year.

Winter legume production for soil protection and soil building is the most economical way of increasing per acre yields. We must remember that a man can only cover a limited number of acres and that our total production is determined by multiplying a farm's average yield times the number of acres. The high producing acres of the farm are the money making acres. To have more money making acres use vetch and Austrian Winter peas on as many acres as possible this winter.

THE HARD WAY

This Method Of Feeding Keeps You Working

Many successful farmers state that they can prepare land, plant and cultivate crops for livestock and produce a profit.

But, if crops must be harvested, hauled into the barn, taken from the barn to be ground, and then taken back to the livestock, a profit cannot be made.

Chilton County's 1946 crop yields will be greater, Chilton County's Livestock will be healthier, Chilton County's fields will be in better condition if every Chilton County farmer will plant small grain, legumes for Grazing, Hay, Soil Improvement

Kathleen Norris Says:

Don't Hang Around a Man's Neck

Dell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

"I showed Jerry this letter, and he denied the whole thing. He said that only casual office civilities had passed between him and Arlene."

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

CAROL NORTH asks me an age-old question. There is only one reply.

The question comes to me in a letter that explains that she is 36, has been married for ten years to a man two years younger. They have three children; a boy of eight, twin girls of five, they own their home, have a fine group of friends, club and social interests, and an income that for some reason — Carol's intelligence, I imagine—is adequate. She writes me that until about a year ago her life was one of cloudless happiness.

"I don't mean we didn't have worries and responsibilities," she says, "of course we did. But we shared them, and loving Jerry as I did that sharing made everything sweet. I was so proud to be his wife, to spend his money wisely, to raise his children. I would not have changed places with anyone in the world.

"Last June I began to notice a change in Jerry. It was a very subtle change, but it didn't escape eyes as loving as mine. He was not quite at ease, he was more loving and thoughtful than ever, but curiously abstracted. It made me anxious, but he assured me that he was not worried about business or health, and I tried to quiet my fears.

Office Love Affair.

"Then I had an anonymous letter, very specific and detailed. Jerry was having an affair with one of the secretaries in his office, a grass-widow 26 years old. She has a boy one year old, who lives with the father, so that while I don't know what the reason for her divorce was, it seems probable she was at fault.

"I showed Jerry the letter, and he denied the whole thing. He said that only casual office civilities had passed between him and Arlene. But a very little investigation proved to me that this was an untruth, and presently he confessed the whole thing. He seemed overwhelmed with shame, and promised to drop Arlene at once.

"This was at Christmas time, and I watched to see the affair end. He did try to end it, becoming very irritable with the children and me at the time when he was not seeing her, and suddenly sweet and considerate when he broke through his resolution and took up with her again. The wretchedness of these fluctuations I won't try to describe; some wives never will know them, the others hate to be reminded of them. Finally he asked me for a divorce, so that he could marry Arlene, but through storms and coldness I stuck to my determination that my children should keep their father.

"Finally he came to me in what seemed to be true repentance; Arlene went away, and we were completely reconciled. The joy of being in each other's confidence again healed my heart of the humiliation and pain I had suffered so long. We had always kept an unbroken front before the children, and they knew nothing of all this; there seemed to be no reason why we should not forget the whole thing.

"His vanity is flattered. . . ."

"But torturing doubts have made me miserable ever since. I find I don't wholly believe Jerry, I don't really trust him. When he gives me some excuse for being away in an evening, or on a Saturday afternoon, I suspect him of starting another affair. If some girl in the office speaks of him I wonder if it is with that girl. I have seriously thought of trying to get work with the same company, but the impossibility of getting domestic help makes that impracticable now. So I am writing to you, to ask you if you think I should trust Jerry, and if I am wrong in my attitude?"

He Will Do It Again.

My answer is, unfortunately, that I think a man who does this once will do it again. His vanity has been flattered by the sweet poison of Arlene's surrender; his sensations have been far too delightful to be easily forgotten. It may be months, it may be years, but he will fail you again.

But that doesn't mean you are wise in distrusting him, spying on him, suspecting him. You are extremely foolish to put your whole happiness in a weak, attractive husband's hands. Live for other things, your lovely children, your friends and studies and interests and amusements—in a word, live for yourself. Take from him whatever friendship, companionship, planning, help you can get—resign yourself to the fact that your idol has feet of clay—is selfish, weak, blind sometimes. The cruelest revenge you could wreak on such a man is to give him his divorce, and let him find out for himself in just what a fool's paradise he is living. But for the children's sake don't do that; just ride out the storm, and realize that no woman can have everything.

Africa Gave Us Gladiolus

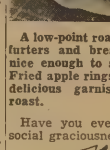
The gladiolus is a native of South Africa, where quite a number of species are found growing wild. Some are fragrant, and they vary considerably in size and shape and date of blooming. Yet all of them would look very poor indeed in contrast to even the poorest of our garden varieties, for a great deal has been accomplished by hybridizers in giving fine color and larger flowers. For this reason none of the wild species are cultivated in our northern gardens.

TRUST DESTROYED

Can a wife ever resume the old relationship of complete trust when her husband has admitted his unfaithfulness, and has asked for a divorce so that he can marry another woman? Is a reconciliation after such an episode really possible? Miss Norris deals with these questions in today's article.

After nine years of happy married life Carol North, 36, became aware of a changed attitude in her husband, Jerry. He seemed abstracted, and although he tried to appear as kind and affectionate as ever to Carol and the three children, there was obviously something on his mind. It wasn't business worry, or ill-health. Carol wondered, until she received an anonymous letter from someone in Jerry's office. It told how he was having an affair with a pretty divorcee, 26 years old.

Carol believes that she should try to keep their home together for the sake of the children. She and Jerry talked things over, and he decided to end the affair. He seemed truly repentant, Carol says, and they hoped to forget the ugly matter. Carol however, is tortured with doubts and fears. She can never really trust Jerry again.



HOUSEHOLD MEMOS... by Lynn Chambers

When Company Comes High Degree of Ingenuity Is Essential to Success

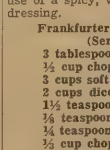
A low-point roast made with frankfurters and bread stuffing can be nice enough to serve for company. Fried apple rings make a pretty and delicious garnish for this crown roast.

Have you ever in a moment of social graciousness invited someone to drop in for dinner and then discovered that the ration books cannot offer much help? This happens to all of us these days, but there are ways and means to skirt around this situation.

Did you know that a roast can be made from a few frankfurters and that it can taste as good and look as luscious as a prewar steak? Or, if the sugar bowl is bare, syrup can sweeten the cake and syrup can make an icing that stands in frothy peaks?

Don't let strict rationing keep you from being generous about inviting people over. Its more necessary now than ever when travel is curbed and we must seek "homey" entertainment.

And remember, too, there are no curbs on the niceties of serving. Good linens, shining silverware, sparkling glassware and attractive china will dress a table beautifully. A bowl of garden-fresh flowers or an arrangement of your own orchard's fruits can add personality touches even to simple dinners.



Now, here's the first dinner suggestion:

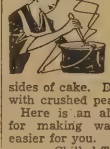
Melon Ball Fruit Cup
Frankfurter Crown Roast
Fried Apple Rings Broccoli
Orange Rolls
Lettuce Salad French Dressing
Peanut Brittle Sugarless Cake
Iced Tea or Coffee

This frankfurter roast is a satisfying but low-point meat dish that is guaranteed to please your guests. The "franks" are kept moist and juicy by brushing with salad oil, and the meat, itself, is extended by the use of a spicy, well-seasoned bread dressing.

Frankfurter Crown Roast.
(Serves 6)
3 tablespoons salad oil
½ cup chopped onions
3 cups soft bread crumbs
2 cups diced carrots
1½ teaspoons salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
¼ teaspoon marjoram
½ cup chopped parsley
2 eggs
6 frankfurters

Heat oil. Add onions and simmer until soft. Do not brown. Combine bread crumbs, carrots, salt, pepper, marjoram and parsley. Add the slightly beaten eggs, the onions and the oil in which the onions were cooked. Mix well. Turn into the center of an oiled shallow pan and shape into a round loaf about 4 inches in diameter.

Cut frankfurters in half, the split lengthwise. Arrange, skin side out, around carrot loaf, overlapping them slightly. Tie a string around the frankfurter crown and secure with a few toothpicks above and below string. Brush frankfurters with oil. Bake, uncovered, in a moderate (375-degree) oven for 30 to 35 minutes. Remove from pan, using pancake turner or wide spatula, and place on a hot platter. Garnish with fried apple rings.



This sugarless cake, though made with syrup, is light, moist and fine-textured. The important point to keep in mind is to add the syrup to the creamed shortening very gradually. Pour it from a bottle into a measuring cup and add a little at a time, beating until the mixture is thoroughly blended after each addition. When syrup is properly blended in this way, a smooth, ligh batter results.

Peanut Brittle Sugarless Cake.
(Makes 2 8-inch layers)
2½ cups cake flour
2½ teaspoons baking powder
⅛ teaspoon salt
½ cup shortening
1 cup light, bottled syrup
2 eggs
½ cup milk
1½ teaspoons vanilla extract
¼ cup crushed or chopped peanut brittle

Sift the flour. Measure and sift again with baking powder and salt. Cream shortening. Add syrup gradually, beating after each addition Add well-beaten eggs and beat until thoroughly blended. Add sifted dry ingredients with the milk, beating after each addition. Add vanilla and the crushed or chopped peanut brittle. Turn batter into two lightly greased tins. Bake in a moderately hot (375-degree) oven for 25 to 30 minutes.

Syrup Frosting.
¼ teaspoon salt
2 egg whites
1 cup light, bottled syrup
¼ teaspoon lemon extract
¼ teaspoon almond extract
¼ cup crushed or chopped peanut brittle

Add salt to egg whites and beat with rotary beater until stiff. Add syrup gradually, beating after each addition. Continue beating until mixture stands in peaks. Add extracts. Put between layers and on top and sides of cake. Decorate top of cake with crushed peanut brittle.

Here is an alternate menu plan for making wartime entertaining easier for you.

Chilled Tomato Juice
Individual Beef Loaves
Creamed Potatoes
Green Beans Garnished with Pimiento
Molded Cottage Cheese and Cucumber Salad
Homemade Wheat Bread
Lemon Upside-Down Cake
Beverage

Crushed peanut brittle and syrup provide all the sweetening necessary for this lovely glamour cake. Sugarless frosting also made without sugar stands in high, beautiful peaks and stays soft.

These individual beef loaves are extended with bread crumbs but none of the precious meat flavor need be sacrificed when a seasoning of rich beef broth is used to highlight the meaty flavor.

Individual Beef Loaves.
(Serves 6)
1½ pounds ground beef
1 tablespoon beef broth
2 tablespoons chopped onion
1½ teaspoons salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
1½ cups dry bread crumbs
1¾ cups milk
1 egg

Lightly mix all ingredients together. Avoid over-mixing. Shape into six individual loaves. Set aside in baking pan and bake in a moderate (350-degree) oven for 40 minutes

If Recipe Doesn't Fit the Family: If you run across recipes that are too large for the family, let the following hints be your guide:

One-fourth to one-third pound of lean meat is a good proportion to use for one serving. When buying a roast, plan to serve it for several meals.

One-half to two-thirds of a cup of vegetables are good guides to vegetable serving.

Don't try to divide eggs in small recipes. Too much egg is better than not enough and more than the recipe calls for will have little effect on the result, but will add more nourishment.

When making half a muffin recipe, fill empty tins with water to protect the cups.

Cake and cookie recipes should not be divided. Both keep well for several days to a week, and a larger quantity can be made safely.

Clark Gable is back on the "China Seas," where he was ten years ago. For "The Big Shore Leave," in which he stars with Greer Garson, the old Merchant Marine freighter was renamed the "Minnie Tolbert" and fixed up a bit. But when Gable saw her he whooped "That's not 'Minnie,' that's the old 'China.'" The same ship on whose deck Gable first kissed Jean Harlow, while a brunette newcomer looked on. The newcomer has done all right in pictures, too, by the way—her name is Rosalind Russell.

In five weeks and three days of personal appearances Bud Abbott and Lou Costello, vacationing while "Mystery in the Air" replaces them Thursday nights on NBC, netted $75,000 for the Lou Costello Jr. Youth Foundation. They'll return to the air in October.

When Esther Williams reported for work on Metro's "The Hoodlum Saint," the make-up girl took one look at her and went to work with turpentine. It wasn't a new skin treatment—Esther'd been painting her porch furniture the afternoon before.

A good assistant director has his wits about him all the time. Recently at Paramount a scene for "Calcutta" was in progress when an arc light placed near the ceiling touched off part of the automatic sprinkler system. One hundred extras and the entire crew scrambled for cover, but Herbie Coleman had only one worry. "Don't let Alan Ladd get wet!" he shouted. "We haven't a change of clothes for him!"

"County Fair," the Jack Bailey show, joins the small, select list of radio's summer replacements that have been so successful that they've been kept on. "Jimmy Carroll Sings" is another. Jimmy may act as master of ceremonies in addition to singing.

Jerry Wayne, star of his own radio show heard on Fridays over CBS, has worked up a little act with a few stage and radio personalities, to tour the army hospitals around New York. It's a two-act musical comedy and the boys say it's swell.

Bashful Oswald, heard on the NBC "Grand Ole Opry," is probably best known for his wild and raucous laugh. Oswald's two children now delight their playmates with a good imitation of their father's trademark—his three-year-old daughter is practically perfect at it.

Phillip Terry showed up on the set of "To Each His Own" with a bad limp. While talking to Walter Pidgeon, he rested his knee on a chair and promptly put it out of joint. So in some of his scenes with Olivia de Havilland and Mary Anderson you'll see Terry sitting down, though originally it was planned to have him stand.

—:—

ODDS AND ENDS—Xavier Cugat will not only appear with his orchestra in Metro's "Holiday in Mexico"—he'll turn crooner as well. . . . "Truth or Consequences" Ralph Edwards, who's been living in Bebe Daniels' home in Santa Monica, is moving into Groucho Marx's this fall. . . . Fred Allen brings his Allen Art Players back to the air Sunday evening, Oct. 7th, immediately following Edgar Bergen and Charlie McCarthy. . . . He'll also have Minerva Pious, and Al Goodman's orchestra. . . . The furore over Lauren Bacall may have been the cause; anyway, there was a "command performance" of "To Have and Have Not" at Windsor castle for the king and queen.

SNAPPY FACTS about RUBBER

B. F. Goodrich has produced an airplane tire that figuratively sprouts wings. When wheels are lowered for landing, special vanes or flaps on tire cause it to rotate, which overcomes severe scuffing and drag when wheels hit runway.

American scientists and engineers have achieved in five years with synthetic rubber what it took nearly 70 years to accomplish with natural rubber.

Bees upset many plans for cross pollination of fruit trees until B. F. Goodrich developed a "spider web" rubber spray as a blossom protector.

Have you had MALARIA?

...IF SO WATCH OUT

The medical profession knows that though a person may be cured of common malaria they may have it come back on them. So, if you are once more feeling tired, run down, have pains in back and legs, feel weak and billious, no appetite and nervous—though chills and fever haven't struck you yet, and you have common malaria—it doesn't pay to take any chances. Try a bottle of Oxidine. Oxidine is made to combat malaria, give you iron to help creation of red blood cells. If the first bottle doesn't satisfy you your money will be returned. Oxidine has been used for over 50 years. Get a bottle today at your drug store.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength.

Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a nation-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!

Allied Occupation of Germany Thankless Job

Methods for Restoring Normalcy to Reich Meet With Criticism From Smaller Liberated Nations of Europe.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, 1616 I Street N. W., Washington, D. C.

With the fanfare accompanying the first steps of the occupation of Japan now dying on the Pacific breezes, some hints of the heavy responsibilities of Uncle Sam's European problems begin to appear.

Already the small nations which were occupied by the Axis and whose peoples resisted the Nazi-Fascist yoke are being heard from in a rising chorus of complaint and criticism against the Allies.

Belgium and Holland are perhaps loudest in their charges of what they feel is discrimination against them in favor of their former enemy-neighbor, but voices are raised as far away as Greece and Yugoslavia, which say that Germany and Italy should not receive material assistance on the same basis as the once-occupied countries.

The charges from Holland are the most specific. The Netherlands government has presented claims for a share in both the external and internal assets of Germany as reparations. The note handed the Allies asks for immediate return of loot now within the occupied zones in Germany, which the Dutch claim is listed and identifiable. They say that parts of their country were stripped bare of capital and consumer goods; that some of the former, such as machinery, is now being used to the advantage of the Germans.

In addition to the formal protest, Col. J. C. A. Faure, deputy chief of staff of the Netherlands civil affairs administration, was quoted in London as saying that the Allied military governors were playing into German hands when they prevented the Dutch, Belgians and French from reclaiming immediately machinery and other property stolen from them by the Nazi armies.

He said that protests to SHAEF, while it existed, were fruitless "and when the new child (the British and American occupation organization) was born it was too young." He explained it was understandable that since the Allied commanders in their respective spheres have their hands full in creating order out of chaos in Germany, each wants to do a good job, and for that reason doesn't want to lose any material aid that will help. But that doesn't provide much comfort for the Dutch or Belgian farmer who looks across the frontier and sees a German peasant driving home a cow which he swears he knows is his by its crumpled horn and the spot on its rump. The same applies to the factory owner who is positive his property is turning wheels in Germany.

Army Aim: Speed Job

From sources in close touch with conditions in Germany I heard this example which pretty well echoes Dutch explanations but doesn't solve their problem. For instance: An Allied commander moves into a German town. One of the first things he wants is light and power. His men repair the power plant. Later it is claimed that the main dynamo was stolen from Holland. That is not the commander's affair. Lighting the town is. His job is to restore the place as nearly as possible to a self-supporting community.

But that is not the end, for the restoration of European economy as a whole is of vital importance and naturally those nations which suffered under the German heel feel they should have first call on the sinews of normality, especially when those sinews were torn from their body economic by Nazi hands.

On this score there have already been rumblings of complaint against the American occupation. Already the wheels of German factories are turning in the American zone. The purpose is to manufacture goods and provide services required to keep the occupation forces going and to supply the minimum needs of the community.

The Germans have to have shovels and hoes and rakes if they are to till their fields and cultivate their gardens in order to get enough food to live on. These tools, if made and sold, would be in competition with goods the Americans make. But there are not enough ships to carry a vast supply of such products across the Atlantic and besides America has a big waiting demand of her own. Therefore, in many cases German capital may be used to resuscitate German factories and Germany money will buy its products. The Americans are doing everything to facilitate this type of reconstruction (light industry and manufacture of household equipment). If necessary and they can do it, they will see that a missing shaft or flywheel is obtained somehow. They permit the Germans to combine partly damaged factories into one complete plant. They encourage reconversion of certain plants from wartime to civilian use. It so happens that of all the occupied zones the one which the Americans control is capable of creating most easily a balanced economy. It is a land of small towns and villages, most of which were not important enough to have been bombed. It is a land of cattle and of orchards, of fields and meadows. It is highly probable that with American organization to guide the people this area will be the first to regain a fairly normal life.

If we don't help the Germans, we'll be criticized for fumbling; the occupation will be made more difficult. If we do help, we will be under heavy criticism from the peoples of less fortunate areas and charged with treating the former enemy better than we treat our friends.

The British operate in a far less favorable area, for they have the bombed-out Ruhr on their hands and they control a territory whose existence depended on industries which no longer exist and which will not be permitted to exist in the future. Such factories as they can operate to make the community self-supporting may well be equipped in part with stolen machinery.

Russ Strip German Industry

The pattern of Russian occupation is quite different. The Russians know what they are doing in their zone. They are treating the "little people" with kindliness, assuring them that they need have no fear of oppression. Their apparent intention is to divide up the land and give the Germans a chance to win a livelihood from the soil, meanwhile giving them a thorough indoctrination in the advantages of the Soviet form of government. At the same time they are removing every movable piece of machinery to Russia.

Meanwhile, Poland will be allowed to scrape together such German agricultural equipment as she can salvage in East Prussia. Disease is rampant in Poland; there are shortages in all kinds of equipment. The Germans took most of the agricultural machinery; much of the rest was destroyed and the whole country wrecked. The other next-door neighbors have not even such an opportunity to recuperate their losses.

And so the Americans will probably bear the onus of helping the former enemy most of all, although their only intent is to carry out the program agreed upon by the Allies. America wants no loot. She does want all she can get in the way of important formulae; all she can learn of German methods; all of the ideas which can be adapted successfully to American life. Already some valuable scientific information has been obtained and in many cases the German scientists, with that disinterested attitude characteristic of their profession, are quite as willing to work in an American laboratory as they were in one run by the Nazis. America also wants to finish her occupation job and get out. A part of that job is to make the Germans self-supporting.

Thus, it is quite likely that another complaint will be raised that we are forming too friendly a bond with people of a nation the world came to detest so thoroughly.

In the years 1940-43, a total of 7,851 persons were killed in farm accidents in the U. S. Machinery caused 47 per cent of the deaths, livestock 20 per cent, and all other causes 33 per cent. Wisconsin was the most dangerous state for farm workers, with 502 killed in four years; and New York had 456 accidental farm deaths.

Book Shelves Built Around That Old Wash Stand Add to It a New Dignity

By Ruth Wyeth Spears

IF YOU have a wash stand of the bowl and pitcher era, here is a way to give it new dignity. Add open shelves at the ends with a new base and top for the whole piece, and you have smart, long lines for a chest to fill an important wall space. The shelves are added to the ends of the stand first with small angle irons. The end boards come next, then the top of plywood with a plain finishing piece around it. The new baseboard is then added and the piece is finished to match the woodwork of the room.

The sketch also shows a framed panel which helps to give the ensemble quite an air. It is an old picture frame without a glass with a handsome remnant of flowered chintz stretched over cardboard and then varnished to look like an old oil painting.

NOTE: This furniture remodeling idea is from Book 10 of the series of home-making booklets offered with these articles. Male Birds of Paradise But Eat and Court 'Ladies'

Birds of paradise, kings of the bird realm, are the laziest—as well as the most beautiful creatures of the species. Male birds, with their colorful features and plumage capes, lead an easy life in their native South Pacific islands, where all they ever do is eat and look nice for the "ladies."

Female birds of paradise aren't as beautiful as the males, but the boys still are greatly interested in winning their friendship. Elaborate courtship rituals often have ten males paying tribute to a single girl friend in the same ceremony.

To multiplied trials His multiplied peace.
His love has no limit, His grace has no measure,
His power no boundary known unto men;
For out of His infinite riches in Jesus
He giveth and giveth and giveth again.

—ANNIE JOHNSON FLINT.

Deeply we regret the serious illness of our very good friend, J. Mell Martin. "Mr. Mell" was rushed to Central Alabama Hospital Saturday afternoon and underwent an operation for appendicitis. Latest reports are that he is doing fair, and hopes are high for his recovery. The deep concern over his well being by the hundreds of his Chilton County friends and friends from all over the State attests to the popularity of this beloved citizen.

Bless my soul! The stork has already started coming in airplanes. When Dr. W. C. Golden returned last week from his vacation his Pilot's License was here awaiting him. Now at any time, don't be surprised when you call the doctor to see him floating in by parachute with his little black bag in one arm and a stork in the other. We understand Mrs. Golden was his first passenger under his Civilian Pilot's status.

These rumors — Now comes it a rumor that Clanton will have a new, modern cafe in the near future. We hear it will be in a new building between the Dixie and the New Wadesonian Theatre. And could be—Mrs. Lillian Robinson—will operate it.

What's more enjoyable than watching boys and girls hustling about on the morning of the first day of school? Guess its a sign of old-age creeping up on us, but nevertheless we get a big kick out of all the excitement and adventure of the first day of school. In fact, we wish that we could start all over again and could have started to school Tuesday morning with the "kids." Okey, okey, so we could stand a lot more schooling; don't get smart.

Mrs. Charlie Mims has purchased the New Dress Shop in the new building next to Popwell Pressing Shop. We don't know exactly what's happening there, but a lot of remodelling is going on and as soon as we get a chance to talk to Mrs. Mims we will give you the low-down on the whole business.

MR. T. V. EILAND

Mr. T. V. Eiland, age 53, died at his residence, Thorsby Route 1, September 5th. Funeral services were held September 6th at Cedar Grove Church at 2:00 p.m., conducted by Rev. Johnson, Rev. Crumpton and Rev. Nix; interment in adjoining cemetery.

He is survived by his wife; six sons — Cecil, Grady, Roy, Raymond of Thorsby, Marvin of Clanton, James of the U. S. Army; three sisters—Mrs. Fannie Mae, Myrtle and Mae Francis, all of Thorsby; three brothers—G. N. Eiland of Clanton, Felix of Thorsby, F. M. of Underwood, Ala.; six sisters — Mrs. Julie Littlejohn Clanton, Mrs. Francis Riggins, Birmingham, Mrs. Julisa Riggins of Birmingham, Mrs. Pardelia Hayes of Birmingham, Mrs. Callie Price of Birmingham, Mrs. Jinnie Riggins of Pensacola, Fla.

Pallbearers: C. W. Riggins, J. B. Riggins, A. G. Littlejohn, Ernest Eiland and Mack Eiland.

ISABELLA

Bro. Stuckey brought two very inspiring messages to a good crowd Sunday and Sunday night at Mulberry.

Baptismal service was held for the new candidate of Mulberry Sunday afternoon at 3:00 p.m.

The revival closed at Isabella Methodist Church last Friday night, with Bro. William Prickard bringing very inspiring messages for the entire week, day and night.

We are glad to welcome Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Yielding, Katerna and K. Lemore as new members.

The W.M.S. met at the church Wednesday afternoon with 10 present. The meeting was called to order by the President. Mrs. R. W. Stuckey opened by singing, "Yield Not to temptation." Regular business session was held. We voted to change our monthly meeting of the W.M.S. to 7:00 p.m. on the first Wednesday of each month, instead of 1:30 p.m., in order that the women who are teaching and working during the day away from home will be able to attend the meetings.

The officers of the W.M.S. was elected for 1946 as follows: Mrs. R. W. Stuckey, President; Mrs. E. S. Jones, first Vice-President; Mrs. L. S. Calfee, second Vice-President; Mrs C. C. Williams, third Vice-President; Mrs. E. C. Lecroy, Secretary-Treasurer; Mrs. W. T. Tucker, Mission Study Chairman; Mrs. W. T. White, Literature Chairman; Mrs. Casey Cummings, Stewardship Chairman; Mrs. Desale Roper, Community Mission Chairman; Mrs. John Bryant, White Cross Chairman, Mrs. J. H. Wells, Publicity Chairman.

Program was given from the Commission by several members, with Mrs. W. T. Tucker in charge. Dismissed with prayer.

Fred L. Veasey, who has just returned from overseas duty, is spending his leave here with his mother Mrs. Bell Veasey and his wife at Stanton.

R. E. Manning of Jacksonville, Fla., is spending his vacation here with his mother, Mrs. D. O. Manning.

Arnold Bryant, who has been working in Illinois, is here spending some time with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Bryant.

Mrs. Bessie Conway, who has been in Central Alabama Hospital, is at home and doing very well at present.

Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Farmer and children of Titus spent Sunday with her mother, Mrs. D. O. Manning.

Miss Betty and Gale Roebuck of Mobile visited relatives and friends here last week.

Our school opened Tuesday with a large attendance at Isabella, with three new teachers, R. L. Yielding Miss Sybil Langston and Miss Nell Sessions.

UNITED CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, THORSBY

Church School at 9:45; morning worship, 11:00. Subject of sermon: "The New State"; text, "All Things Are Become New." Evening worship, 7:30.

At eight o'clock the young people and adults will meet in separate discussion groups using the material in the Highroad.

MOUNTAIN SPRINGS CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

A series of services will be held this next week, beginning Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. Sunday night and each night following the service will begin at eight o'clock. Everyone is invited to come and take part. There will be special music, Bible teaching and preaching.

POST-WAR FLYING IN YOUR HOME TOWN

By C. C. CAMPBELL, Member, Aviation Writers Association, Washington, D. C.

National Groups Aid in Airpark Planning

The day is not far off when a town that does not possess community landing facilities will be as much out of the American scene as would be a town without roads leading to other sections.

As personal flying and feeder airline transportation become a definite and important feature of our everyday lives, much of the community activity will be centered around the airpark. For this reason, progressive town officials look forward to building an air service installation that will be attractive, convenient, and economic, as well as being capable of future expansion.

Naturally few citizens know much about the construction of an airpark, so seek expert advice. Fortunately, this is easily available. Both the Government and several non-profit aviation organizations are ready with information and advice from the early decision to have an airpark through all the stages of selecting a suitable site and arranging for runways and buildings.

The usual community will find that its State Capitol offers a wealth of information. Most states have aviation commissions and boards functioning for this very reason. State officials know the local conditions and geography, are aware of what the neighboring towns are planning, and usually have data on the number of feeder or area airlines contemplated and lists of prospective owners of personal planes.

At Washington, the Civil Aeronautics Administration has an airport division which will supply diagrams and working plans for air landing facilities of every description. Regional offices of the Civil Aeronautics Administration work closely with State aviation executives.

Various privately operated aviation organizations can provide much salient information. For instance, the National Aeronautic Association is helping communities to plan their air future and aiding them to gain their position on the "Main Line." More than 40 years of accumulated knowledge on aviation, and particularly on the construction of air facilities, is available. Many communities which have decided to establish airparks or other types of landing facilities have formed their own community chapters of the National Aeronautic Association.

Two other groups ready and willing to plan and work with town aviation planning organizations in this effort are the National Aviation Trades Association, located at Kansas City, Missouri, and the Personal Aircraft Council of the Aircraft Industries Association of America at Washington, D. C.

These organizations have endorsed the model airpark at Eldon, Missouri, and are doing pioneer work among other communities in all parts of the country.

The Joint Airport Users Conference, designed by the National Aeronautic Association as a discussion and study group, meets in Washington. Conference membership includes such organizations as the American Road Builders Association, the American Public Works Association, the Association of Land Grant Colleges and Universities, the American Association of Nurserymen, and many other technical and professional groups with an interest in airport planning, construction, and use.

This is the eighth of a series of articles on post-war flying and its effect on community life. The final article, "Local Flying to Aid American Air Power" will appear in an early issue.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT!

There will be a special meeting of the Clanton Grammar School P.-T. A. on Tuesday, September 25th, at 3:30 o'clock.

At this meeting a report of the Executive Committee will be given concerning their accomplishments during the Summer. This report will be of interest to every P.-T. A. member and everyone is urged to be present.

The officers for the coming year are as follows:

President, Mrs. George Jester.

Vice President, Mrs. Thera Martin.

Secretary, to be elected at this meeting.

Treasurer and Membership, Mrs. Tom Kemp.

Social Chairman, Mrs. John Deramus.

Room Representative, Mrs. W. D Hocutt.

Literature and Publicity, Mrs. R. M. Tucker.

Program Chairman, Mrs. Curry Thomas.

Legislative Committee Chairman Mrs. Omar Reynolds.

Plan to attend this meeting and help your P.-T. A. President to start off her year's work with your full co-operation.

SOIL CONSERVATION NEWS

Some of the cooperators with the North Central Soil Conservation District have planted Crimson Clover and Rye Grass to be used for winter grazing. According to Experiment Station results and what farmers have found out, Crimson Clover and Rye Grass is the best temporary winter grazing crop. If the land to be planted has been fallowed during the Summer and the seed planted at the right time about eight months of grazing can be expected from this crop. Because the Rye Grass forms a sod, this crop can be grazed more in wet weather than other grazing crops. If it is impossible to plant this crop this time, why not do a little planning and set aside a field to be used for winter grazing and plant Rye Grass and Crimson Clover next year. Every farm needs some winter grazing.

For the cooperators who are planning to do some terracing this Fall or who have some terraces to be checked, see or let your soil conservationist know so that he can be able to do this work when you are ready. Terraces can help us conserve our soil when they are right, and they can wash our soil away very fast when they are wrong.

More burlap bags are on the way for potatoes, feed and other farm commodities. This is the result of a recent additional allocation of 50 million yards by the War Production Board. Food industries requiring cotton bags also can expect more supplies for harvesting the crop and marketing essential food commodities.

While cotton farmers this year will harvest their smallest cotton crop of the past 60 years, the indicated average yield of 269.7 pounds lint per acre is 39 pounds above average. This prospective yield was exceeded only in 1944, 1942 and 1937.

INFORMATION TO CHURCHES

Any Missionary Baptist Church in Unity or Chilton Association without a pastor for the coming year who wishes any information concerning the preachers who do not have full time work, may secure same by getting in touch with the committee elected by the pastors' Conference, who are:

Rev. M. Lockhart, Clanton, Ala., Route 5.

Rev. J. I. Bice, Clanton, Ala., Route 3.

LOCAL MAN UMPIRES BASE BALL PLAYS ON GUAM

BUNK H. CLARK

Bunk H. Clark, shipfitter, first class, Clanton, does his umpiring so well he can call plays during a baseball game on Guam, where he is on duty with a Seabee pontoon barge and causeway battalion. He umpired games at Seabee camps in the States and [illegible] a championship game in North Africa in 1943 before going to the Pacific.

He entered the Navy in January 1943.

Sgt. Cleveland Driver has returned from overseas where he spent 13 months in the European Theatre of Operations. He arrived in Evergreen, Ala., last Wednesday, where he joined his wife, the former Janie Beth Johnson. They came to Clanton Saturday to spend a few days with relatives and friends during his delay en route. Sgt. Driver expects to receive a furlough soon.

Pfc. Carl Martin has returned from the European Theatre of Operations after spending some time there. He is now spending a 30-day furlough here with his wife and relatives.

Harvey M. (Bucky) Armstrong, MM 3-C, has returned from overseas where he spent 14 months in the European Theatre of Operations.

Bucky served with the Transportations Corps through France, Belgium, Holland and Germany.

He is spending leave with his family and friends in Siluria and Birmingham.

Recently discharged from the United States Army was ex-Cpl. Louis Douglas Cook, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Cook of Maplesville, Ala. Cpl. Cook tells of many interesting experiences —but I think I am safe in saying that he is one guy among thousands of others, who is "tickled pink" to be in civvies again.

Cpl. James Oaks returned last week from the European Theatre of Operations where he served two years. He is spending a 30-day furlough with his mother, Mrs. Gertrude Oaks, Route One, Clanton, Ala.

Pfc. C. P. Jones left Thursday for Foster General Hospital in Jackson Miss., where he will receive further medical attention after spending a 30-day furlough with his parents in the Isabella Community. C. P. expects to receive an honorable discharge from the Army soon.

CANE CREEK

Sunday School lessons were well prepared last Sunday. The story of Joseph is intersting for we have a case in our community almost like Joseph. The lesson for September [illegible] and September 16, is like the story of the adopted child, Robert Rea Morris Little. The Bible is fulfilled here on [illegible] people.

[illegible] Mrs. Lon Robinson is at [illegible] serving in the service overseas for two or more years. His brother, Pvt. Jack Robinson, was a prisoner of Germany. He has also been home some time. We are glad and welcome all the boys home.

Mr. and Mrs. Bud Williamson of Selma were visiting at Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Giles last Sunday.

Mrs. Bettie Williamson has been on the sick list but is improving now.

Mrs. Rennie Robinson is improving nicely.

Mr. Mann Mims spent last week with Mr. loyd Bailey and family.

Mrs. Ida Henson and Mrs. [illegible] and Mrs. Hazel [illegible] and [illegible] visited at P. C. Weldon's and Paul Parrish's last Sunday.

Come to church next Sunday and feel welcome.

MISS BETTY BROWN'S WEDDING PLANS

Miss Betty Brown [illegible] Miss Alpha Brown of Prattville announces plans for her marriage to A. W. Bentley [illegible] Mr. and Mrs. George W. Martin [illegible] Clanton [illegible] The wedding will take place Sunday afternoon, September 30, at 5:00 o'clock in the Clanton Methodist Church with Dr. Haun officiating. Nuptial music by Congregational Church Choir will be furnished by Mrs. B. N. Rose, Jr., organist, and Miss Willodean Minor, vocalist.

Miss Marjorie Bentley will be maid of honor. Bridesmaids will be: Misses Sara Dean Smith and Melba Studdard of Clanton, Billie Ann Parrish and Mary Evelyn Vines of Thorsby.

The bride will be given in marriage by her uncle, Mr. E. N. Bentley.

Norman Harris of Emory University School of Dentistry, will be best man and the ushers will include Pfc. William Hicks of Camp Gordon, Johnson, Fla., Ralph Parker and Ed Barham of Birmingham and Matthew Thomaston of Clanton.

Misses Jane Barham of Birmingham and Peggy Murrah of Clanton will light the candles.

Sandra Mims and Sara Elizabeth Mims will be flower girls. The ringbearers will be Robbie Hagan and Rebecca Bentley.

A reception at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. N. Bentley will follow the ceremony.

During the postwar period Alabama farmers want an opportunity to produce, to sell at parity prices, to conserve their soil, to use machinery and labor, to use money wisely, to have better health facilities and services and to enjoy a good standard of living.

Pointing out that we have a small crop of cotton this year, J. T. Belue, cotton specialist of the extension service, says that farmers should try to get the most out of what we have. Pick the cotton clean to get high grades and take only dry cotton to the gin.

STATE OF ALABAMA

A PROCLAMATION

BY THE GOVERNOR

WHEREAS, the Legislature of Alabama, at the Regular Session 1945, ordered an election to be held by the qualified electors of the State of Alabama upon a certain proposed amendment to the Constitution of Alabama, which said amendment is herein set out, and ordered that said election be held on the first Tuesday following the expiration of three months after the final adjournment of the regular session of the 1945 Legislature; and

WHEREAS, the first Tuesday following the expiration of three months after the final adjournment of the regular session of the 1945 Legislature will be and occur on Tuesday, October 2, 1945; and

WHEREAS, notice of such election, together with the proposed amendment is required by law, and by the provisions of the Act submitting the amendment, to be given by a proclamation of the Governor to be published in each county in the State of Alabama once a week for four successive weeks next preceding the said 2nd day of October:

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Chauncey Sparks, as Governor of the State of Alabama, do hereby give notice, direct and proclaim that on Tuesday, the 2nd day of October, 1945, an election will be held at the several polling places within the State of Alabama, in the manner and form provided by law, upon the following proposed amendment to the Constitution of the State of Alabama of 1901:

"Article XXII. The Legislature shall have the power to levy and collect taxes for state purposes on net incomes from whatever source derived within this state, including the net incomes derived from salaries, fees and compensation paid from the state, county, municipality, and any agency or creature thereof, for the calendar year, 1933, and thereafter, and to designate and define the incomes to be taxed and to fix the rates of taxes provided that the rate shall not exceed 5 per cent nor 3 per cent on corporations. Income shall not be deemed property for purposes of ad valorem taxes. From net income an exemption of not less than fifteen hundred dollars ($1,500.00) shall be allowed to unmarried persons and an exemption of not less than three thousand dollars ($3,000.00) shall be allowed to the head of a family, provided that only one exemption shall be allowed to husband and wife where they are living together and make separate returns for income tax. An exemption of not less than three hundred dollars ($300.00) shall be allowed for each dependent member of the family of an income tax payer under the age of 18 years. Such tax must be levied upon the salaries, income, fees, or other compensation of state, county and municipal officers and employees, on the same basis as such income taxes are levied upon other persons. The proceeds of such tax, after provision has been made for the payment of administrative expenses and the next two maturing installments of interest on the warrant refunding bonds issued to fund the floating debt existing October 1, 1932, must be used only in the manner and the order following: 1) to create a trust fund for the payment of the principal of all outstanding warrant refunding bonds issued under the authority of Act No. 14, approved February 5, 1935, and Act No. 50, approved February 8, 1935, to fund the floating debt existing October 1, 1932; 2) to become a part of and to supplement the sinking fund heretofore created for the payment of the "Old Bonded Debt", as evidenced by Class A Renewal Bonds, Class C Renewal Bonds, and Funding Renewal Bonds, to the extent that the fund, which hereafter shall be an irrevocable trust fund, when invested and the earnings thereon calculated to the maturities of the outstanding bonds, will equal the principal of the unpaid debt; 3) to replace revenues lost to the several funds by reason of exemption of homesteads from the state ad valorem tax; 4) the residue shall be paid into in the state treasury. The corpus of any fund hereby created, and the income from the trust fund for the payment of the "Old Bonded Debt", may be invested by the Governor in the bonds or other obligations of the United States or the State of Alabama. Any earnings on the investment of the trust fund for the payment of the "Old Bonded Debt" shall be payable into and become a part of the fund, and all earnings and income from the investment of the trust fund for the payment of warrant refunding bonds shall be deposited with and become a part of the fund into which the proceeds of the income tax are paid. After a sufficient amount is accumulated in any fund to equal the principal of the outstanding bonds against the payment of which the fund is created, (except as to interest which shall be an annual charge or may be included in the trust fund) the debt shall be considered paid. All laws relating to the income tax, not in conflict herewith and valid on the date of the ratification of this amendment, are hereby validated and confirmed. The provisions hereof with respect to the creation of funds and the use thereof are declared to be self-executing."

I furtner direct and proclaim that notice of this election upon Tuesday, the 2nd day of October, 1945, upon the above set forth amendment to the Constitution of the State of Alabama of 1901, be given by publishing the same once a week for four successive weeks next preceding Tuesday the 2nd day of October, 1945, in each county in the State of Alabama in a newspaper published in said county.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and have caused the Great Seal of the State of Alabama to be affixed by the Secretary of State at the Capitol in the City of Montgomery, on this the 26th day of July, 1945.

Chauncey Sparks.
GOVERNOR.

MORAL ECHOES

Rev. D. W. Haskew, D.D.

Readers Digest tells us of a man in Springfield, Ill., who tried to raise a victory garden, but his neighbor's chickens scratched up all of the seed that he planted. Finally he came home one night with several neatly lettered shipping tags. Then he punched holes through the kernels of corn and with a fine thread he attached the grains of corn to the tags. These were scattered in his victory garden. Bright and early the next morning his neighbor's chickens were in his garden picking up the scattered corn. When they returned home a little later their owner saw each one carrying a sign fluttering from his and her bill. Catching an old hen he read the sign carried and this is what it said, "I have been a bad bird, please keep me at home before I get killed." I rather think that if some of these roving human birds were to come home with a printed sign on them as to where they had been and what they had been doing, there would be a better understanding among people.

Have you ever stopped to think of the altruism of nature? The flower does not live for itself. On the tree hangs the apple blossom for a day, and then the petals fall to earth. They die that the fruit may grow. The fruit guards the stone, or seed until there is maturity and then it perishes. The seed gives up it's life that another tree may live and grow. What a glorious parable is this life in nature. Every tree in the orchard, every grain stalk in the corn field, every dusty weed by the roadside, living for others and willing to die that others might live. Self preservation is no longer the first law of nature. The first law seems to be preparation for the life that is coming. We should make it our first duty to prepare for the life that follows and is a part of our life. Live for others.

One day I battered a wasp that kept buzzing around my head and fell on the window sill as if dead. In a few moments another wasp was there to examine and treat the wounded companion. Under the treatment administered the injured wasp revived and then it was carried home by it's friend. This is one of many cases where I have witnessed the altruistic spirit among things that are living below the level of man. How much more should intelligent man exercise the altruistic spirit toward his fellowman.

ALABAMA FARMERS ARE PLANTING MORE LEGUMES

Records reveal that Alabama farmers are planting more winter legumes than ever before.

In reporting large plantings this year, J. C. Lowery, API agricultural extension agronomist, values the returns from these crops at $20,000,000.

"Records of demonstrations throughout the state for many years show that farmers who include winter legumes in their rotations make 30 to 50 bushels of corn per acre," he says. "The highest yields of corn, cotton and other crops are made through use of winter legumes on every acre possible and application of high rates of commercial fertilizers."

Popularity of winter legumes in Alabama is shown by the following figures:

1918 — 1,535.
1925 — 526,905.
1928 — 1,127,096.
1932 — 5,725,661.
1936 — 8,015,385.
1940 — 22,413,312.
1943 — 19,883,215.
1944 — 27,638,422.

Winter legumes planted in Alabama are: Austrian peas, vetches, crimson clover, blue lupines and Caley peas. About 30 per cent of the plantings are from home-grown seed.

The use of winter legumes for soil improvement has been advocated by the Extension Service for more than 25 years based on research of the Experiment Station.

DDT DETRIMENTAL TO FISH AND WILDLIFE

The new insecticide, DDT, can be very detrimental to fish and wildlife, advises Allen M. Pearson, API extension specialist in fish and wildlife marketing.

In writing to all county and assistant county agents he encloses information received from the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service in which it is stated that "fishes and other aquatic life are highly susceptible to DDT poisoning."

The statement further reveals that the use of DDT in fly and mosquito control along beaches and on fish ponds involves special dangers. I recent sprayings of a central New Jersey beach area where DDT was applied at the rate of ½ pound per acre, irregular wind conditions caused much of the insecticide to fall on the adjacent bay. Soon afterward, more than 75,000 young fish, mostly menhaden, mullet, killies, and other shore fishes were washed up dead along the five-mile beach, presumably killed by the DDT. Fishermen later reported dead sluggish crabs along the beach. Those captured soon died and were unfit for sale.

Research also has shown that fresh water life is as readily affected by DDT. Fishes, tadpoles, crayfish, frogs, salamanders and many water insects are eaily killed by DDT.

Spraying of the Paxutent River bottom lands with 2 pounds of DDT per acre killed bluegills and other fishes planted in the stream for experimental study. A pond 150 yards from the sprayed area was reached and enough DDT drift all the sunfish in it. When spraying a home in Lowndes County, a little of the DDT got into a goldfish bowl. Although the fish were removed immediately and fresh water added, the goldfish were dead within a very short time.

FACTS
about the
INCOME TAX AMENDMENT
to be voted on October 2

Two questions only will be decided by the outcome of the vote October 2 on the Income Tax Amendment:

1 "SHALL THE OLD BONDED DEBT (CARPET BAG BONDS) BE PAID FROM THE PRESENT SURPLUS?"

2 "WHAT SHALL BE DONE WITH FUTURE REVENUES FROM THE STATE INCOME TAX, AMOUNTING TO ABOUT $6,500,000 YEARLY?"

A "YES" Vote for the Amendment Will Do These Things That Benefit All Citizens of Alabama

1 Continue present Homestead Exemptions and lock them into the State Constitution, where they can't be repealed without a vote of the people.

2 Pay the State's old $8,500,000 Carpet-Bag debt that has been running for 107 years at a total cost in interest of $60,000,000 — for which the State has received nothing back.

3 Give our children better educational advantages — and our teachers a deserved raise in pay. $1,750,000 goes for this.

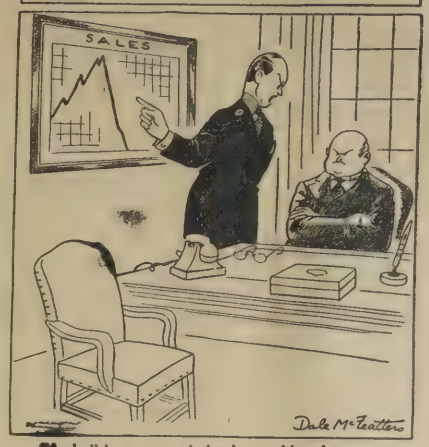
4 Provide an increase of $1,750,000 to State Welfare — for Old Age Assistance, family relief, etc. This will be nearly doubled by Federal matching, making the total sum approximately $3,000,000.

5 Permit better care of our insane, increase Public Health Service — vitally important to every Alabama family.

A "NO" Vote on the Amendment Means

That future income tax revenues will pile up and lie idle while State needs keep on growing, until the next legislature decides what to do with them.

More Ad Valorem Tax Reductions Will Give No Benefit to Average Citizen



If two years hence, the legislature should decide to use income tax revenues to extend homestead exemptions, this won't help the average citizen—the small property owner, the small farmer. Only big property-owners could benefit. Why? Because more than 95% of all farm home owners and almost 90% of city home owners assess their homesteads at less than the $2,000 homestead exemption now allowed. The exemption applies only to the State (65c) tax, not to county or district millages.

Let's get the benefits of taxes we now pay. Let's don't put off until tomorrow what should be done today. The voters passed the income tax—they have every right to amend it and order those benefits the "Yes" votes will bring.

SAYS SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE:

Despite Victory Used Fat Saving Must Go On!

Every woman in America should know that our country continues to face a serious fat shortage. And victory over Japan won't solve the problem immediately. We must keep on saving used fats in our kitchens!

If you have any thought that saving used fats is one of those wartime chores we can drop, now that Victory is here, please consider these facts and tell them to your neighbors.

America still needs salvaged fats. Not even at the peak of our war effort, when fats were required for munitions of shells and bombs and medicines, in addition to the ever-present need for soap, were our needs for salvaging fat greater than now. Our stocks have been drained by four long years of war, and there isn't enough on hand to meet all requirements.

Don't let "Victory psychology" blind you to this national need! If housewives stop saving fats now, the shortage will become even more critical.

Don't let a single drop of used fats go to waste! Little trimmings of fat left on plates, even the skimmings of soups and gravies are important. It is the consistent saving of these small amounts that counts.

Don't turn in fats that can be re-used! But some fats, such as those rendered from lamb and mutton, are not suitable for re-use. Put them immediately in the red-ware can. And, with other fats, after you've got all cooking good out of them, there is always a little left. No matter how little it is, save it.

Your butcher will still give you 4c and 2 red points for every pound you turn in. Save consistently — save every drop you can — every day — until Uncle Sam says the job is done.

SECRETARY OUTLINES BIG COTTON PROBLEMS

"In the long run, the American farmer has to produce more efficiently and at a lower cost to stay in the market against his competitors at home and abroad," says Clinton P. Anderson, Secretary of Agriculture.

Among the post war cotton problems mentioned by the Secretary were an above-normal carry-over, competition from other fibers, and increased mechanization which will boost total output.

Encouraging factors in the picture were described as:

1. Greater agreement, respect and understanding among the world's leaders.
2. A new determination to achieve full employment.
3. A continuation and an extension of new and wiser land uses, with more diversified farming, in the South.
4. Greater industrial development in the South.
5. New uses for cotton.
6. Government aids in helping exporters compete in the world cotton market, and in maintaining [illegible] marketing in the industry.

COAL IN IOWA

Ranking second to agriculture in Iowa's resources, coal has been mined for 95 years. Twenty-two counties produce it. From 3½ million tons in 1880, it increased to 9 million in the peak year of 1917. In 1910, 297 mines employed 18,000 men. Recently the output has dropped to 3 million tons but with peace there is a good indication that this quantity will increase. The state's industries need this fuel and its mining operations will contribute to the Nation's wealth behind War Bonds. U. S. Treasury Department

FRUITS OF GOOD EARTH

Orange consumers have been familiar with California's fruit for years but few realize that the crop of 1940 was valued at 48 millions while that of 1944 brought 154 millions, an increase of 224 percent. Potato growers tripled their output and peaches jumped from a 10 million dollar harvest to 41½ millions. Small crops like prunes and apricots had several hundred percent increase. For years California soil will help feed the world and add to the Nation's wealth behind War Bonds. U. S. Treasury Department

RETURNED SOLDIERS TO COMPLETE EDUCATION

A program to enable returning soldiers to complete high school education is being worked out by the State Department of Education in cooperation with local school authorities, the Veterans Administration and Selective Service. Meetings at Mobile, Monroeville, Birmingham and Cullman, the last of these at Cullman September 12, have been devoted to working out plans. These four places have been selected to start the high school completion program, which is expected to be applied all over the State.

That the war just ended was a young man's war is indicated by the large number of Alabamians who quit high school to fight. Fred Ingram, who has been assigned by the State Department of Education to give full time to veterans education, estimates that at least 10,000 Alabamians went from high school to the armed forces. The program now being pushed will provide not only for those who quit high school for military duty, but for any other veterans who did not complete high school, and who now wish to do so.

Superintendent E. B. Norton said that where there are enough veterans in a community, it is planned to put them in separate classes, as it is figured that men who have been killing Japs and Germans are more mature than the ordinary high school boy. The educational program will be speeded up and adapted to their needs. For example classes may be held at special hours to enable veterans to work and at the same time go to school to win the coveted high school diploma.

PREPARED FOR THE FUTURE

Visiting with Mr. and Mrs. Mel Cox at their home on Route One, Montevallo, will be an experience long remembered. Rarely will any couple be found with more zest for living and a deeper appreciation for farm life.

A couple well past middle age with their only two children married and moved away, they are operating a 160-acre farm without any hired help or tenant. Mr. and Mrs. Cox bought their farm and moved to it in 1928 after years of living in a mining town. Mr. Cox worked in the mine while Mrs. Cox ran a boarding house. They bought their farm for a home in their old age, and have refused to grow old as the years slip by. They are as keenly interested in new developments and improved farm practices as any young couple just starting out on their own.

During the depression years' low prices, doctor bills and bad crop years caused the Coxes to need money to operate their farm. They had security in two mules and several cows, but needed financing over a longer period than one year in order to make some improvements on their place. Mr. Cox knew the Farm Security Administration would finance a man and let him repay his loan over a period of from one to five years, thus allowing him to build up his land into better pastures and more productive crop acres, and increase his livestock while repaying his loan. This also would give a farmer a little surplus money every Fall to make needed improvements to buildings, fences, etc.

"We needed the help of the FSA," Mrs. Cox said, "We not only needed help from the standpoint of a loan, but we needed the assistance the FSA Supervisors gave us in practical knowledge about improving our farming methods." "They advised us about varieties of seeds, better ways of planting, seeding and fertilizing pastures and on better care of livestock—just to mention a few things." They also taught me how to use a pressure cooker and to can. I average canning 300 quarts for the two of us each year and we have plenty of dried fruits and vegetables. We also raise our meat and lard, and have something green in our garden the year around."

Both Mr. and Mrs. Cox work in the fields and look after their small herd of cattle. They have fourteen half white-face cows and five calves They are breeding to a registered white face bull and are breeding up a better grade of cattle each year.

"We want to get entirely away from cotton," they said, "and just raise beef cattle and feed. This year we have only five acres in cotton, 15 acres in corn and beside our little truck patches, we are cutting hay for feed. We have 80 acres in pasture which we are improving as we can with good seed and fertilizer. We can pay out of debt this year and from now on we believe our cows will take care of us."

This couple leaves you with the feeling that they have what they want: not a lot of money or rich possessions, but satisfaction and happiness derived from doing things themselves and seeing the fruits of their labor yielding forth in rich crops, good cattle, plenty of good food and a home free from debt.

Plans have been made for some 4,000 Alabama feeder cattle to be sold at five feeder sales to be held in late September. The schedule of sales is as follows: Union Springs, Monday, September 24; Montgomery, Tuesday, September 25; Demopolis, Wednesday, September 26; Selma, Thursday, September 27; and Epes, Friday, September 28. Each sale starts at 12:00 noon.

ABOUT THE

INCOME TAX DIVERSION

AMENDMENT

VOTE NO OCTOBER 2

Where Will The Money Go?
(The $6,500,000 Question)

If the Constitution stays like it is, everybody knows where the money brought in by the State Income Tax will go. It will be used to reduce your property taxes. It cannot be used for anything else. You've got your hands on the $6,500,000 a year now,

BUT—

If the Constitution is amended to divert that money into the state treasury, you may as well kiss it goodbye and forget all about the tax relief you were promised on your home, farm, automobile and other property, for which you have been patiently waiting for 12 long years.

Schools and other essential services might get some of it—but there is absolutely no assurance that they would get a dime. A spendthrift legislature could blow it on the first gang of tax squanderers that came along. So, keep your hands on your money.

Vote "NO" October 2

Don't Let 'Em Hike The Rate

The Constitution says the income tax rate in Alabama shall not be higher than 5 per cent. The legislative act under which it is collected starts the rate off at 1½ per cent on the first $1,000 of taxable income and increases it gradually so that the maximum 5 per cent is collected only on incomes in excess of $5,000. BUT—

There is nothing in the Constitution to prevent passage of a bill imposing a flat 5 per cent tax on all income. So far there hasn't been much pressure to raise the rate, but the minute the income tax revenue is placed in reach of the tax-eaters, LOOK OUT! Their next step will be a tremendous drive to boost the rate as high as the law allows. That is just as certain as death and taxes—and don't you forget it when you vote October 2!

Vote "NO" October 2

It's Your Money, Keep It

Now that the State's floating debt has been paid, Purpose No. 1 for which the Income Tax was adopted has been fulfilled. Purpose No. 2, written into the Constitution, is to reduce property taxes. This has not been fulfilled, and the tax-eating politicians are now trying to snatch your tax relief from you. Don't let them do it.

And don't be deceived by the propaganda of the professional political spenders. Every property owner in Alabama is a beneficiary under Purpose No. 2 and as such has a joint equity in the revenue produced by the Income Tax. If you are a property owner, it's your money they are trying to grab. Don't let 'em play you for a sucker; keep your money; get the tax relief you were solemnly promised.

The Booby Trap

The tax-eaters tell you they want these tax relief millions diverted in the name of education. Apparently they think the people of Alabama are plain saps. What are the facts?

Nowhere in the diversion amendment they ask you to approve is there any reference to education. There is no assurance that our schools would ever see a copper cent of the money.

A determined effort was made in the 1945 Legislature to submit a constitutional amendment earmarked this money for education, but the advocates of diversion defeated it. Obviously, they have other plans for using the money—and they haven't told you what those plans are!

False Claims

On its very face, the claim that public education will suffer if this diversion amendment fails of ratification is fraudulent.

The 1945 Legislature gave the schools substantially the full amount they requested for the next two years—in absolute appropriations which guarantee increased funds of at least $6,850,000 a year, regardless of the outcome of this proposed diversion amendment.

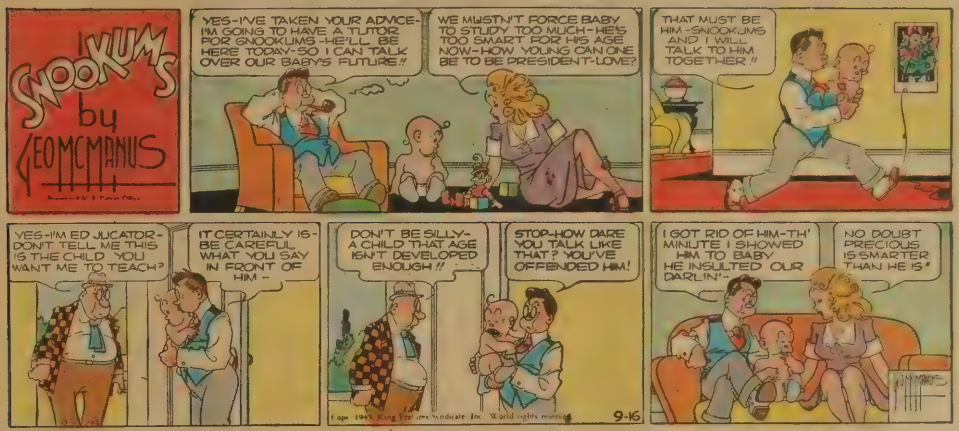
The plain fact is that the tax-eaters are once again trying to hide behind the schools and cry "education" to promote their own selfish designs, just as they have often done in the past. Don't let 'em fool you this time.

Every school teacher in Alabama has been definitely assured a substantial and much-deserved salary increase, irrespective of what happens to this amendment. And that increase was made possible through the efforts of legislators who are opposing this diversion amendment, not through the efforts of the spending politicians who are trying to jam the amendment down your throats.

Let's Hold The Line

Defeat of this amendment will protect your home, farm and other property and strike a real blow for the maintenance of sound government in Alabama.

If you surrender to the tax-eaters and ratify this amendment you give them a green light for a great spending orgy in the post-war period—a period during which the need for sane governmental administration and strict economy may be more urgent than ever.



Let's keep the Faith. Let's hold the line.

FARMERS TOLD HOW TO CONTROL CATTLE LICE

"Cattle lice are most prevalent during the late winter and early Spring months," declare C. E. Teague, API Extension Specialist, in advising that young stock be inspected at regular intervals to detect the presence of lice when they first appear and before much harm is done.

"The itching sensation resulting from the presence of lice causes calves to rub against trees, posts or other objects, and the hair often comes off in patches around the tail, head and on the neck withers," he says.

There are several recommended treatments for the control of lice. The treatment used may be determined by the number of cattle to be treated, the weather temperature and other factors. Dipping is most practical where there are several animals, and the weather is warm.

The most common treatment, especially during late winter months when most cattle need treatment, is to clip the hair along the top of the animal from the tail setting to the head, and apply lice powder. Derris powder, same as used on garden insects, has been found to be very effective in the control of lice. The powder should be dusted along the back and around the head and neck, then rubbed in good so as to penetrate to the skin. A second application should be made in about 15 days to kill any lice that have hatched out since the previous treatment.

POST-WAR FLYING IN YOUR HOME TOWN

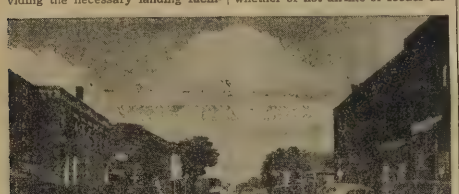
By C. C. CAMPBELL, Member, Aviation Writers Association, Washington, D. C.

Determining Local Needs

Every community, sooner or later, will need an airpark or other landing facility for airplanes. Progressive communities, eager to be in the vanguard, are making their plans now. But many towns and neighborhoods are baffled as to how they should proceed.

This confusion is natural, for the construction of landing facilities is quite a new venture in most small towns. Heretofore, apart from "cow pasture airports," air terminals and fields were felt to be part of big city development.

Personal flying is going to change all that. Soon your neighbor and mine will own his own plane. He will expect that his community be as progressive as others in providing the necessary landing facilities. Local businessmen will not want to see their town lag behind other communities in initiating air traffic from other sections.



In developing a plan for community airparks it is only logical first to determine the need. This cannot be judged by the present situation. Planners must look ahead and try to arrive at an estimate of what the community's air requirements will be a few years hence. While this might seem difficult, common sense should indicate most of the possibilities.

First, for instance, is a determination of the population and scope of the area to be served. In large cities this may be a neighborhood. In smaller communities a town's airpark may not only be a local public improvement, it may also serve as the aviation center for miles around. Thus a community's present position as a trading center might be used as a guide to what it could be when personal flying expands that area by many miles.

Another factor would be a checkup of present owners of airplanes and those who plan to buy one. Recent surveys showed that in large cities a considerable percentage of families in financial position to buy a plane, intended to do so. It is probable that the same ratio would apply to smaller communities. It might even be larger because personal flying will offer much more to the resident of a small town or rural section. A questionnaire sent to all residents in town and in the surrounding area should give a fairly good idea of how many planes will be locally owned.

The geographic location of a community and its relation to surrounding cities is important in judging whether or not airline or feeder airline services might be encouraged by suitable facilities. Businessmen can estimate the possible volume of mail and express shipments by air. Potential tourist and recreational trade can be judged by the community's assets in that particular and their possible development when air travel would bring many more people to enjoy them. Local hotel registers will reveal the number of businessmen from other points whose repeated visits might indicate the amount of commercial air travel to be expected.

It is an interesting and instructive proceeding to find out what one's own community has to offer as an air center, it is pointed out by the Personal Aircraft Council of the Aircraft Industries Association of America.

Main street of a typical American community of 1,225 population. Its future growth and importance will be greatly affected by personal flying in the post-war period.

This is the fifth of a series of articles on post-war flying and its effect on community life. The next article, "Locating an Airpark," will appear in an early issue.

FOLKS & THINGS ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

No voice of prayer to Thee can rise,
But swift as light Thy Love replies;
Not always what we ask, indeed,
But, oh, Most Kind! What most we need.—Kimball.

Mrs. Charlie Mims and daughter, Elaine Mims Martin, have remodeled and reopened the Dress Shop formerly known as the Exclusive Dress Shop. The new name is "The Flame Shop," and will cater to clothes for the smartly dressed woman. The location is next to Popwell Pressing Shop and we wish for the both of them much success in their new business.

Yep, things get better and better. The Dixie Cafe has resumed its twenty-four-hour a day schedule. Not since the war started have we been able to boast that Clanton had an all-night Cafe. Well, we have one now and Clanton is looking more like Clanton every day. Maybe by the time all the boys get home the old burg will look enough like it's old self to where some of them will recognize it.

Clanton Motors, Inc., was supposed to have a new 1946 Ford Demonstrator in their show room this week end, but seems the strike at the Ford Plant changed their plans and it will be probably next week before it arrives from Atlanta. Watch next week's NEWS for details. It will be something worth coming to Clanton to see.

Speaking of strikes: President Truman, we hope, takes it upon himself to order every man who wants to work back to work at these automobile plants, and if necessary, enforces his order with the Army. How many millions of these boys in uniform who will step back into civilian life without a job of any kind, would be only too glad to get a place at one of these manufacturing plants — and at the same salary that was being paid when the strike was called? We are absolutely for Union Labor—but we are definitely against the bunch of gangsters and hudlums who have labor in their power.

We have a string of Service Flags in the window here at the NEWS office. Of course they were put there to advertise the flags for sale. Three little girls were looking at them Monday morning. We know not who they were or from whence they came. After looking for several minutes one of the little girls remarked: "My good ness, they sure have got a lot of boys in Service."

Seems that John Headley is faster becomming unpopular around Clanton since he took over as City Dog Catcher. At first he had only about half of the population after his scalp, but more recently we believe it runs around 90 percent. There's nothing in the world, outside a man's family that is closer to his heart than his dog, and when you kick his dog around, it's just like kicking him around. Of course we must have restrictions, and to be a good citizen we have to abide by these restrictions, but remember the old adage? "Love me, love my dog."

Our Mayor, Leo Thompson, has a fine feeling of friendship for his fellowman. Monday morning he flew to Foley, in South Alabama, and got Dr. V. J. Gragg and brought him to the bedside of J. Mell Martin, an old and dear friend. Mr. Martin is seriously ill at Central Alabama Hospital. Dr. Gragg and Mr. Mell have been the closest of friends for a generation and Mr. Mell was calling for him. Able to spend only a few hours at the bedside, Leo flew him back to his home at Foley Monday afternoon and remained there for the night, flying back to Clanton Tuesday morning. 'Tis a pity more of us couldn't think more of others and less of ourselves.

What with Taxi stands, Bus stops, loading zones, fire hydrants, etc., etc., etc., what the sam-hill is the everyday ordinary guy driving his automobile to Clanton going to do for a parking place. If the City Fathers keep putting up "no parking" signs for this, that, and the other thing, there will soon be no place for the motorists to stop in down-town Clanton for a few minutes. The Highway, or Seventh Street if you wish, is just a long string of "no parking" zones, joined together by an automobile or two.

Saturday, September the fifteenth, we celebrated the beginning of our eighth year in Clanton. The seven years past have been wonderful years, despite more than half the time war ravaged the world. We have had our joys and our sorrows, our ups and our downs, but still, they have been the most enjoyable years of our life., We have made enemies of course, but we have also made scores of friends and we are thankful for each and every one of them. Now that war is no more, may we spend many useful years together.

We hear that our friend Luther Kendricks is returning to Clanton and Chilton County in his old job as Highway Patrolman. This, we understand, is of October first. Patrolman Brown, who has been working with Patrolman Glenn for the past several months, will be transferred to Gadsden, Ala. Luther is being discharged from service and will be welcomed here by his many friends. He made an able officer and was well liked throughout the county.

FULL EMPLOYMENT SEEN LINKED TO PULPWOOD NEED

Quoting recent statements by Secretary of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach which pinned hopes for abundant peacetime employment squarely upon the ability of the American people to fully consume the products of industry, the Chilton County Victory Pulpwood Committee this week warned that there could be "neither maximum employment, production nor consumption" if pulpwood production broke down.

Mr. Schwellenbach had stated that "we cannot have full employment unless we have full production of goods and services. And we cannot have full production unless we have full consumption."

The Labor secretary was further quoted: "And we cannot have any of these—full employment, full production, full consumption—if our productive machinery is stalled and our power to consume diminished."

The committee pointed out that the link connecting full consumption with full employment and production was orderly distribution. Shortages of paper, paperboard and other pulpwood products essential for packing and packaging peacetime articles, it was explained, could seriously hamper and possibly even cripple the smooth flow of newly manufactured articles from factories to the eventual consumer.

With the unexpected ending of the Japanese War, according to the committee, pulpwood producers have been confronted with the necessity of providing pulpwood in enormously increased quantities, not only to meet the expanding requirements of industry during reconversion but also to provide the cartons, containers, wrapping paper and other forms of packaging still demanded by the Army and Navy for shipping supplies to the millions of American troops still overseas.

The committee stressed the urgent need of mills in this area for more top quality pulpwood with which to meet reconversion orders.

Wounded while in the repair shop, when his ship was hit by enemy plane, Cornelius Regan, 21, S 1/c, Bayonne, N. J., pleads for more War Bond sales to furnish medical supplies to mend others' wounds. Shrapnel sent him to the hospital.

Ensign Marion Burbridge feeds wounded Marine Corporal Joseph Blasko, 23, Scranton, Pa., who suffered a fractured femur of his left arm when struck by shrapnel at Iwo Jima. Food, equipment and medicine are supplied to thousands of wounded Navy personnel through the purchase of War Bonds. The need will continue until Japan is defeated. Bond buyers profit from the restored health of service men as well as from interest payments.

FARMERS URGED NOT TO ENCOURAGE BIG LAND BOOM

Appealing to Alabama farmers to avoid disastrous consequences which follow land booms such as that experienced after the first world war, Foy Helms, statistician, Alabama Extension Service points out that farm land prices have advanced one cent per month for the last four years.

He said that prospective purchasers of farms would do well to consider carefully the probable future of farm commodity prices and the long-term earning capacity of farms before bidding up prices of farm lands to higher levels.

"They should be especially cautious about buyng farms with a small down payment and burdening themselves with a heavy debt load," he says.

During the year ending July 1, 1945, prices for farm land in the Nation rose 11 per cent, according to a report made by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Mr. Helms disclosed. This annual increase has been exceeded only twice during the last 34 years. Values rose 15 per cent during the year ending March 1944 and 21 per cent in 1919-20 following the world war when that boom was at its peak.

According to the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, the average value of farm real estate in Alabama is 57 per cent above the 1935-39 average. Also figures compiled by the Farm Credit Administration show that Alabama farm land prices are 56 per cent above the 1942 average. In northern Alabama prices are up 72 per cent; in Central Alabama, 58 per cent; and in southern Alabama, 46 per cent.

On the encouraging side of the picture according to Mr Helms, is the fact that most farm sales have been made with substantial down payments and many others are paid for in full at the time of purchase.

Add a little salt to frostings, in fillings and puddings. It brings out the sweet.

ALABAMA IS NEAR TOP IN COTTON INSURANCE

By making applications for 10,312 cotton insurance contracts covering 10,008 farms, Alabama farmers led all states except Texas and Oklahoma in the 1945 cotton insurance program. Texas farmers made 33,915 contracts while Oklahoma made 12,767.

A total of 164,444 applications covering 199,300 farms was written by the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation on 1945 crops to protect farmers from losses due to weather, insects and diseases.

Cotton leads the list of insured commodities with 95,756 applications covering 113,193 farms in the 18 cotton-producing states. Insurance in force on cotton in 1943, the last previous year of the insurance program, covered 164,998 farms.

A HEART-WARMING MESSAGE

No citizen of our county can read the appealing message that appears in this paper from the wounded veterans of our county in behalf of USO without being profoundly stirred.

Our war-shattered boys, who must spend many more weary months at Northington General Hospital in Tuscaloosa recuperating from their wounds, know what USO has meant to every service man. Forgetful of themselves, these wounded veterans from our own county, are thinking now of comrades still in service overseas and in the army camps at home. They want the USO to keep on bringing to their buddies the nearest thing to home. And so, they ask the people of their county—"friends and neighbors"—to back the Alabama War Chest in its final effort to raise funds for USO and 18 other agencies that aid "our own and our Allies." This paper is confident that the good people of this county will give generously in gratitude to these wounded boys of ours who have given so much to all of us.

STATE OF ALABAMA

A PROCLAMATION

BY THE GOVERNOR

WHEREAS, the Legislature of Alabama, at the Regular Session 1945, ordered an election to be held by the qualified electors of the State of Alabama upon a certain proposed amendment to the Constitution of Alabama, which said amendment is herein set out, and ordered that said election be held on the first Tuesday following the expiration of three months after the final adjournment of the regular session of the 1945 Legislature; and

WHEREAS, the first Tuesday following the expiration of three months after the final adjournment of the regular session of the 1945 Legislature will be and occur on Tuesday, October 2, 1945; and

WHEREAS, notice of such election, together with the proposed amendment is required by law, and by the provisions of the Act submitting the amendment, to be given by a proclamation of the Governor to be published in each county in the State of Alabama once a week for four successive weeks next preceding the said 2nd day of October;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Chauncey Sparks, as Governor of the State of Alabama, do hereby give notice, direct and proclaim that on Tuesday, the 2nd day of October, 1945, an election will be held at the several polling places within the State of Alabama, in the manner and form provided by law, upon the following proposed amendment to the Constitution of the State of Alabama of 1901:

"Article XXII. The Legislature shall have the power to levy and collect taxes for state purposes on net incomes from whatever source derived within this state, including the incomes derived from salaries, fees and compensation paid from the state, county, municipality, and any agency of creature thereof, for the calendar year, 1933, and thereafter, and to designate and define the incomes to be taxed and to fix the rates of taxes provided that the rate shall not exceed 5 per cent nor 3 per cent on corporations. Income shall not be deemed property for purposes of ad valorem taxes. From net income an exemption of not less than fifteen hundred dollars ($1,500.00) shall be allowed to unmarried persons and an exemption of not less than three thousand dollars ($3,000.00) shall be allowed to the head of a family, provided that only one exemption shall be allowed to husband and wife where they are living together and make separate returns for income tax. An exemption of not less than three hundred dollars ($300.00) shall be allowed for each dependent member of the family of an income tax payer under the age of 18 years. Such tax must be levied upon the salaries, income, fees, or other compensation of state, county and municipal officers and employees, on the same basis as such income taxes are levied upon other persons. The proceeds of such tax, after provision has been made for the payment of administrative expenses and the next two maturing installments of interest on the warrant refunding bonds issued to fund the floating debt existing October 1, 1932, must be used only in the manner and the order following: 1) to create a trust fund for the payment of the principal of all outstanding warrant refunding bonds issued under the authority of Act No. 14, approved February 5, 1935, and Act No. 50, approved February 8, 1935, to fund the floating debt existing October 1, 1932; 2) to become a part of and to supplement the sinking fund heretofore created for the payment of the "Old Bonded Debt", as evidenced by Class A Renewal Bonds, Class C Renewal Bonds, and Funding Renewal Bonds, to the extent that the fund, which hereafter shall be an irrevocable trust fund, when invested and the earnings thereon calculated to the maturities of the outstanding bonds, will equal the principal of the unpaid debt; 3) to replace revenues lost to the several funds by reason of exemption of homesteads from the state ad valorem tax; 4) the residue shall be paid into in the state treasury. The corpus of any fund hereby created, and the income from the trust fund for the payment of the "Old Bonded Debt", may be invested by the Governor in the bonds or other obligations of the United States or the State of Alabama. Any earnings on the investment of the trust fund for the payment of the "Old Bonded Debt" shall be payable into and become a part of the fund, and all earnings and income from the investment of the trust fund for the payment of warrant refunding bonds shall be deposited with and become a part of, the fund into which the proceeds of the income tax are paid. After a sufficient amount is accumulated in any fund to equal the principal of the outstanding bonds against the payment of which the fund is created, (except as to interest which shall be an annual charge or may be included in the trust fund) the debt shall be considered paid. All laws relating to the income tax, not in conflict herewith and valid on the date of the ratification of this amendment, are hereby validated and confirmed. The provisions hereof with respect to the creation of funds and the use thereof are declared to be self-executing."

I further direct and proclaim that notice of this election upon Tuesday, the 2nd day of October, 1945, upon the above set forth amendment to the Constitution of the State of Alabama of 1901, be given by publishing the same once a week for four successive weeks next preceding Tuesday the 2nd day of October, 1945, in each county in the State of Alabama in a newspaper published in said county.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and have caused the Great Seal of the State of Alabama to be affixed by the Secretary of State at the Capitol in the City of Montgomery, on this the 26th day of July, 1945.

Chauncey Sparks.
GOVERNOR.

RECONVERSION

The armed forces are expected to release 7,000,000 men within the year, all of whom will be looking for jobs. A $35,000,000,000 cutback in war manufacturing has already released millions of war workers. It has been predicted that unemployment will reach 5,000,000 in October, that it may exceed 8,000,000 before Spring.

All this has brought one all-important word into the consciousness of the American people. . .Reconversion.

Reconversion is not just the mechanics of changing manufacture over from war material to peacetime articles. Our nation has grown so enormously during the war that returning now to 1939 production standards would leave hundreds of our plants shut down with an estimated 10,000,000 unemployed.

Successful reconversion means expanding peacetime production to staggering new highs. It means making more baby carriages, flatirons, clothing and automobiles than we ever dreamed of making before. It means raising the standards of living of all of America, with our citizens consuming more goods, and with more money available for that purpose, than ever before in our history. It means shifting America into a brand-new peacetime economy which can absorb unemployment so well and so swiftly that only a short time will elapse before anyone who wishes may work again.

How this orderly reconversion is to be accomplished is taxing the finest brains that American government and industry can produce. Already some of these men are pointing to "danger" spots where bottlenecks can occur to slow down or cripple the whole plan.

One of the "danger" spots most frequently mentioned is pulpwood production. Shortages in pulpwood during this period will mean that paper and paperboard will not be available in sufficient quantities to wrap, pack and package the goods being turned out by American factories. Re-employment depends on full production; full production can only be accomplished if distribution can be maintained at a high level. This depends in large part on pulpwood.

FACTS
about the
INCOME TAX AMENDMENT
to be voted on October 2

Two questions only will be decided by the outcome of the vote October 2 on the Income Tax Amendment:

1 "SHALL THE OLD BONDED DEBT (CARPET BAG BONDS) BE PAID FROM THE PRESENT SURPLUS?"

2 "WHAT SHALL BE DONE WITH FUTURE REVENUES FROM THE STATE INCOME TAX, AMOUNTING TO ABOUT $6,500,000 YEARLY?"

A "YES" Vote for the Amendment Will Do These Things That Benefit All Citizens of Alabama

1 Continue present Homestead Exemptions and lock them into the State Constitution, where they can't be repealed without a vote of the people.

2 Pay the State's old $8,500,000 Carpet-Bag debt that has been running for 107 years at a total cost in interest of $60,000,000 — for which the State has received nothing back.

3 Give our children better educational advantages — and our teachers a deserved raise in pay. $1,750,000 goes for this.

4 Provide an increase of $1,750,000 to State Welfare — for Old Age Assistance, family relief, etc. This will be nearly doubled by Federal matching, making the total sum approximately $3,000,000.

5 Permit better care of our insane, increase Public Health Service — vitally important to every Alabama family.

A "NO" Vote on the Amendment Means

That future income tax revenues will pile up and lie idle while State needs keep on growing, until the next legislature decides what to do with them.

More Ad Valorem Tax Reductions Will Give No Benefit to Average Citizen

If two years hence, the legislature should decide to use income tax revenues to extend homestead exemptions, this won't help the average citizen—the small property owner, the small farmer. Only big property-owners could benefit. Why? Because more than 95% of all farm home owners and almost 90% of city home owners assess their homesteads at less than the $2,000 homestead exemption now allowed. The exemption applies only to the State (65c) tax, not to county or district millages.

Let's get the benefits of taxes we now pay. Let's don't put off until tomorrow what should be done today. The voters passed the income tax—they have every right to amend it and order those benefits the "Yes" votes will bring.

MORAL ECHOES

Rev. D. W. Haskew, D.D.

The year 1945 will go down in history as one of the greatest years of all time. In this year we have witnessed the destruction of Germany and the crushing of Japan. We have witnessed the emerging of Russia as one of the greatest world powers of history. We have seen China stand up and face the future as one of the leading nations. We have witnessed the shifting of human gravity from the Atlantic to the mighty Pacific. The eyes of the world is now looking toward the west. We have witnessed the defeat of the age old Conservative spirit, and the swinging of the world toward the Leftist philosophy of life. We have seen fifty national heads gather at San Francisco and plan for an everlasting peace. Last, but not least, we have discovered that long sought after power of the Atom. Centuries from today, historians will refer to 1945 as the year when all the world pepped with power. The year 1945 will blaze bright on the pages of history.

I saw a negro nurse sitting under a pine tree with a white babe on her lap. Then she lifted the child and sat it down on the straw. Immediately the babe grappled in the straw and came up with both hands full. The nurse tried to get the straw from the hands of the baby, but it held on tenaciously. Then the negro said, "Dis chile will sho be rich some day. When he gets things in his hands, he holds to them." Then she added pleadingly, "Honey, let go, you only have straw in your hands." How like that baby the most of us are in this world. Give us a chance and we will grabble up both hands full of what the world can give, but after all we only have straw. Some day we will have to let it go. Shall we go out of life empty handed?

A preacher is an Ambassador. It is up to him to be something before he goes out to do something. He must consistently make the impression upon people that he represents something that is not common among ordinary men. I do not mean that he should be sanctimonious, for that repels, he must have something springing up from within. He is God's man, and his chief aim and purpose is to represent God. He is not the one who is insulted when wicked men take God's name in vain. Often have I had wicked men to beg my pardon when they curse in my presence. I do not need that, but the God whom I represent should be sought for pardon.

UNION STOCK YARDS BREAK ALL RECORDS IN AUGUST SALES

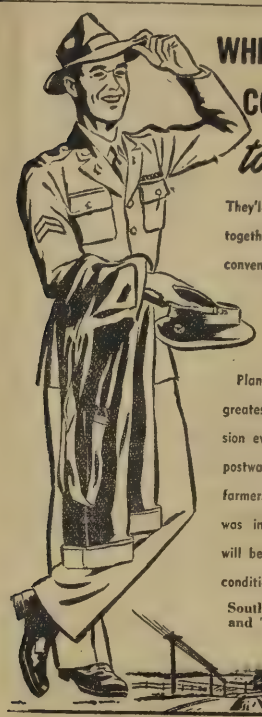
Breaking all records for any previous August, market receipts of cattle and calves at the Montgomery Union Stock Yards this past month totaled 24,299 head, according to a report just issued by Glenn T. Stebbins, Executive Vice President and General Manager of the Union Stock Yards Company, who also anticipates an early end to rationing of beef in view of the early Fall marketings of cattle this year.

"Based on figures released by F. E. Thompson, Secretary-Treasurer of the company, the next largest August in the history of the yards from the standpoint of cattle and calf receipts was recorded last year, total receipts for August 1944 being 21,129 head," Mr. Stebbins said.

He further commented in his report however, that "due to the heavy liquidation of brood sows during late 1943 and early 1944, hog receipts have been extremely light at all market points thus far this year and prospects are that supplies of pork products will hardly assume even near normal proportions before next year." "On the other hand," the report continues, "cattle and calf receipts at the Union Stock Yards the first eight months of 1945 have been more than 5,000 head greater than during the corresponding eight months of 1944 and indications point to further heavy marketing of cattle and calves during the next 90 days."

"Despite the heaviest August receipts on record, market values have not suffered the sharp decline that usually accompany heavy Fall receipts but on the contrary, all classes have found a ready outlet at relatively strong prices with the result that producers who sold their livestock through market agencies at the Union Stock Yards during the month of August cashed their offerings to the record-breaking tune of more than $1,160,000.00, all of which constitutes a tremendous addition to the post-war buying power of Alabama Agriculture," he stated.

Commenting on the part of livestock in the economic development of the state, Mr. Stebbins said, "the record for August is clear testimony that livestock is coming into its own as a major factor in Alabama agriculture and full credit must go to those who have pioneered better breeding and increased production in the state. Likewise," he continued, "a great measure of credit must also be given those who pioneered the establishment of a terminal market here in Alabama and who, with their long experience in livestock production and marketing, have cooperated with and assisted producers in meeting the many problems that have arisen.



"In the final analysis, the availability of a dependable market is the first prerequisite to successful production of any commodity and the fact that producers have had a daily terminal market at which to turn all classes of livestock into immediate cash any regular business day since the Union Stock Yards was first opened to the public on July 19, 1917 has been a definite, important factor in the development of livestock production," Mr. Stebbins observed. "At this point he said, "it is most appropriate to refer to the policies of the Union Stock Yards and the effect they have had on the market by offering a ready cash outlet, assisting producers in [illegible] more farm income by [illegible] loans and the sanitary [illegible] of livestock pestilences [illegible] livestock [illegible]."

Come Back Home Jobs Are Waiting

A LOT of our patriotic neighbors left home to serve their country, either in the armed services or in war industries.

If you are one of them, we want you to know there is a warm welcome and a job waiting for you here.

We hope you will come back to make your home here among your old friends and neighbors. This is a good town with a lot of fine people—and a fine future.

Plenty of Jobs Here

In addition to the opportunities here with which you are familiar, some new ones have developed during the war. For instance, a lot of people around here have been making good money working in pulpwood. The tremendous war-time demand for pulpwood will continue because of the civilian demand that has been piling up and the many new industrial uses that have been discovered. Pulpwood has no reconversion problem.

And that is typical of most of our business here. It runs along pretty steadily—no big ups and downs. You can enjoy security here and a nice way of living that doesn't cost every penny you make.

So come on back home to stay! We'll be mighty glad and proud to have you with us again.

HUGE CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM PLANNED BY THE SOUTHERN BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY

A $300,000,000 to $400,000,000 construction and installation program—aimed to meet the expanding telephone needs of the Southeast was announced today by Hal S. Dumas, president of the Southern Bell Telephone Company, through T. E. Harris, district manager.

Mr. Dumas said the program, the largest ever undertaken by the Southern Bell Company, would extend over the next five to six years.

Some idea of the size of the program is given by Mr. Dumas when he points out that it means that "We must in this comparatively short time spend a sum for equipment and plant equal to the entire investment in telephone facilities we now possess."

A large proportion of the amount to be spent by the telephone company during the next year will go toward clearing up pending applications for service, but beyond that, Southern Bell anticipates a period of substantial and steady development in the South which will necessitate further telephone expansion to meet the growing requirements.

Mr. Dumas said Southern Bell's post-war plans included many different projects, some of which he outlined as follows:

Filling as quickly as possible applications for service now unfilled because of the lack of facilities.

Extending and improving rural telephone service.

Catching up with plant shortages to provide for the volume of business now being handled.

Rebuilding the long distance network.

Improvement of service and other fields of telephone development.

President Dumas expressed telephone people's confidence in the ability of Southern economy to retain and expand the position it has gained as the result of its achievements ended the impact if the war. "As we see it, the South is what you might call 'a natural' for rapid growth in the years just ahead. We have a bountiful supply of raw materials, a matchless climate, a great source of native-born, intelligent labor, which has acquired new skills in hundreds of Southern war plants.

"As the South develops so must the telephone system which serves it's social life. Our aim is to contribute to that development through the provision of an ever-expanding, modern telephone system. We will be [illegible] needed to [illegible] engineering and manufacturing phases of providing the enormous quantities of equipment needed for this purpose are already well under way," Mr. Dumas said. "Some equipment has been delivered, and installation work has begun in some cities where the need is most acute.

"We are beginning to receive more telephone instruments from our supplied now, and the installations which are being delayed because of a shortage of instruments only can therefore be handled more quickly than those being held up by lack of switchboards and other central office equipment.

"Manufacture of this intricate equipment used in switching calls requires much time. When the war broke out, the vast quantities of specialized machinery necessary for the manufacture of this equipment was removed and stored away. Its place was taken by other machinery for making radars and many other war communications items. Now we must clear the floors again, install the machines and train workers before these plants can begin to manufacture telephone equipment.

"Telephone manufacturers at this stage have only scratched the surface as far as the total requirements are concerned. We are going this job all possible speed in order to provide service as quickly as we can for those now on our waiting lists."

The Company is already well along too, in the planning and engineering stages of its rural development program, which was interrupted in mid-1942 because of war needs for materials and manpower.

"Southern Bell is keenly interested in providing service to more and more rural dwellers throughout the South," Mr. Dumas said. "For three years before the war, we spent more than $3,000,000 building rural lines and added nearly 30,000 rural telephones. Actually, since 1935, Bell-operated farm telephones in the Southeast have more than quadrupled.

"Telephone development in rural areas can be expected to accelerate. In future years bring increasing realization of Southern farm lands and improved rural economic conditions.

"Experience gained in the pre-war construction program, plus experience gained through war use of telephone facilities, will be brought into play in a large measure to expand service on the farms of the South.

"One of the big factors in future farm development is a high-strength steel wire which enables us to place poles farther apart than previously. Use of electric power lines to transmit telephone messages offers another possibility which can be adapted to rural telephone development.

"Steps are being taken now and additional measures will be taken as soon as possible to improve and extend long distance facilities in the South. A new cable, called the Southern Transcontinental, will pass through South[illegible] Bell territory, connecting such key points in Dixie as Charlotte, Atlanta, Birmingham, Meridian, Jackson and Shreveport. The cable terminates at Los Angeles.

"Work on the Washington-Charlotte link of this cable has just begun while construction on the Atlanta-Meridian leg has progressed to a point considerably west of Birmingham.

"Another important cable route will be from Chicago and St. Louis south to New Orleans, intersecting the Southern Transcontinental at Jackson, Mississippi. Still other projects call for the completion of the Jacksonville-Miami section of the Chicago-Miami cable and for a Charlotte-Atlanta route by way of Augusta, Georgia.

'In these extensions of the long distance network the important backbone routes to be built will be of the coaxial cable type. When properly equipped, these cables will make for greater speed and convenience of long distance service as well as provide for the transmission of television when the need for television channels arises."

Service to motor vehicles is also in the offing, and this and other new developments will be studied and adapted to fit the needs of the South as soon as practicable.

"The kind of projects ahead can be announced now with reasonable assurance," Mr. Dumas declared, "but many, of course, cannot be accomplished with the speed we would like to see them accomplished simply because of the tremendous backlog of equipment which must be manufactured. The availability of money to do the job and the level of business conditions will determine the speed with which our program objectives are accomplished.

Financing this program, of course, presents a very real problem. Wages, taxes, costs of materials and services have all gone up while the price of telephone service has declined. Along with the decline in the price of telephone service has come a decline in telephone earnings until in 1944, our earnings to investment were the lowest in 22 years, except for the year 1933. If such a program as I have outlined is to be financed, the telephone industry must be allowed earnings which investors will regard as safe and adequate.

"Looking tahead, the stage is set for expanding activities; and in the telephone industry the proper marshalling of men, money and materials will speed up the much-to-be desired objective—more service for the South, more jobs for its men and women."

NEW TREATED COTTON DOESN'T MILDEW AND ROT

A new cotton fabric that will not mildew or rot has been developed by scientists of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. The new fabric was buried in the ground for six months with no significant loss of strength.

This new material has the strength and appearance of ordinary cotton, in addition to its ability to resist rot. And the process by which it is made causes no discoloration of the fabric. The treatment is somewhat similiar to the acetate process for rayon, but the new cotton fabric has no odor and it does not become sticky. And fortunately, the new treatment will not caues any harmful effects on foods, so it will make excellent sacks for shipping fruits, vegetables and other food and feed products.

SURPLUS MILK WILL PAY SUGAR AND COFFEE BILLS

(By C. E. Teague, Alabama Specialist In Dairying)

The milk cow is one of the best and most faithful friends to man. If given a half chance she will furnish a large part of the food for the family. She produces milk which is the most nearly perfect food we have.

If properly handled the surplus milk, butter, or cream she produces will often go a long way toward paying for the family need of sugar, salt, coffee and other household necessities.

Two or three good cows producing milk for market will bring in a cash income equivalent to five or six bales of cotton. This may mean just about doubling the cash income on many farms, because in many instances this number of cows should be kept without interfering with normal cotton production.

Many of us owe our lives largely to this "foster mother of the human race," which, on many farms, is forced to shiver in the cold rains and winds of winter, and to exist on a scanty ration of grass hay, shucks, pine straw, corn stalks and occasionally a few nubbins. Doesn't this faithful friend of ours deserve better treatment than she gets? Does she get better treatment on your farm?

The comfort of the dairy cow should be given first consideration. She is the hardest working animal on the farm. She does not require an expensive barn, but she should have a warm, dry stall or shed during the cold winter nights and days. She should have free access to good quality legume hay at all times. She should be furnished green grazing of crimson clover, oats, ryegrass and other crops during the late Fall. She should have access to fresh clean water at all times. She should be milked at regular hours and receive kind, gentle treatment at all times.

Remember that fat salvage is just as important as it was during the war. Used fats and oil are still vitally needed to maintain our supplies of soap and for other important every day needs.

Not Policies Alone . . .

One of the guiding principles of our operation is to endeavor to offer citizens of Alabama not only the very best and most complete 'policies of Insurance but also to render a more complete and broader service than can be obtained from any other company.

Whether your need is for a policy of unlimited amount or a smaller policy—yes, even on the weekly premium plan—you will find that this strong Alabama company has the best and most complete contracts. Of equal importance is our ability and desire to really serve you.

More than TWO THOUSAND trained persons serve our policyholders.

Your Company is Truly Alabama's Fastest Growing Company

Surprising, but true! The railroad freight rate for an average ton per mile hauled is less than one cent; and the rate per passenger per mile is an average of about two cents.

The wear and tear on shoe leather for a mile walk would probably exceed the rail rate for an average ton of freight or a passenger for the same distance.

When some one says "high freight and passenger rates," consider the above facts. There's not a better bargain in the whole world than in U. S. railroad service.

Today, with high operating costs, freight and passenger rates per mile average 16⅔ and 46⅔ less, respectively, than 25 years ago.

Railroads are large, mass transportation agencies, efficiently operated as free and private enterprise, in a public service essential both in peace and war.

The "Old Reliable" wants to deserve your patronage and to continue to build a greater South.

RECREATION TRAINING INSTITUTE IN PROGRESS AT CHILTON COUNTY HIGH SCHOOL

A cross-section of every community in the county is represented in Chilton County's first Recreation Training Institute, now in session in Chilton County High School Gymnasium. The enrollment of slightly over 200 people represents parents, merchants, teachers, ministers, welfare workers, F. F. A. members, 4-H Club workers, Board of Education members, postal employees and a few selected high school students.

Tomorrow, the closing session of the Institute will be in the form of a recreation party in which games, songs and other activities studied during the course will be demonstrated. The members of the Institute hope that now they may be of great service to their community because of what they have been taught this week.

Sponsored by the Chilton County Board of Education, the Institute is being conducted by Mrs. Ruth G. Ehlers, a highly trained representative from the National Recreation Association. During the week, Mrs. Ehlers has discussed the need for planned recreation for all ages, post-war recreation trends, and the objectives of a social recreation program. She has demonstrated in a highly instructive and entertaining manner different activities, games, musical mixers, and other devices for making a party or any sort of community get-together successful.

Mr. D. P. Culp is director, Mr. Patterson Hicks is chairman of local arrangements, Miss Elsie Schurter is attendance chairman, and Miss Lillian McKee is chairman of registration for the Institute.

TRUMAN RECEIVES FORD CAR AS GIFT FROM HENRY FORD

A Ford super-deluxe, tudor sedan, first civilian passenger car built in America since February 1942, was presented Wednesday, August 29th, to President Harry S. Truman as a personal gift from Henry Ford.

The presentation was made by Henry Ford II, Executive Vice President of the Ford Motor Company, on behalf of his grandfather.

A symbol of the nation's reconversion effort, in which speed is essential to shorten the unemployment period, the car was completed at the Ford Rouge plant, Dearborn, on July 3rd.

It was driven off the line by Henry Ford 11 only two days after the "go-ahead" for automobile production had been given the industry.

Mr. Ford felt it was appropriate that the first automobile produced since shortly after Pearl Harbor be presented and driven by the President —the nation's first citizen.

POULTRYMEN MUST HAVE APPLICATIONS BEFORE OCTOBER 1ST

A recent notice to this office from the State Department of Agriculture Poultry Division follows:

"All requests for flock selection and pullorum testing must be made on or before October 1st. Requests will be filled in order received."

Chilton County farmers desiring this service may get your application in by calling or writing your County Agent, or the hatcheryman with which you do business. If you write, give name, address, breed of layer flock and number of hens in flock.

Local Soldier Urges Support For War Chest

Citizens of this county were urged today by Lt. James L. Littlejohn, of Clanton, who recently returned from overseas with a distinguished service record, to "help the USO carry on until its work is done" by giving generously to the Alabama War Chest in the fourth and final appeal which starts October 9th.

"Every service man will tell you that the USO has done and is still doing a grand job," Lt. Littlejohn said. "Their clubs both here and overseas have been the nearest thing to home for men in the service. Their camp shows have brought a lift and laugh to many a war-weary soldier. And they are doing a swell job keeping up the spirits of the wounded men in our army hospitals.

"USO is supported by the National War Fund, to which the money raised by Alabama War Chest goes.

USO still has a big job to do for the boys in our occupation forces in Japan and Germany and those who haven't yet received their discharge papers. We owe it to these boys still over there and over here to help the USO carry on until its work is done. On behalf of my buddies who are still in the service, I appeal to the people of my county to back up USO for one more year.

SAMUEL JASPER BRADFORD

Samuel Jasper Bradford, age 69, died at his home in Fortson, Ga., Saturday morning, September 15th. His body was shipped directly to Clanton.

Sacred Harp Singing At Mt. Zion Church

The Sacred Harp Singing Convention of Chilton County was held at Mt. Zion Church last Sunday. The singing was opened by the Vice-chairman, W. L. Sanders. Prayer was offered by Mr. Martin. M. C. Jackson and Floyd Bailey composed the arranging committee.

Directors for the day were as follows: T. C. Jackson of Sylacauga, W. L. Sanders, J. A. Jackson, Roy Jackson, Joe Cobb, M. C. Jackson and Ira Crowe.

Songs were sung in memory of Major B. F. White, author of the Sacred Harp. T. C. Jackson directed this lesson.

The Convention was called into business meeting. The following officers were elected for next year: W. L. Sanders, Chairman; J. A. Jackson, Vice Chairman, and Myrtle Jackson Secretary; T. C. Jackson, Joe Cobb, Ira Crowe and J. A. Pearson were appointed by the chairman to find places for a district singing in four different communities. If any community wishes one of these singings, just see these committeemen. They will be glad to arrange a date for a singing with you.

The friends of this community gave this convention a hearty welcome and a speedy return. At the noon hour a bountiful dinner was served. Everybody enjoyed the day.

The Spring session of this convention will be held at New Harmony Church near Lomax. Visitors are always welcome and appreciated at New Harmony, at either the singing or our church services.—Myrtle Jackson, Secretary.

Alabama War Chest Begins Fourth And Final Appeal

Wounded service men of Chilton County, at Northington General Hospital, joined today in issuing their own appeal to friends and neighbors in this county to help carry on the work of USO for one more year through contributions to the fourth and final Alabama War Chest Campaign which begins October 9th.

Here is the message which these wounded veterans asked be published in all newspapers:

"Dear Friends of Chilton County:

We are Chilton County boys now at the Army Northington General Hospital in Tuscaloosa. We have been away from home for a long, long time. We have been wounded in battle. Some of us fought on Siapan, Luzon, Okinawa and in Germany and Italy. We did our utmost to bring this war to an end.

We proudly carried your colors into those dirty, horrible and painful battle fields. Yes, some of our buddies did not return to Alabama with us. They are still over there and will never come home.

While we were fighting this chaotic war you backed us up wonderfully. It was you who made it possible for us to enjoy those few leisure moments of relaxation and laughter through USO Camp Shows. On Saipan, Luzon, Okinawa and in Germany and the other places where we licked the Japs and Germans, the troupes financed by the USO did their part.

Now the actual fighting is over but for us and the thousands of other Alabama boys in the 500 Army and Navy Hospitals all over the world, the horror and pain of war still lives. Many more months in hospitals like Northington must pass before we can join you at home. Therefore, the need for hundreds of USO Clubs like the ones in Tuscaloosa and Birmingham and the USO Camp Shows visiting the hospitals weekly are as necessary as ever. They give that same pleasure, relaxation and laughter so essential between operations. Will you keep them going?

Thank you, Chilton County friends, for all you have done to make this dirty mess easier for us."

Wounded veterans of this county at Northington General Hospital who joined in this appeal are:

Pfc. Lawrence C. Alston, Mt. Creek; Pvt. Billy E. Dennis, Stanton; Sct George W Gibbons, Thorsby; Pvt Matthew V. Henley, Mt. Creek; Pvt Albert Kendricks, Thorsby; T-Sgt Willie Middlebrooks, Clanton; Pfc Carl E. Parker; Cpl. James C. Rucker, Clanton.

F. C. Fair Killed Near Duncanville

Mr. W. C. Fair of Duncanville, Ala., was instantly killed when the truck in which he was riding was struck by a passenger train near Duncanville Monday, September 10th. Kathleen Norris Says:

What A Veteran Wants

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

"When she met us I began to say what I'd planned, 'I'm sorry. I've always been sorry!' Then we were crying on each other's shoulder."

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

HERE is a letter from a G. I. Joe who finds himself stationed in nothern Germany. He comes from a small American town, and he wants to get back to it. German frauleins don't interest him, nor Germany's devastated cities; he doesn't like the language and he is tired, after three years, of army food.

"I'm 22, and I'm going to take an engineering course after the war," he writes. "Boy, I can't wait to get going. All that has kept me sane through these years is the thought of home and the family. I have some family. I have three sisters, one married with three kids, and one brother, who has two little boys. My grandma is living, and she and one of my aunts live with us and help Mom with the housekeeping. My youngest sister is going to marry her captain at Christmas; the middle one was married last July.

"You'd never look twice at our house, though it stands back under big trees and has a lot of space around it for barns and fences and Pop's chickens and the windmill. But the Tullerles don't look any better to me.

What Food, What Fun!

"Saturdays—yum, yum, yum—does cooking go on in that house! Fried chicken and strawberry shortcake—and Mom with a big apron on, and the grandchildren falling around under everyone's feet, and maybe Pete—that's my older brother-in-law, bringing in a sugar-cured ham—he raises hogs out in the country. The kids put on a play, or we have games at the table—my girl comes over with her brother and we play tennis on the municipal courts—we all go swimming after dinner and when we come home something good to eat is on the table with a message from Mom: 'don't make any noise and wake Dad.'

"The fellows out here," the letter goes on, "who come from homes like that, homes with lots of laughing and cooking and good times in them, cousins coming and going, sisters trying to get Mom's attention—they're the ones that are coming back sane. Every little custom—every association with home is dear to us now; we compare snapshots, we read sections of letters to each other. Some nights three fellows and I get pencils and tablets and draw diagrams of Main Street, or the farm—the way the trees and the houses stand. Nothing else counts—these girls over here don't mean anything to us—nothing means anything, except that if we stick this out and see it through, we'll get back, and the folks won't be ashamed of us."

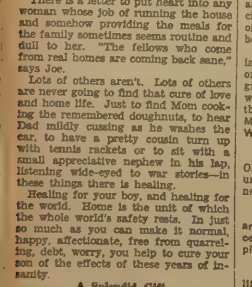
There is a letter to put heart into any woman whose job of running the house and somehow providing the meals for the family sometimes seems routine and dull to her. "The fellows who come from real homes are coming back sane," says Joe.

Lots of others aren't. Lots of others are never going to find that cure of love and home life. Just to find Mom cooking the remembered doughnuts, to hear Dad mildly cussing as he washes the car, to have a pretty cousin turn up with tennis rackets or to sit with a small appreciative nephew in his lap, listening wide-eyed to war stories—in these things there is healing.

Healing for your boy, and healing for the world. Home is the unit of which the whole world's safety rests. In just so much as you can make it normal, happy, affectionate, free from quarreling, debt, worry, you help to cure your son of the effects of these years of insanity.



A Splendid Gift.

"Thinking of what to send Yeats for his birthday," writes a young wife from Memphis, "I made up my mind that better than any tangible thing would be the news that his mother and I were friendly. While his father I've always been on good terms, but in all the five years of our marriage I'd never spoken to his mother because of a message she sent me by Yeats when we were engaged.

"I took our three small boys, all clean and fresh, and went boldly to my father-in-law's house. When she met us I began to say what I'd planned, 'I'm sorry. I've always been sorry.' Then we were crying on each other's shoulders, and after that we sent Yeats what he called the finest present anyone ever received—just the news that we were friends.

"I'm happier than I've ever been in my life, and so is she. And when Yeats comes home I'll feel ashamed at his happiness. So it's a gain all 'round."

Some other woman, reading this, might think up a similar gift for husband or son.

"Fried chicken and strawberry shortcake." . . .

BACK TO DEAR OLD WAYS

Most soldiers don't go crazy, or develop strange desires while they are abroad. They just want to get back to the life they used to know. It wasn't perfect, but it satisfied them pretty well. Nothing they have seen in Europe or the Orient has really changed their tastes or longings.

The soldier whose letter appears in this issue just wants to get back to his farm home, to his family and friends and sweetheart. The memory of the simple pleasures, the hearty and delectable food, the many joyous associations were all that kept him sane in faraway Germany, he writes. The German girls don't appeal to him, nor do the foreign language and customs. In short, he just wants to get back home, and pick up where he left off. He is 22, which is still young enough to start afresh, so he intends to study engineering.

This young man is no doubt a typical serviceman. Although saddened and weary after his harsh experiences, he is not bitter or disgruntled. He is ready to slip back into the old grooves as soon as he is discharged. Most wives, sweethearts and mothers who have been worrying about the impact of war on the men they love will be pleasantly surprised to find them little changed, after all.

BACK TO NORMAL

Singing telegrams are now permitted and will be delivered as soon as sufficient help can be obtained. This is one more proof that the peace will not be what we hoped for.

With the lifting of the ban on singing telegrams is lifted all restrictions on those little booklets of form telegrams for all occasions. A new one will be issued soon and we suggest that it include:

Many happy returns this day—
With the government's okay.

* * *

Shoe rationing will be abolished soon. Oh for the day when baby will be urged to be economical because Popper needs a pair of shoes!

* * *

Three, and a half million radio sets are promised by January 1. We sincerely hope that all brakes on the ear plugs industry will be lifted also.

* * *

The controls on building are being lifted fast and it may soon be possible to locate a carpenter who isn't making a living in some line that has nothing to do with hammers and nails.

Napkins Were Decorations

Before the era of forks—and before the era of napkins—bread was used as the approved something on which to wipe your fingers. You carried your own napkins to the banquets and dinner parties to which you were invited, when napkins were finally used. This was during the Roman period. By the time Charles II napkins had assumed a purely decorative role and a hostess who expected to be in the social swim dressed up her dinner table with napkins folded in fancy shapes.

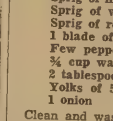
Ways With Fish, Fowl

Most of us know just how to prepare meat to delicious perfection, but we know very little about seasoning and cooking fish and fowl to make them delicious.

Perhaps this is because we had, until a few years ago, ample quantities of meat coming our way. Now, we are finding that these meat substitutes can be truly appetizing in their own right.



The purpose of this information is to give you some very special ways to tuck away in your mind (or recipe box, if you prefer not to trust to memory) for preparing these other good protein foods.

Native spices are used in preparing this duck dinner which I am sure you will find perfectly delicious:

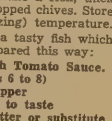
Duck Cooked the French Way.
1 duck
Salt and pepper
Sprig of thyme
Sprig of marjoram
Sprig of winter savory
Sprig of rosemary
1 blade of mace
Few peppercorns
¾ cup water
2 tablespoons butter
Yolks of 5 eggs
1 onion

Clean and wash duck. Rub over with salt and pepper and place in hot oven. Roast until a delicate brown. Remove duck from oven and cut it in pieces. Place in a stew pan, water, spices and onion cut in half. Stew gently until meat is tender. Add the butter to the gravy and stir in well-beaten egg yolks. Pour over the duck and serve.

You would be pleasingly surprised at how good striped bass can taste when prepared by boiling and served with mustard mayonnaise. Here's the way to do it:

Boiled Striped Bass.
(Serves 3 to 4)
2 to 3 pound striped bass
1 carrot, thinly sliced
1 onion, thinly sliced
1 teaspoon salt
1 bay leaf
1 teaspoon freshly ground peppercorns
3 or 4 celery leaves, minced
1 teaspoon minced parsley
⅓ cup white vinegar
1 to 2 quarts boiling water

Clean and prepare fish. Into a shallow roasting pan, place carrot, onion, seasonings, vinegar and boiling water. Bring to a boil. Place fish in water. Simmer gently 15 minutes, then remove from over heat and allow fish to poach an additional 10 minutes. Remove fish from liquid. Drain. Arrange on heated platter with a garnish of lemon and watercress. Serve with:



Mustard Mayonnaise.
1 egg yolk
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon dry mustard
¼ teaspoon sugar
⅛ teaspoon paprika
Pinch of cayenne
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 cup salad oil (about)
¼ cup finely chopped chives

Beat egg yolk with rotary beater until it is thick and lemon colored. Mix the seasonings and add to the egg yolk, beating well. Add 1 tablespoon of the lemon juice and continue to beat well. Begin to add the oil, about a half a teaspoon at a time, beating steadily as you add. As mixture thickens, the remaining lemon juice may be added. Add oil sufficient to make a rich, thick dressing. Add chopped chives. Store in cool (not freezing) temperature.

Redsnapper is a tasty fish which you will like prepared this way:

Redsnapper With Tomato Sauce.
(Serves 6 to 8)
3 pounds redsnapper
Salt and pepper to taste
2 tablespoons butter or substitute
1 cup strained tomato
2 onions, sliced
1 carrot, diced
Celery and parsley root, diced
1 cup sweet cream
1 tablespoon flour

Clean and bone fish. Add salt and pepper and let stand for several hours. Place onions, carrot, celery and parsley in kettle with 1 quart cold water. Let boil, then add fish, whole or in slices, and the butter and tomatoes. Let cook slowly until flesh is firm or separates easily from the bone. Lay carefully on a platter. Strain liquid, let heat, add flour dissolved in the cream and let cook until smooth.

The cream may be omitted and the sauce thickened by adding liquid gradually to the yolks of two eggs, well beaten. Pour over fish and serve hot, garnished with parsley.

If you want to serve a really elegant fish dinner to your guests, then this is the main dish to try:

Halibut and Shrimp a la Newburg.
(Serves 6 to 8)
Part I.
1½ pounds halibut
2 slices onion
3 eggs, separated
½ teaspoon paprika
Part II.
1½ pounds boiled shrimp
2 cups white sauce

Cook fish in boiling salted water with onion until tender (use 1 teaspoon salt to 1 quart boiling water). Drain and shred. To one cup of the hot white sauce, add stiffly beaten whites and the shredded fish. Place in center of a hot platter and set in oven with oven door open. Break shrimp into small pieces. Add to remaining white sauce and gradually add to beaten egg yolks mixed with a little cold water. Add the paprika, heat well and place in a border around halibut and serve at once.

If friend husband brings home duck, then you will want to prepare it thus:

Sportsman's Duck.

Just before using, cut off wings, head and feet. Remove feathers dry. Singe with flame. Draw, wash well and dry thoroughly. Season. Roast in a very hot (500-degree) oven for 18 to 20 minutes. The meat should be bright, cherry red. Serve with currant jelly and wild rice.

Veterans' SERVICE BUREAU

EDITOR'S NOTE: This newspaper, through special arrangement with the Washington Bureau of Western Newspaper Union at 1616 Eye Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., is able to bring readers this weekly column on problems of the veteran and serviceman and his family. Questions may be addressed to the above Bureau and they will be answered in a subsequent column. No replies can be made direct by mail, but only in the column which will appear in this newspaper regularly.

APPRENTICESHIP FOR VETS

With many labor unions suffering from lack of apprentice help, particularly the building trades unions, the federal committee on apprenticeship has through a survey of industry learned that 300,000 apprenticeship positions can be handled by industry from the ranks of returning servicemen.

The committee consists of representatives of management, labor unions, the U. S. Department of Labor, U. S. Office of Education, the Federal Security agency and the apprentice-training service of the War Manpower commission.

The committee has recommended that to protect veterans and to maintain high standards of apprenticeship, adequate safeguards be set up by state agencies authorized to approve business establishments for apprentice training to assure veterans thorough training in all skilled trades. The committee has ruled out as apprenticeable training programs for occupations such as salesman, managerial positions, professional and semi-professional positions and clerical work.

Definitions for true apprenticeship which are reserved for all-round skilled trades and which have been adopted by WMC's apprentice training service include the following basic standards: (1) An apprenticeable occupation is considered one that requires 4,000 or more hours to learn; (2) A schedule of the work processes to be learned on the job; (3) A progressively increasing scale of wages that should average not less than 50 per cent of the journeyman's rate over the apprenticeship period; (4) Provisions for related classroom instruction of about 144 hours per year; (5) Terms of condition of employment and training to be stated in a written agreement and registered with the state apprenticeship council; (6) Review of local apprenticeships by the state or federal apprenticeship councils; (7) Apprenticeship to be jointly established by the employer and employe; (8) Adequate supervision and the keeping of records for all apprenticeship programs.

Questions and Answers

Q.—What information must a veteran submit in order to apply for guaranty of a loan under the GI Bill of Rights?

A.—The veteran first executes a form called a certificate of eligibility. In this he gives a summary of his service record, the amount of the loan, and the purpose for which it is to be used. This is submitted to the Veterans Administration by the lending agency.

Q.—If a blue discharge from the Army is neither honorable nor dishonorable, under what circumstances is it given?

A.—The War Department informs us that an honorable discharge certificate is given when a soldier's service has been honorable. A dishonorable discharge is given in compliance with the sentence of a general courtmartial because of a military offense of a serious nature. A discharge "other than honorable" (blue) is given for in-between cases.

Q.—Is there a plan to release from the Army men who have had four to five years service without regard to other factors?

A.—No, there is no plan for release because of length of service. There is authority for retirement of a soldier after 30 years' service or if he is disabled in line of duty after 20 years' service.

Q.—I am in a veterans hospital receiving domiciliary care. Can I also receive educational or vocational rehabilitation benefits at the same time?

A.—Yes, the Veterans Administration has ruled that a veteran receiving vocational training or education under either Public Law 346 or Public Law 16 of the 78th Congress while receiving domiciliary care is not receiving duplicate benefits, which is prevented by law.

Q.—There seems to be some difficulty over seniority rights in obtaining my old job. Is there anything I can do about it?

A.—Yes, if you fill all other qualifications of the selective service act you are entitled to your old job as a matter or right, regardless of any question of seniority. This is the ruling of the Federal Courts and of the National Headquarters of the selective service system.

Q.—What is the ratio of disabled veterans applying for jobs?

A.—The War Manpower Commission reports that of more than 1,000,000 veterans who have sought employment at U. S. Employment service offices, approximately one-fourth were physically disabled and required selective placement techniques.

Q.—How many loans and in what amount has been made under the G.I. Bill of Rights?

A.—The Veterans Administration reports that through June, 1945, 10,441 loans for a total of $17,241,457.43 had been guaranteed.

SNAPPY FACTS about RUBBER

Rubber production from native plants in Southern Florida is not promising at present, and commercial planting of tropical rubber plants there is not justified, in the opinion of the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

A special railroad coach equipped to demonstrate tyre (British spelling) conservation has traveled throughout England.

More than 40,000,000 heavy-duty truck tires have been produced since Pearl Harbor, even though 90% of the sources of supply of natural rubber were lost at that time.

JOSEPH'S TESTIMONY TO GOD'S PROVIDENCE

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 45:1-5, 9-15.
GOLDEN TEXT—Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!—Psalm 107:8.

God rules the universe. He has His plan which will be carried out, yes, even in spite of man if need be. "He can overrule the acts even of wicked men and make them links in a chain of providence by which His purposes are carried out."

Forgiveness, opening the way for the restoration of fellowship and the showing of kindness, brought the story of Joseph and his brethren to a happy ending. Under the good hand of God, the story which began with tragedy is brought to a conclusion of blessing.

I. Love Overcomes Fear (vv. 1-4).

Following the earnest plea of Judah, the heart of Joseph could no longer withhold itself from the full expression of affection and devotion to his family.

Joseph tenderly shielded the family troubles from the eyes and ears of strangers by sending out the Egyptians. It was the first step of consideration which paved the way for reconciliation. How often just the opposite is done—airing family affairs before the world, and humiliating those who may be in the wrong, thus making it difficult for them to admit their guilt.

Then, too, this was a moment too tender and delicate to be seen by outsiders. The tears of a strong man like Joseph mean a deep movement of spirit—a solemn and often a sacred moment.

It should also be noted that the brothers were afraid, and well they might be, because of their sin against Joseph. After many years these astonished men found themselves face to face with the one whom they thought they had disposed of and they knew their sin had found them out. It always does, sooner or later, but inevitably.

II. Grace Overrules Sin (v. 5).

The guilt of these men was nonetheless real and Joseph could not remove it, but he encouraged them by showing how God had used their evil devices to work out His own good pleasure. He can make the wrath of man to praise Him (Ps. 76:10).

It is worth stressing again that in the very hour when the prospects for Joseph's future usefulness seemed ruined, God was opening the door to the greatest experiences of his life and was preparing him to serve the thousands whose lives were saved by his wisdom and ability in the years of famine.

Nothing is more important in the life of a child of God than to be yielded to His will, unmoved by circumstances, abiding His time, responding to His guidance whether it be by the opening or closing of doors, prosperity or adversity. And herein is the marvel of it all—even sin may be overruled by God's grace for His own glory.

That does not invite anyone to sin that grace may abound (Rom. 6: 1, 2), but it does offer encouragement to the one who has fallen, that God can redeem the years that the locusts have eaten (Joel 2:25).

Our lesson also sets us an example of how true forgiveness acts. So often when forgiveness is asked or granted, there is an "I can forgive but I can't forget" attitude, which means that while hostilities have ceased at least temporarily, there is no real friendship or the disposition to show kindness. Is there any real forgiveness at all in such an attitude of heart and mind? We fear not.

III. Kindness Provides the Best (vv. 9-15).

It might have been enough to send food and a kind greeting with the brothers to their own land, but love does not seek the minimum expression of its feeling. It asks not how little, but how much can I give or do. Note the tender touch in verse 15, "he kissed all his brethren." Here was no general forgiveness, but a personal renewal of long-lost fellowship.

Bringing his aged father and brothers into the land of plenty was not enough, Joseph also gave to them the "best of the land" (47: 11). His thoughtful consideration in sending for his father (Gen. 46:5-7) was part of the same piece of kindness.

Joseph puts to shame the modern "hard-boiled" attitude toward needy and aged members of the family. In their eager and relentless pursuit of fame or riches, many ignore or trample upon the members of their own families. Often they are ashamed of the broken bodies, the humble apparel, the broken or uneducated speech of their parents.

They fear lest their new-found friends in some circle of wealth and supposed "position" will think them strange or ridiculous. God pity the man or woman who is ashamed of a humble or aged father and mother!

Tomorrow is Forever

WNU FEATURES

THE STORY THUS FAR: Spratt Herlong, motion picture producer, had married Elizabeth after her first husband, Arthur Kittredge, had been reported killed in World War I. Elizabeth had been orphaned when a baby and had been raised by her aunt and uncle in Tulsa, where she met Arthur. Within a year after their marriage he enlisted and soon afterwards was reported killed. Elizabeth moved to Los Angeles, where she met Spratt. When he asked her to marry him, Elizabeth told Spratt all about Arthur—also stating that part of her died when Arthur died. Spratt, thanking her for her honesty, still insisted and they were married.

CHAPTER VIII

But she had waked from it. Like its predecessors, this period of recollection had gone as abruptly as it had come. Elizabeth pushed a lock of hair off her forehead and reached for a cigarette. "What a fool I am," she said, her eyes on the picture of Spratt that was standing on her desk. She had a picture of Arthur packed away somewhere in the back of a closet, but it had been years since she had looked at it. She wanted Spratt there, Spratt whom she loved, her children's father. Spratt and her children were what she lived for. They filled up her thoughts—except for these rare minutes of agony, minutes that were more cruel because they had to be borne in silence. She could tell Spratt anything on earth but this. She could mention Arthur to him without self-consciousness, as she did sometimes—"There was a man like Mr. So-and-so in the company Arthur worked for in Tulsa, one of those pseudo-intellectuals who bought first editions for no reason but to show them off. I remember one day Arthur said he . . ." Just as simply as that. And they would chuckle over Arthur's wisecrack and go on talking. But no matter how seldom they occurred, she could not tell Spratt that there ever did occur such experiences of black anguish as the one she had just passed through.

And why in the world should she, Elizabeth asked herself now. It was over, gone completely until the next time, if there ever should be a next time. By tomorrow she would have forgotten it. Already the fact that she had been powerless to escape it was making her ashamed of herself, and glad to ignore such absurdity. The air was growing chilly. The children should have come in from the pool by now, and she hoped they had hung up their suits properly. It was about time she went downstairs and got out the cocktail tray to have it ready when Spratt came in.

The telephone rang again, and when she answered it she felt pleasure at the normal steadiness of her voice.

Her caller greeted her cheerfully. "This is Irene Stern, Elizabeth. How are you?"

"Fine, never better."

"And Spratt?"

"Working himself to death and flourishing on it."

"Any news on the picture, or do I dare ask?"

"Good news, I hope. Anyway, a new writer who seems to have ideas."

"Anybody I know?"

"I don't think so. He's just off the boat."

"Oh dear. Spikka da Inglis?"

"Fairly well, I believe. They're better at languages than we are."

"They should be, can't go a hundred miles over there without needing a new one. Elizabeth, I called to ask if it's all right for Brian to stay for dinner with Peter."

"Irene, you're an angel about that child, but are you sure it's no trouble? Brian takes half his meals with you as it is."

"It's no trouble and I wish you'd let him stay. He and Peter are upstairs getting starry-eyed over a new collection of bugs—Elizabeth, is it really necessary for the Scouts to encourage such a fearful interest in natural history? Peter does nothing these days but mount insects."

"I know, Brian's room looks like all I've ever heard about delirium tremens. There's nothing we can do about it."

"It must be a recent craze," said Irene Stern. "I remember Jimmy—" she was referring to her older son—"Jimmy was an enthusiastic Scout, but he never had this passion for creeping things."

Elizabeth began to laugh. "You'd better send Brian home, Irene. He'll be a distressing influence on Peter."

"But when they're mounting bugs together they're so happy. I can't bear to separate them. So let him stay for dinner, Elizabeth. We'll bring him home by nine."

"All right then, and thank you for being so good to him. It's been ages since I've seen you—I'm going to ring you one day this week for lunch."

"Do. I'd love it."

They said goodby and Elizabeth put back the phone. She laughed to herself as she did so. Everything was back where it ought to be. Her friends, her children, the warm security of her life. Going over to the desk, she took up Spratt's picture and kissed him through the glass.

As she went downstairs she heard a babble of young voices and a sound of laughter. Dick and Cherry had evidently come indoors with their friends, and the four of them were making quite as much noise as might have been expected if they had been greeting one another after years of separation. "Doesn't their energy ever give out?" Elizabeth asked herself with fond wonder as she heard them. She glanced into the dining room to make sure the table had been set with two extra places, made ready the cocktail tray in the living room, and then went to the balcony that ran along the back of the house, to observe the state of affairs around the pool.

The children had hung their suits and towels on the line provided, leaving the place quite tidy after their swim. They were really very good about that, except now and then when they had something important on their minds and forgot to clear up. What a good time they were having now! They had gone into the back den, the windows of which opened on the balcony where she was standing, and she could hear them as they discussed something that must be excruciatingly funny,

What a lucky woman she was, she reflected.

for the conversation seemed to consist less of words than of laughter. Not wanting to interrupt whatever it was they were enjoying so much, Elizabeth sat down in a deck-chair on the balcony to wait for the appearance of Spratt's car in the driveway.

The shadows of the lemon trees were like dark lace shawls lying on the grass. A little wind rumpled the surface of the pool and moved gently past her, bringing odors of damp grass, lemon blossoms, torn geranium leaves. The air was full of the twittering of birds making farewell to the sun as joyfully as the children were laughing within.

Elizabeth leaned back, wrapped in a warm glow of pleasure. What a lucky woman she was, she reflected, and how much she had—a beautiful home, a husband who loved her, such charming, happy children. In the midst of all this, how foolish it was ever to remember anything else. It was good to have a few minutes alone, like this, to look at all of it and know she had a right to be proud because she had created it; good to take pleasure in her children's laughter and know they were so happy because of the love and security she had given them. No matter what might happen to them in the coming years they would have this to remember.

She found herself laughing too, in echo of the four mirthful youngsters in the den. They were reading something, for she could hear the rustle of pages—no doubt those dusty old magazines they had brought in from Julia's mother's attic—and their voices came through the window to her, breathless with merriment.

"What were Liberty Bonds?" asked Julia.

"Government bonds to pay for the war, like the War Bonds we buy now. Here's a question-and-answer department, and somebody writes in to ask if it's quite fair to sell long-term bonds to be paid for by future taxpayers. He asks, 'Isn't that making future generations pay for this generation's war?' and the editor answers—this'll kill you—he answers, 'Exactly so, and this is one of the best reasons for buying Liberty Bonds today. For the fruits of this war will be enjoyed by the generations yet unborn.'"

"Jumping Jupiter!" Pudge exclaimed as the four of them went off into another paroxysm of mirth.

"Generations yet unborn!" Cherry repeated. "That's us."

"And aren't we enjoying the fruits of that war!" said Julia. "Let me see that one, Dick. I wonder if this editor is still alive."

"If he is," said Cherry, "I bet his face is red. Oh do look, here's a beauty. A picture of a lot of babies, and the title is, 'The America of tomorrow, for whom the world is being made safe today.'"

"I bet every one of 'em's in the army now," said Dick. "Take a peek at this. A picture of a lot of soldiers ready to go abroad, and the line under it says, 'A payment on our debt to France.'"

"Any time France feels like making a payment on their debt to us," said Cherry, "I'm agreeable." There was another sound of rustling pages, and she burst out laughing again. "Listen, everybody. 'One of our greatest aims in this war is the reconstruction of Europe on such a basis that future holocausts like this one will be impossible. Out of the world's anguish must be born a new Germany, a nation in which democracy shall rule, where no tyrant and no group of bloodthirsty lunatics shall ever again have the power to plunge a whole continent—'" The rest of her words were lost in a confusion of laughter.

"For the love of Pete," murmured Pudge, incredulously.

"It's right here in print, only you didn't let me finish and the last sentence is the funniest of all. 'Germany will be defeated, but their defeat will bring the German people one tremendous gain: it will mean for them the complete and final overthrow of autocratic government.' How do you like that?"

"I get it," said Pudge. "We were just fighting the Germans for their own good, were we? Gee, when they look around they must be so grateful."

"I see by this paper," said Julia, "that the International Sunday School convention planned for 1916 has just been called off because the delegates are too busy shooting each other to attend this year."

"Where were they going to hold it?" asked Cherry.

"Don't look now, dear. In Japan."

They began to laugh again. Pudge exclaimed, "Be quiet and let me read you something funnier than that. These editorials about the first air raid on an open city! It seems the Germans had things called Zeppelins—that's a kind of blimp—and they sent some of these Zeppelins over Antwerp and dropped a few bombs, and here's what the American papers were saying about it. 'The attack upon Antwerp, made without warning to its innocent population, is completely contrary to all rules of civilized warfare—'"

"Rules?" Dick interrupted mirthfully. "You'd have thought it was a football game."

"'Zeppelins have dropped bombs on an undefended city!' Pudge continued reading with shock horror. '"This is not only contrary to the laws of war, but can serve no legitimate military purpose—'"

"What is a legitimate military purpose," Dick inquired, "unless it is to kill everybody you can?"

"Shut up and let me read this. 'As those who were killed or injured by the bombs were women and male non-combatants, the airship attack was nothing but a plain act of savagery. This is not war, but murder!'"

"Did you ever hear anything so naive?" asked Cherry.

"Was that first attack a bad one?" asked Dick.

"I was saving that for the last," answered Pudge. "If you can believe it, that first air raid, that dastardly, bloodthirsty, savage raid that made everybody sit back and yell with horror—that raid killed ten people and wounded eleven."

"Holy smoke!" exclaimed Dick, and the others joined in his derision.

They chuckled joyfully. Cherry exclaimed, "I wish you'd look at these recipes for war-meals. 'Freedom Meat Loaf,' made out of peanuts and cornmeal."

"Peanuts do have Vitamin B in them," suggested Julia.

"They'd never heard of Vitamin B," Dick said scornfully. "They had to eat peanuts and call 'em meat because our brave allies were buying up all the meat with the money they borrowed and didn't pay back and never did intend to pay back. Do look at that headline—'Every housewife who saves meat and flour in her home is bringing nearer the day of universal democracy!'"

"Do you suppose they really believed all that?" Cherry asked in wonder.

Outside, on the balcony, Elizabeth lifted her hands from the arms of the chair and saw that each of the bright blue cushions was stained with a round spot of dampness where she had gripped them. On the other side of the window the children made some fresh discovery and went off into another peal of laughter, gay, mocking, and terrible because it was so utterly innocent. Elizabeth stood up, her muscles tense with impulse. Then she stopped, standing motionless because she did not know what the impulse was. To do something to them—but what? She could not walk in upon them while with anger and cry out, "Yes, we believed it! You inhuman young wretches, we believed it!"

She could not say that because they were not inhuman, and they were not wretches; they were young and well-bred and intelligent, and they would hear her with a pained bewilderment, and answer with the cool logic of their years, "Aren't you ashamed that you did, when you look at the world we're living in?"

Jemison High School News

BILLIE OAKES, REPORTER

Jemison High School opened this term with an enrollment of two hundred seventy-two and the elementary school with an enrollment of five hundred twenty-six. This is an increase in our enrollment, and we expect to have a few more to enroll later.

We have some new teachers this time and they are: Miss Mary Joyner, Miss Rose Watkins, Miss Merline Deloach and Mr. L. C. Shields.

We appreciate the public taking care of our buildings during the Summer vacation. We are very thankful to say that out of the several hundred window panes, only a few were broken, and half of those were broken by thieves of Bessemer. All the metal works of the building were painted during the Summer.

Mr. L. C. Shields, our vocational agriculture teacher, has fifty-three boys taking this subject. All boys are cooperating fully with Mr. Shields in cleaning up the shop and classroom. The boys are planning on painting the shop and classroom inside and out and making new tables for shop and classroom use.

There are twenty-three in the senion class. They are: Amy Jean Brewster, Loy Mae Cobb, Avelne Conway, Royce Chandler, Robert Carden, Anne Crowe, Lula Mae Dobbs, Murl Franklin, Betty Jean Gore, Ila Mae Gore, Audrey Gothard, Joyce Guy, Betty Ann Lenoir, Helen Littleton, Hanson Leach, Lucille Lewis, Faye Patridge, Dorothy Fay Posey, Douglas Smith, Pearl Thrash, Christine Williams, Gulnell Moody and Marie Parker.

The need for good manners, a pleasing personality, friends, and wholesome recreation are important in the life of every high school girl. Every girl wants to be well liked and socially acceptable to the group with which she associates. A unit of work entitled, "Well-Bred Girl," is planned to help the 32 first year Home Economics students to recognize her social needs and help her with methods of achieving needed adjustments.

The second year Home Economics students, twenty-seven in number, are studying various methods of food preservation. Preserving foods that are abundant during one season for use during other seasons has two advantages. It will mean better planned meals and a decrease in the expenditure for food. The Home Economics classes are studying the storing canning, salting, or brining, freezing, drying and curing of fruits, vegetable and meats.

All in all, our school is getting a successful start. Let every student attend school regularly and make this year the best that Jemison High School has known. — Billie Oakes, Reporter.

EASTVIEW CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH NEWS

The worship service will be held Sunday afternoon at 2:30. Picture stories for the children. Final payments have been made on the old mortgages. Plans have been made to make the church more attractive. Those who believe that Eastview should have a live, vital church should support it with regular attendance.

SINGING AT CANE CREEK FIFTH SUNDAY

There will be an all-day singing here the fifth Sunday, September 30th, in the old books, Harp and Harmony, in honor of the old people of this community. We will not have any Sunday School or preaching. The day will be given to the singers to arrange the program after they get here to suite themselves. All the old people come and bring your lunch and enjoy the day.—P. C. Weldon, Curtis Parrish.

N. J. MADDOX DIED

On September 14th Mr. N. J. Maddox, who served for many years as a deacon of Shiloh Baptist Church, was called to his Heavenly reward. He was a devoted father, a loyal friend and consecrated Christian. He was a man of rare personality, living quietly and meeting bravely the sorrows and responsibilities of life. The fact that he lived so close to his Heavenly Father explains the beauty of his character.

He leaves a daughter, Mrs. E. G. Mullins; a brother, Mr. T. A Maddox of Thorsby; three sisters—Mrs. Nancy Geter of LaGrange, Ga., Mrs. Maggie Stevens of Clanton and Mrs. Emmie Collins of Helena. There are 15 grand children and 17 great grandchildren.

Serving as pallbearers at Shiloh September 15th were the grandsons: Arnold, Carey and Toy Mullins, Alton Baker, William Mims and Virgil Griffin.

JACKSON CHAPEL

The Jackson Chapel Church will meet here at this place for the purpose of organizing a Missionary Baptist Church the fourth Sunday night in this month. All who are interested should be there. The property which now belong to the State will soon be published for sale, and we, the church at Jackson Chapel, expect to buy it for a church and cemetery.

So all who are interested, be there and remember the date — September 23rd, at 7:30 o'clock.

Our Sunday School is doing nicely. We meet at 10 o'clock every Sunday. Young eople's Bible Class every Sunday night at 7:30. Come bring the family.

The flower girls were: Annie, Bobbie, Hazel and Euna Pearl Mullins, Myrtice Baker and Aileen Mims, grandchildren.

WILKINS - BURKE

The marriage of Miss Ettie Charles Wilkins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Wilkins, Verbena, Ala., and Pvt. William Frances Burke, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Burke of Jamacia Plains, Mass., took place at 8 o'clock p.m. Saturday, September 15th, at the bride's home.

The double ring ceremony was solomnized by Rev. J. I. Bice at the altar banked with greenery against which stood palms, ferns and floor baskets of white and pink gladioli, which alternated with seven branched candelabra filled with burning white tapers.

Calvin Wilkins was the groomsman and Little Janice Miller brought the rings in on a white satin heart-shaped pillow.

Following the ceremony supper was served to the many guests.

The bride is attending Jacksonville State Teachers College and the groom is stationed at Fort McClellan, Ala.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Japan Now Fourth Rate Nation, Says MacArthur; Banner Harvest Depends on Favorable Weather

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Seared ground and fragmentary remains of base of tower from which atomic bomb was set off in test mark experimental site near Carrizozo, New Mexico. Viewing scene are Prof. J. R. Oppenheimer (left), who was in charge of technical construction of explosive, and Maj. Gen. Leslie Graves, over-all supervisor of project.

JAPAN:
Fourth-Rater

Even as former Premier Hideki Tojo lay quiet and ashen in an American army hospital with an ugly self-inflicted bullet wound below the heart, conqueror Douglas MacArthur told newsmen that the once proud country which the stricken war lord had led into conflict now was a fourth rate nation.

Hoping to keep Tojo alive so as to be able to question him on the affairs he directed during his wartime premiership, American doctors applied all the treatment of modern medical science, including blood transfusions. But as they labored, Tojo, having accepted full responsibility for the war, groaned: "I am going to die anyway so don't go to any trouble over me."

Tojo shot himself as American troops began a round-up of 40 Japanese suspected of war crimes, including all of the members of the former premier's cabinet. Besides the Nipponese politicians, generals and prison camp attendants, several American, Australian and Dutch were also being sought in connection with propaganda broadcasts.

In pronouncing Japan a fourth-rate nation now, MacArthur pointed to the complete defeat of her military forces and the destruction of much of her industry. Though Nippon may assume commercial leadership in the Orient, he said, her confinement to the home islands will prevent her from returning to the ranks of the major powers.

Regarding the Emperor, MacArthur explained that he was both a religious and temperal leader, and that while America would not interfere with Japan's spiritual life, the mikado was subject to U. S. dictates in political affairs. By surrendering, the Emperor furnished evidence of a reversion from the military clique which had encompassed him to a new liberal influence.

BIG FIVE:
Discuss Italy

Formulation of a peace treaty for Italy headed up the agenda of the council of foreign ministers of the Big Five meeting in London to lay the groundwork for the reshaping of the map of Europe. In dealing with Italy, disposition of her former African colonies and Mediterranean islands poses the most difficult problems, though settlement of Yugoslavia's claim to Trieste also abounds with complications.

Regarding the Italian colonies, the U. S. reportedly favors the establishment of an international trusteeship over the territories, with administration left in Italian hands. Thus, while being given an opportunity of redeeming itself, Italy also would bear the administrative expenses and utilize her colonists to reconstruct war damage.

At the gateway to the Dardanelles straits leading to the Black sea, Italy's Dodecanese islands in the Mediterranean loom as a strategic key in near eastern geopolitics. Friendly to Britain, which possesses heavy interests in the region, Greece has sought to regain the vital islands at the same time Russia has striven to neutralize the entrance to the Black sea.

Italian held with a large Slavic population, Trieste has long been cherished by Yugoslavia for its strategic and commercial value. Recently a clash of British and Yugoslav interests there resulted in Marshal Tito's withdrawal from the area.

CROP INSURANCE:

With cotton leading the list of insured commodities, a total of 164,444 applications covering 199,300 farms was written by the Federal Crop Insurance corporation on 1945 crops, according to the department of agriculture. Over 95,000 applications covering 113,183 farms in the 18 producing states were received for cotton.

Applications for insurance on wheat planted last spring totaled 14,390 covering 23,394 farms and for flax 31,131 covering 38,072 farms.

CROPS:
Weather Factor

Should early retarded plantings mature rapidly enough to head off killing fall frosts, the U. S. will be assured of another banner crop this year, the department of agriculture reported. Under favorable conditions, production would equal the record 1942 and 1944 wartime output.

Added to the prospective record wheat crop of 1,152,270,000 bushels and oats harvest of 1,570,356,000 bushels corn production was estimated at 3,069,055,000 bushels if late maturing acreage escaped damaging fall weather. During August, the crop showed about a 225,000,000 bushel increase, bringing the prospective final yield up near the 1944 high.

Favorable August weather also improved the outlook for potatoes, tobacco, soybeans, grain sorghums, tame hay, dry peas and beans. On the other hand, heavy boll weevil infestation lowered estimates for cotton production, while hurricane and wet weather damage influenced smaller predictions for the rice and peanut crops.

RELIGION:
Attacks Instruction

Religious education programs in 46 states may be affected as a result of a suit brought in the circuit court at Urbana, Ill., against such instruction in public school property by Mrs. Vashti McCollum, wife of a University of Illinois professor and an avowed atheist.

In bringing the suit against the Champaign board of education, Mrs. McCollum charged that her 10-year-old son was embarrassed because he was the only pupil of his class not attending the voluntary 30-minute per week courses sponsored and financed by the Protestant, Jewish and Catholic faiths.

In pressing Mrs. McCollum's suit, which both sides promised to carry to the Supreme court if they lost, Attorney Landon Chapman declared that indirect pressure from fellow students and teachers virtually forced a child into such classes on public school property in violation of the constitution providing for separation of church from state.

MEAT:
Lift Bans

Despite the government's withdrawal of controls over meat slaughtering and distribution, officials refused to forecast an early end to meat rationing, reiterating that such action would be taken once there was assurance of a balance of supply and demand.

Set up last April to steer more cattle from local to federally inspected packers qualified to ship meat to the army and between states, the slaughter program was lifted as military orders dipped and a heavy run of cattle was expected this fall.

Established along with slaughter control, the fair distribution plan was designed to assure the shipments of meat along the same geographical pattern as in the first quarter of 1944 and therefore prevent the decrease in supplies to former markets.

Assails 30-Hour Week

Declaring the first step in the downfall of France was the 30-hour week, Senator Byrd (Dem., Va.) attacked the proposal for a similar government work week. Asserting that all industry would have to follow suit, Byrd said that America cannot afford to become a nation of drones without impairing its economic stability. Adoption of a 30-hour work week by the government would increase costs by two billion dollars a year, Byrd said.

OIL:
Foreign Concession

With an eye upon the development of his country through foreign investment, Emperor Haile Selassie granted the Sinclair Oil corporation of the U. S. sweeping oil concessions in Ethiopia.

Under terms of the agreement signed in New York, Sinclair received exclusive development rights to the country for five years, when 50 per cent of the territory will be released. After a further exploratory period of five years, Sinclair will relinquish another 25 per cent. In northwestern Africa, Ethiopia equals Texas, Oklahoma, Massachusetts and Rhode Island in size.

In return for the broad concessions, Sinclair will pay production royalties to the emperor, build one or more schools and hospitals, clinics and research foundations. In addition, the corporation agreed to pay for the education of Ethiopians in the U. S. for the next 10 years.

NAVY:
Speeds Discharges

To the 327,000 men eligible for discharge under original plans, another 423,000 were added by the navy in a revision of its point system for release. In all, one out of every two men will be released within six months, with over 2,700,000 out within a year.

Following the army's pattern, the navy established credit for overseas service, allowing one-fourth of a point for each month of such duty. Other credits include one-half point for each year of age, one-half point for each month of service, and 10 points for dependents, with enlisted men requiring 44 points, male officers 49, doctors 60, WAVES 29 and WAVE officers 35.

In defining overseas service, the navy included duty on any ship in commission and activity outside the U. S. with fleet or shore establishments, armed guard crews, communication groups, convoys, marine forces and hospital units.

British Seek Funds

Asserting that they have emerged from the war heavily in debt and with their export trade and foreign investments seriously crimped, the British opened negotiations with U. S. officials in Washington, D. C., for extensive postwar financial assistance.

As the conversations got underway, with Ambassador Halifax and Economist Keynes advancing the British interests, U. S. officials were expected to turn thumbs down on suggestions for making outright gifts instead of loans. Aid most likely will take the form of long term credits at low interest rates to enable Britain to rebuild its industrial machine and acquire materials to resume large-scale exportation.

With U. S. officials holding the upper hand, the conferences also were expected to ring in Britain's overall imperial trade policies and their effect upon this country, and Britain's participation in international cartels restricting production and distribution of such strategic raw materials as rubber and tin.

QUISLING:
End of Run

With the court rejecting his claims of having fought the extension of communism, of having worked for Norway's interests and of having spared the country from becoming a battleground, big, bluff Vidkun Quisling was found guilty of both military and civil treason and sentenced to death before a firing squad. Denied appeal, he was given the right to ask for a lightening of the punishment.

In finding his defense wanting, the court countered his claim of having fought communism by stating that he had actually volunteered to organize a militant Red group in Norway before turning against it; that rather than advancing Norway's interests, he had injured them by consenting to German occupation, and instead of preventing Norway from becoming a battleground, he had brought the country into the theater of war.

With Quisling's own checkered career finished after 25 years of involvement in national and international politics, including representation of British interests in Russia, his cabinet ministers were next scheduled for trial in October.

RETURN PLANES:

More than 4,500 aircraft have been returned to the United States, or deployed to the Pacific theater by the United States army air forces in Europe since the end of the war with Germany, the war department announced.

Among the aircraft remaining in Europe, according to present plans, will be heavy and light bombers, P-47 Thunderbolts, P-51 Mustangs, C-47 and other transport planes, night fighters, and training and liaison planes.

New Deadly Bug Killer Has Effective Use But It Also Has Its Limitations and Danger When Improperly Used.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is a guest column written by Winfield J. Dryden, WNU Staff Correspondent, and was not prepared by Baukhage, whose column generally appears in this space each week.)

DDT, much publicized insecticide, saved thousands of lives of our fighting men and civilians in countries where our operations were extended, but it is not the panacea that we would like to believe.

The irony of the story is that it was discovered nearly seventy years ago by a German chemist named Zeidler, but was almost forgotten until rediscovered during the present war by Dr. Paul Muller and Dr. Paul Lauger. These Swiss scientists asserted recently, upon their arrival in America, that with proper control, flies, mosquitoes and other harmful insects can be eliminated entirely from the United States. But along with these insects would go our pollen-carrying insects, bees and other beneficial friends of mankind, also perhaps our birds and fish. Gone also would be many plants and trees that depend upon insects for pollination. As they point out, it is a job for entomologists, not laymen.

DDT has been made available to the public in limited amounts. There will soon be a sufficient supply to meet every demand. Manufacturers of the products, whether in liquid or powder form, are careful to give complete instructions as to its application, which must be followed.

Scientists Tell of Effective DDT Use

Despite its inherent toxicity, DDT in the desired insecticidal concentrations in air is of such low order that it will not cause injurious effects in humans, Dr. Paul A. Neal, chief of the research section of the division of industrial hygiene of the U. S. Public Health Service, has reported. It was this knowledge that made it advisable to spray from the air the Jones Beach area on Long Island, N. Y., and part of the city of Rockford, Illinois. In both cases the purpose was to control insects, Jones Beach to kill sand fleas and Rockford to kill pollo-carrying flies, believed to have been the direct cause for the serious infantile paralysis outbreak in many sections.

Lt. Col. A. L. Ahnfeldt, U. S. Surgeon General's office, after a study of results secured in the army, reports: "In peace time DDT may well change the destiny of the earth's population . . . Our postwar world will no longer be scourged by typhus and malaria and other insect-borne diseases. DDT is not a cure-all, but in the perpetual war between humans and disease, DDT is one of the most effective weapons yet discovered by man."

"DDT will be to preventive medicine what Lister's discovery of antiseptic was to surgery and should close the door forever on those diseases which are companions of death-dealing insects."

In the field of agriculture, the results have been far from disappointing. Remarkable results have been obtained by some of its application, while in others the results were either negative, incomplete or its use not recommended due to effect on birds and other insects.

Will Prove Boon to Hard-Worked Farmer

While agricultural use of DDT must still be considered in its experimental state, reliable and complete tests at various state experiment stations have proved that it is the best insecticide now on the market for the control of the apple's most destructive pest, the codling moth.

It will kill Japanese beetle adults, while current remedies are based entirely upon their repelling value.

The grape leafhopper and other leafhoppers are highly susceptible to DDT and excellent results have been obtained with it against Oriental fruit moth. It also has proved effective against apple red bug, pear thrips, grape berry moth, fruit tree leafroller, apple maggot, cherry maggot and many others.

In California, it was proved that DDT was effective against codling moths in walnut and other orchards. At Missouri it was found that a three per cent dust was effective in controlling blister beetle, squash bug, white fly, thrips, sowbugs, corn earworm, Colorado potato beetle, spotted and striped cucumber beetles, northern corn rootworm, pavement ant, lace-bugs, leafhoppers on grape, flea beetles on eggplant, and a ten per cent dust for roaches, fleas and squash bugs.

The U. S. Department of Agriculture reported that "DDT insecticides were found experimentally to be definitely more effective than those currently used for control of some 80 pests that attack field crops, man, livestock and trees. These included codling moth, cabbage looper, catalpa sphinx, cotton boll-worm, cotton flea-hopper, eastern tent caterpillar, elm back beetle, green-striped maple worm, gypsy moth, horn flies on cattle, Japanese beetle, Lygus and four other kinds of sucking bugs, mimosa webworm, pine sawflies, pink bollworm, spruce budworm, velvet-bean caterpillar, vetch bruchid, white-fringed beetles, mosquitoes, bedbugs, three kinds of lice on man, and house-flies and fleas in buildings.

A Good Insecticide For Postwar Home

Brig. Gen. Simmons, army medical corps, has said: "DDT will exceed even penicillin in its ultimate usefulness and will prove to be the outstanding medical advance made during the war."

One of the newest products is a paint containing DDT to be used on walls of kitchens, dining rooms and in institutions. Other industrial uses have been found by dusting with a 10 per cent DDT powder around the sink in kitchen and other places where cockroaches and other insects stay.

DDT will eliminate the bedbug problem in hospitals, as well as in private dwellings. It may be applied as a five per cent spray or as a 10 per cent powder to both sides of the mattress and springs. It also provides freedom from flies and mosquitoes in hospitals. The new aerosol bomb, which releases the DDT as an aerosol—a cross between a fumigating gas and an ordinary fly spray, is excellent for this purpose. A power spray may be used in applying a five per cent DDT solution.

Just as it is proving effective on the agricultural and industrial front, and as it saved lives on the war fronts, DDT has started to contribute to the health of the home front. The story of spraying for mosquitoes against malaria is well known.

Painting door and window screens with a five per cent solution of DDT in water or kerosene leaves an insecticidal residue that will kill every fly, mosquito or other insect lighting there within the next several months, the U. S. department of agriculture reports.

A five per cent solution of DDT in kerosene sprayed on floors or over rugs eliminates the flea nuisance. A hand sprayer is adequate. By spraying deep into cracks, the DDT will remain toxic to these insects for several weeks.

A ten per cent powder applied to cracks with a small hand duster can be depended on to kill any brown dog ticks that may be hiding there.

Baseboards, especially those that have worked loose from the wall, afford excellent breeding places for bedbugs, cockroaches and brown dog ticks. DDT is sure death to these pests. A hand sprayer, held close to the opening, will send the insecticide, a five per cent solution in kerosene, down where the insects are concealed, or a large duster, of 10 per cent powder, may be used.

REORGANIZE FARM MARKETING AGENCY

Consolidation of more than a dozen offices and agencies of the Department of Agriculture into a new Production and Marketing Administration has been announced by Secretary of Agriculture Clinton P. Anderson. The new Production and Marketing Administration (PMA) is now headed by Under Secretary of Agriculture John B. Hutson, and is made up of 10 commodity branches, 9 other branches, the Commodity Credit and Federal Crop Insurance Corporations.

Average Citizen Has Answer to National Welfare

There is considerable difference of opinion with regard to the attitude civilians will take during the next few months. Their attitudes will largely determine whether we have a recession of several months' duration and the extent of the recovery from such a recession. One group thinks that in spite of lower incomes based on a shorter work week, civilians will have more leisure and spend more.

This group would expect a brisk trade based on free spending. Important segments of the federal government would seem to favor policies that would lead to free spending accompanied by what might be termed controlled inflation. The other group expects people to be cautious and unwilling to spend their accumulated savings.

The committee for economic development has issued a report which gives business men's estimates of postwar markets for manufactured goods. These estimates are optimistic. The committee points out that the postwar years can roughly be divided into three periods: first, short period of reconversion, which may last through 1946; second, from 1946 or early 1947 for a year of deferred orders, and the last period of self-sustaining.

Although Secretary Anderson indicated that meat rationing was on the way out, possibly matter of months, storage stocks are relatively low, and it is expected that the strong demands for meats will be maintained long enough to absorb the rather heavy movement of cattle and hogs that is anticipated during the fall and early winter months. Range conditions have been excellent, and cattle men report that the ranchers are in a mood to carry larger than normal supplies of range cattle over winter rather than to sell them at substantial discounts from present prices.

Edison's Friends Found They Were Paying Guests

Thomas A. Edison was showing a party of friends over his beautiful summer residence, equipped with many labor-saving devices. One exception, however, was a turnstile so stiff that it required considerable strength to force a passage.

One by one his guests pushed through. At length one of them ventured to say: "Mr. Edison, why do you have everything so perfect except this awful turnstile?" "Ah!" replied the host. "Everyone who pushes the turnstile around pumps several gallons of water into the tank on my roof."

Continuation of Nurses Training to Provide for Thousands of Qualified Hospital Assistants

By Walter A. Shead, WNU Staff Correspondent

A total of 112,000 girls and young women, of which number 59 percent or approximately 66,100 come from small towns of 5,000 and under population, are enrolled in the nurses training courses sponsored by the United States Public Health Service of the Federal Security Agency.

These girls are entrained in what is more commonly called the cadet nurses training corps and the erroneous impression has been largely fostered that they must enter the army and navy service upon graduation. This is untrue, however, since the law providing for the training of these nurses says they are trained for the armed forces, governmental and civilian hospital, health agencies, war industries and for other purposes, and where the nurses decide to practice is entirely voluntary on their part.

They may decide to stay in civilian practice, or to go into the army or navy, but emphasis is placed upon the voluntary nature of their service.

As is the case in most war projects, particularly where money for operation comes from some other source, there is considerable confusion in the Public Health Service as this is written as to whether the governmental training of nurses under the act will continue.

The law setting up the program provides that the act shall cease upon the date of the termination of hostilities in the present war as determined by the President or upon such earlier date as the congress, by concurrent resolution or the President may designate.

The student nurses already enrolled in the program will be able to finish their courses because the law provides that all student nurses who were receiving training or course ninety days prior to end of hostilities or declaration by congress or the President may be graduated.

No further enrollments are being accepted in the cadet nurses corps. Those with more than ninety days' training, as of V-J day, will be retained in their present hospital assignments, until they have completed the 30 to 36 months of training provided. A movement has been started in congress to have the life of the cadet nurses corps continued during peace time.

Thousands to Graduate.

Thirty thousand young women will become graduate nurses this fall as the new class prepares to enter the course and while the armed forces likely will urge these graduates to enter upon hospital duty within the services, it may be that the need elsewhere will be more urgent. At any rate, it will be optional with the graduate as to where they go.

Cost of sending these nurses through a 24-month course is approximately $1250 to the government, so the cost of the training so far has been about $150,000,000. In addition, the government, with Lanham Act funds from the Federal Works Agency, has constructed some 230 new projects, including buildings, laboratories and other equipment at a cost to the government of $17,397,202 and to the private hospitals of $8,260,783. The new construction has provided facilities for 12,144 students.

What will come of these new buildings when the emergency ends has not definitely been decided. Likely they will be declared surplus war properties and be disposed of through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation with preference or priority being given to the institution where they are constructed.

Under the provisions of the law, the government pays hospitals which have inaugurated a nurses' training course under the provisions of the act, for maintenance, meals, laundry and rooms and for indoor and outdoor uniforms, text books and other fees. In addition, the government pays the hospitals, which, in turn, pay the girls, $15 per month for the first nine months and $20 per month for the next fifteen months, or until their training is completed. Where the course runs more than two years, girls get $30 per month for the last six months.

Cost of maintenance averages approximately $35 to $40 per month for each girl. At the present time the public health service has approved 1110 nurses' training schools out of a possible 1250 schools in 6500 hospitals in the United States. And according to records of the public health service, about 80 per cent of the nursing service in hospitals where such training schools are in progress comes from the cadet nurse students.

The course also makes provision for post-graduate courses for graduate nurses to become supervisors or teachers and approximately 20,000 have been enrolled in these courses, which are short, lasting up to approximately six months.

According to information here, the recruitment of nurses for these courses has been one of the most successful efforts in the war and has been the most reasonable in point of cost to the government. The public relations program is in charge of Mrs. Jean Henderson Mulcahy of Jacksonville, Fla., a former newspaper woman, who prior to her coming to Washington, was for five years director of public relations for the Florida State Board of Health.

The cadet nurse corps is one of the few organizations in the war which has been given an official flag, and by action of Dr. Thomas Parran, Surgeon General, and approved by Paul V. McNutt, Federal Security Administrator, the flag was ordered as a white rectangular field, with a white Maltese cross centered on a red oval superimposed on a rectangle of gray and below the cross insignia the words "Cadet Nurse Corps" in regimental red lettering.

The official flag is ordered displayed at all induction ceremonies, graduation exercises, parades and at such other times as authorized by the Surgeon General.

Providence Was First.

The first hospital in the United States to be approved for installation of a cadet nurse corps was Providence Hospital in Washington, D. C., the second being Johns Hopkins in Baltimore.

According to Mrs. Mulcahy, the Providence Hospital corps is one of the model organizations in the country and under the direction of Sister Rita, superintendent of nurses there for the past twelve years, the cadet corps has been integrated with the five-year university course which was also inaugurated by Sister Rita several years ago.

In other words, at Providence, most applicants for cadet nurse training are selected from among girls who have had at least two years' college or university education and when they graduate they not only receive the coveted "RN," or registered nurse, degree, but they receive a bachelor of science degree from Catholic University of America, with which the hospital has affiliated for the course. Out of the more than 165 girls in the class at Providence, 107 are college girls.

Sister Rita explains that out of an avalanche of applications, she was able to make careful selection of girls with college training, that they make better students and that as a result of this careful selection, Providence Hospital has had no disciplinary problems such as has been true in other hospitals where such care was not exercised in the selection of applicants.

It may be that the experience with the cadet nurse corps at Providence will mark a turning point in the training of nurses throughout the country, since Sister Rita is planning to abandon the ordinary three-year nurses' training course which has been in vogue at most nurse training schools, in favor of the longer course and a college science degree.

Although the law provides for an insignia which may be worn on both indoor and outdoor uniforms, the students at Providence wear the same uniforms as students in regular training without insignia, and there is no distinction whatever made either in their training or in the treatment they receive by the hospital. And few if any of the cadet nurses at this school wear their outdoor uniforms to make them distinctive from the other girls in a total training school of 250 girls.

Large Urban Class.

In recruitment of the cadet nurses, according to public health service records, 40 per cent come from towns and rural communities of less than 2500 population. An additional 19 per cent come from towns of less than 5000 and only 9 per cent come from the large metropolitan cities.

Mrs. Mulcahy explained this unusual proportion of trainees from the small towns in the fact that parents felt that their daughters would be sheltered in proper environments, that many of them had not been away from their home town communities and that they felt safer and more secure in permitting their entrance in the cadet nurse corps, both as a patriotic move and as a security for their future.

There has been little complaint incident to this important training course to provide additional nurses during the emergency, particularly from the girls themselves. Most complaint, Mrs. Mulcahy remarked, comes from parents who believe the girls should have the same pay as privates in the army, $50 per month; that the girls are not subject to veterans' benefits and that they are not entitled to free mail.

To offset these, however, it is pointed out that the girls are receiving training for a life work at the expense of their government and that despite need for nurses in the armed forces, they are still free agents to practice when and where they will, or to not practice at all if they should so desire, if they marry, or for any other reason.

Farm Indebtedness Is Cut 25 Per Cent In Past Five Years

Farmers are using their larger incomes wisely in reducing their indebtedness. Many have paid off all their mortgages and others have reduced their obligations far more rapidly than their schedule of payments required. The total mortgage indebtedness on farms has declined at least 25 per cent during the last five years. Farmers are much better prepared financially to meet readjustments that may be necessary.

In another way, farmers are acting wisely in order to avoid heavy losses later. They are trying to keep prices of farms from sky-rocketing as land did in 1919 and 1920, only to be followed by a collapse which was a heavy burden for many years. The danger is not yet past for farms are being sold in many cases over 50 per cent higher than in prewar times. The situation is becoming a little better now and the prospects are more promising.

Merchants and business men in rural communities and smaller towns are preparing to meet changed conditions for their prosperity is so closely tied up with that of the farmers. Conditions for them are very good, as indicated by the rise of bank deposits in agricultural regions, by higher retail sales, and increased consumer demand for both goods and services. Merchants are trying hard to get the goods for which the demand is so large.

The good judgment and wise management which has already successfully accomplished so much will help not only the farmers, but also the entire country during the postwar period. We are ready to face whatever comes. Much has been done and even more is going to be accomplished to make the future as prosperous as possible. There has been some unemployment due to closing down of plants engaged in the manufacture of war material.

Good Start Made In Major Job Of Reconversion

Reconversion—and all that it entails between now and this time next year presents a black picture if one listens to the predictions of some government and labor leaders.

The reconversion picture from the viewpoint of business and industry is not so darkly shaded and a spirit of optimism prevails within the ranks of industry in most localities throughout the nation.

Insofar as government is concerned we are, almost still unprepared for peace. Although the full-time employment bill was introduced last January with urgent recommendations from the late President Roosevelt that it be enacted into law and later urging by President Truman . . . the bill still rests in a senate pigeonhole. And, although there are many ramifications to the question of reconversion from war to a peace-time economy, the problem of unemployment, of lower wages, if only for a short temporary period is predicted will slash the national income from approximately 162 billions as of now to around 112 billions annually as of January 1, 1946. And it is unemployment, the human side of reconversion, which will cause the most suffering.

But looking at the picture as pessimistically as one can, it is a far cry from a national income of 112 billions to around fifty billions which was the nation's income during the depression years in the mid-thirties. It is a harsh paradox to witness a nation which has won the greatest military victory in history and accomplished the most prodigious production miracle in the annals of man, throw up its hands and predict an army of eight million unemployed by next Spring with the government doing nothing about it.

Chairman Krug of the War Production board in a statement shortly after the peace emphasized that the actual job of reconversion will be handled by private industry with pretty much of a hands-off policy by the government. The government's part he said, will be to hold down inflation.

Well, according to the best informed persons here in Washington, that is not enough for government to do. And the record of private industry even in the most lush production year in the nation's history has shown that private industry alone is unequal to the task.

Creating Illusion of High Ceiling In a Room Having Slanting Walls

By Ruth Wyeth Spears

HERE is a fascinating illusion of a high ceiling for a room with slanting walls. The trick is in the way the bed and window curtains are cut and hung, and it is one of dozens which are clearly illustrated in a 32-page booklet called "Make Your Own Curtains." Every detail of making and selecting is explained in this little book; and the types of curtains and draperies can save you many a costly mistake.

In the bedroom shown here, the fabric decorations are carefully harmonized. The man of the house had a hand in putting up the dressing table shelf and in making the blanket chest at the foot of the bed. A pattern for the chest lists all material used, and gives illustrated directions for carpenter work, cushion top and covering.

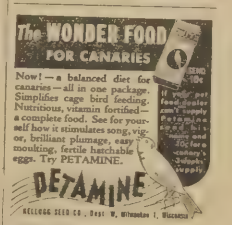
People Make Fun of Mrs. Beulah Hankins

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA. — Mrs. Beulah Hankins, who lives at 634 S. Collier, wrote an amusing letter to Faultless Starch Company recently. She said,

"I want to tell you about your wonderful starch. I sure think it's grand. Several people make fun of me for not boiling my starch. They say this starch is for lazy people. I have a boy four years old and I iron ten to fifteen suits of clothes a week for him. I love to iron them as Faultless Starch makes easy ironing. I also have twins, eight months old, and do they have a laundry—from twenty to twenty-five dresses a week and most of these are white ones. They iron so smooth and smell good. Thanks again for Faultless Starch. It sure saves me many hours of ironing."



SAVES TIME AND WORK

That's probably the most wonderful letter anyone could write about Faultless Starch! Mrs. Hankins is a busy wife and mother and she has found that Faultless Starch saves time and work for her. She makes starch without cooking and she has found that Faultless Starch makes her ironing easy. She gets a kick out of people saying that her Faultless Starch is for lazy people. Certainly she isn't lazy!

ORDINANCE NO. 3-R

To create and levy a license or privilege tax on all tickets, passes and admissions to any places of amusements, event and public places where admission is charged or collected within the City of Clanton, and its police jurisdiction, and to provide for the payment and the collection thereof.

Be it ordained by the Council of the City of Clanton, Alabama, as follows:

Section 1. That there is hereby created and levied a license or privilege tax of Two Cents on each and every admission, ticket and every person attending as a patron, any place of amusement, or entertainment, or any place or location where the public is invited or privileged to go, where any admission or attendance fee is charged or collected, directly or indirectly, within the corporate limits of the City of Clanton, and within the police jurisdiction of said City; provided, that tax shall be One Cent within the police jurisdiction.

Section 2. Each person, firm, or corporation having or maintaining an established place of business within the City of Clanton, or its police jurisdiction, shall collect and become responsible for such license or privilege tax so levied and shall pay the same to the City Clerk, on or before the 5th day of the month succeeding the month in which collected, and shall make a report in detail of the amounts so collected, with each payment on forms prescribed by the City Clerk.

Section 3. Any person, firm, or corporation, not maintaining a permanent location or place of business within the corporate limits of the City of Clanton, or its police jurisdiction shall, before engaging in, carrying on, or operating any place of amusement, or entertainment, as hereinabove provided, within the City of Clanton, or its police jurisdiction, procure from the City Clerk, a permit to carry on such business and make suitable arrangements with said City Clerk for the collection of, or the payment of such license or privilege tax.

Section 4. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation, to charge for, collect, or to admit any person, or to permit any person to attend, as a patron, any place of entertainment or amusement as herein defined, where any admission, charge or toll, is paid or demanded, without collecting and paying to the City, the tax herein created and levied.

Section 5. Any person violating this ordinance shall be punished by fine not exceeding $100.00 or imprisonment at hard labor not exceeding six months, one or both, at the discretion of the Court.

Section 6. This license and privilege tax is an addition to all other license or privilege tax, and does not repeal any provision of any existing ordinances for the collection of any privilege or license taxes heretofore levied or created.

Passed, approved and published this the 18th day of September, 1945.

Strawberries Should Be Fertilized Now

Fertilization experiments to determine the time and amount of materials to use on strawberries indicate that best yields are secured by the use of three moderate applications rather than using only one heavy application. Also, the fertilizer should be used before each definite growth and development stage of the plants annual cycle.

The plants development stages are: 1. after setting or thinning, the old plants produce runners and roots which develop new plants by mid-summer 2. During late summer and fall multiplication or runner growth practically ceases and the plants activity is chiefly that of developing crowns of fruit buds. 3. In early spring the buds that were formed during the fall begin swelling and berries start on the way to maturity.

Chilton County strawberry fields are generally fertile enough to develop an abundance of new plants with only a light application of fertilizer at the time of setting or thinning old plants. Approximately 300 pounds per acre is sufficient plant food for this development. The second stage or bud development stage is the period during which the strawberry plants fertilizer requirements are greatest. Four hundred to 600 pounds of 6-8-4 are recommended for this period. In Chilton County the proper time for this application is from September 15 to October 1. The third application is prior to fruit development and should be applied about January.

In summarizing the fall fertilizer application is the most important fertilization treatment that the crop gets and now is the time to apply it. Apply 400 to 600 pounds before October 1, if you expect a good yield of quality berries next spring.

Training Institute Brought To Successful Close

With the awarding of certificates to the 95 people who were present for 8-10 hours, the Recreation Training Institute was brought to a close last Friday in the CCHS Gym. During the week, a total of 183 persons registered. They represented 16 different occupations from over 18 different communities of this county. Mrs. RuthG. Ehlers, of the National Recreation Association in New York, conducted the course.

The classes of the Institute were divided between discussion and participation in recreational activities of varied types. Topics discussed included the objectives of recreation, a balanced program planning for all ages, leadership technique, post-war recreation trends, the use of dramatics for recreation and teen-age recreation Get-acquainted games, musical games and mixers, active and quiet games for young and old, old-time couple rhythms, and programs for young children were among the activities Mrs. Ehlers taught.

Under the co-chairmanship of Miss Eleanor Lewis and Miss Myrtle Wesson, CCHS teachers, and with the assistance of the office of the Superintendent of Education, the Institute published a bulletin for its members, containing games and stunts and other recreational devices to be used in community activities.

The Institute was fortunate in having Miss Jessie R. Garrison, State Supervisor of Health and Physical Education, present for all its classes and for the community party demonstration Thursday night. This party will be given in a number of the communities of the county this Christmas.

The Chilton County Board of Education sponsored the Institute to solve the problems of recreation in this county. It expects positive results in the near future through the setting up of county-wide programs of recreation.—Sarah G. Palmer.

SOIL CONSERVATION NEWS

Mr. J. L. Devaughn of New Cedron Community has entered into an agreement with the North Central Soil Conservation District. He plans to put every acre on his farm to its proper use as far as possible from a conservation and economic standpoint.

This plan included a complete water disposal system, crop rotation for each field, permanent pasture, temporary summer grazing, winter grazing and hay crops. For the water disposal system, Sericea and Kudzu will be used for meadow outlets. These crops will also be used for hay and grazing. Kudzu will also occupy the more critical slopes and be so arranged that it can be utilized for hay or temporary grazing or both. By using perennial crops for hay, there is no annual expense for seed. Only maintenance applications of phosphate, potash and lime are necessary. Crotalaria will be worked into his crop rotation along with winter legumes Crotalaria will occupy the land in the summer along with the row-crops There will be a cover on the land at all times, which is a double protection against erosion. Both of the cover crops are also soil-improving because they add nitrogen for better growth of row-crops and organic matter for mellowing and increasing the water holding capacity of the soil. Oates will be used for winter grazing this winter. After the oats are gone the land will be fallowed for early sowing of Crimson Clover and Rye Grass which will be used for winter grazing next year.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

There will be a Hallowe'en Party given at the Grammar School on Wednesday, October 31st. Be thinking about this and plan to be there with your boys and girls.

Bath towels should be selected with care. Absorbency depends on the amount of pile or looped surface, a towel has. For best wear and satisfactory use, loops about one-eighth inch long are considered best.

Local Man Killed In Automobile Accident

Vollie Lee Collins, age 29, died in a local hospital about midnight Friday, from injuries received when struck by a hit-and-run driver, on the highway north of Clanton, during the heavy rain storm.

Martin's ambulance answered the call and a short time later Troy Maddox went to County jail and gave himself up, stating that he was the driver of the truck that struck Collins He was released Monday on bail.

Mr. Collins was buried Sunday at Providence, Beat 13, Rev. Homer Carroll officiating. Pallbearers were Willie Easterling, Jim Burnett, Elgie Blankenship, Wayland Vernon and Charles Collins.

Surviving are one son and one daughter. Father, Walter L. (Scott) Collins, two brothers and three sisters. J. Mell Martin & Sons were in charge.

FOOTBALL FRIDAY NIGHT

The high school boys will be meeting the strong football team from Centreville here Friday night of this week. After this game the local team will know how good it is. The Bibb County boys defeated Maplesville last Friday night 40 to 0 and have sent word to Clanton that she might expect the same treatment when they come over here. Clanton will be lucky to hold the visitors to a low score.

SCREW WORM OUTBREAK IN THIS COUNTY

The farmers have been warned this week of an outbreak of screw worm by Dr. W. L. Parrish. Continued dripping of blood from the wound is a sure indication of the screw worm, states Dr. Parrish and he suggests an equal mixture of tar and grease applied to the sore parts will act as a healing agent.

Good Folks, Good Buildings Are Community Assets

Mr. and Mrs. Freeman K. Sewell who live on Route 1, Mt. Creek, agree with Edgar A. Guest, the famous poet, on at least one line of a poem he wrote: "It takes a heap of living to make a house a home."

Up until seven years ago, the Sewells lived in town while Mr. Sewell worked at public work. This was not what they wanted—this living in a rented house and working on a salary for the other fellow. As many other families do, during those years they lived in town they dreamed of moving to a farm in the country. Their dreams were backed by action, and they did move to the farm in 1938.

This year is the first time the Sewells have felt in any way settled. They had been renting on halves and had paid an average rent of $500 each year—rent money which could have been turned to helping improve land, repair fences and buildings if one could get enough ahead to start on a place of their own. The Sewells had that chance last year, and are taking full advantage of their opportunity They are living on a brother-in-law's farm and are fixing it up just as their own through their mutual agreement.

Like many other people, when Mr. Sewell started building up his place and using his own stock and equipment, he needed to borrow money to expand his operations. Mr. Sewell knew the Farm Security Administration was a Federal Agency set up by the Department of Agriculture to make such loans to deserving low-income farmers. He also knew the FS A had a committee of three local farmers who make a thorough investigation of a man's character, his standing in his community, and his past farming experience and ability. Mr Sewell found that FSA would lend a deserving fellow enough money to start him off on his own; and that a man's honesty and willingness to work and get ahead was security as well as livestock and equipment.

With a loan of this type, repayable over a five-year period at a low rate of interest, a fellow can build up his farm, repair his fences and buildings, and grow into a better farming operation.

Mr. and Mrs. Sewell knew what they wanted to do, and they came to the Farm Security Administration for the help they needed.

"We feel we haven't progressed as far this year as we wanted to," Mrs. Sewell said. "But we know what we want to do and can't get it done fast enough. For one thing, we have rebuilt our house ourselves, and that has taken time, work and money. We want our home and our farm to be an asset to the community. We wanted a nice place to live. Just because we live in the country is no reason for us to be satisfied to live in an old run down shack. If for no other reason, we wanted an attractive, comfortable home for our children."

Only a quick glance about the Sewell home will convince you they have not been idle during the short year they have been there. The 'Heap O Living' is already taking place in this modest home built almost entirely by Mr. and Mrs. Sewell. The paint, the wallpaper, the clean curtains, and the flowers didn't just happen. Their house is a comfortable home and reflects the care and thought which has gone into it's making.

"And the farm needed building up," Mr. Sewell said. "And we wanted our place to produce good crops and be easier cultivated. We are trying to use our heads to save our feet in the future. We want to produce more stuff easier, and we are planning and working for that now. We want to produce good crops, make enough money to live comfortably and have time to enjoy being with our children and our neighbors. FSA gave us the boost over the tough spot of getting started on our own. That's what many a poor man needs—a little money, the will to work, and a lot of encouragement. Those things give a farmer a feeling of real security."

Clanton Tigers Defeat Hurt Friday Night

Chilton County High School 'Tigers' started the football season last Friday night by a decisive defeat of Hurt "Colonels" of Montgomery by a score of 12-0. The game was played on the local gridiron in about two inches of mud. Both teams were greatly handicapped by the condition of the field.

Cox scored in the first quarter after Hurt had a punt blocked by Chancellor. Clanton's second score came in the fourth period when Kennedy went over center for about ten yards and a touchdown. Hurt was outplayed by the locals throughout the game.

Friday night the "Tigers" play Centerville here, the game to start promptly at 8 o'clock.

What Farmers Think About Crop Control

In general, farmers want the Government to "step in and do something about it" if farm prices drop sharply after the war, it appears from a survey made by the U. S. Department of Agriculture in 1944 among farmers in different parts of the country.

What they think about crop controls depends to a great extent on how they estimate their own security. In the Southeast, many seem to be willing to reduce farming risks by crop controls if necessary. If the risks becomes too great, nearly 90 per cent of those interviewed in the Southeast were willing to have their crops controlled as compared with nearly three-fourths in the Corn Belt and slightly more than three-fourths in the Central Valley of California.

Segregation of newly acquired animals for three weeks or more before allowing them to join the rest of the herd is a fundamental precaution against disease outbreaks among livestock. Animals acquired from other farms and sections have been responsible for heavy losses through failure of new owners to segregate them before turning them in with the herd.

DR. W. L. PARRISH ASSURES FRIENDS HE ISN'T DEAD

Dr. W. L. Parrish, our popular Veterinarian, has been swamped with calls this week of friends who were worried over the report that he was killed last Saturday night He doesn't know who started the false rumor but he is sure that he is very much alive.

According to Dr. Parrish at the time he was supposed to have been killed he and Mrs. Parrish and daughter, Lois, were visiting in Wedowee, Ala.

Y. W. A. Met Monday Night

Monday night, September 17th, the Y.W.A. met with Mrs. Nell Rockett Powers. This was a reception meeting for the new members. There were eight new members in all. Some of these were from the Girl's Auxiliary. We are very proud to have them in the Y.W.A. and sincerely hope our Y.W.A. will continue to grow. We especially welcome Miss Mabel Camp who is our Bible Teacher in school, and we are sure she will aid in the success of this organization.

Our next meeting will be Monday, October 1st, at 7:00 p.m. in the basement of the First Baptist Church. All members be sure to attend this meeting.—Alene Johnson, Reporter.

COUNTY TRAINING SCHOOL

The many friends, both white and colored, are invited to the County Training School Sunday, September 30th, to witness and enjoy the all-day community singing. You will hear such groups as Mr. Wilson Bryant and his aggregation, Rev. B. S. Sanders, County Training School singers and others. Those coming from Clanton, may ride the City Bus from town to the school for only 20 cents one way. The first bus will leave about 11:00 a.m

You will receive your dinner on the school ground.

How Rural Areas May Get Medical Supplies

Rural communities that want to obtain medical equipment and supplies from stocks of surplus war property that are expected to be available soon are advised by the Department of Agriculture to start specific action now.

The USDA Inter-bureau Commttee on Post War Programs has prepared recommendations for a program of cooperation among he rural communities, public health agencies and surplus disposal offices.

Hospitals that have some plan through which their services are extended as widely as possible will receive preferred treatment in a disposal program.

While the final plans for a disposal program are being worked out, rural community leaders can make some headway toward obtaining surplus war equipment and supplies by requesting their State Health Department to help gather evidence in proof of need and determine the kind and amount of supplies or equipment needed.

Pare Yank Force For Japan; Government Seeks Labor Peace To Speed Reconversion Program

Refugees from terrifying U. S. fire bomb raids, these Japs return to Tokyo with meager belongings piled atop a cart.

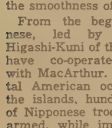
PACIFIC:
Smooth Sailing

In war or in peace, Douglas MacArthur continues to hold the spotlight in the Pacific, with the General's recent assertion that no more than 200,000 men will be needed to police Japan at the end of six months throwing Washington, D. C., into a veritable dither.

Following President Truman's declaration that it would be necessary to maintain a large postwar army and continue inductions of all men 18 to 25 years of age for two year periods, MacArthur's announcement made in Tokyo encouraged congressmen seeking a substantial reduction in the military forces while upsetting the state department.

Acting Secretary of State Dean Acheson tersely remarked that he knew nothing about the announcement, pointing up a report that MacArthur had acted without first notifying government circles. Another department official feared that the general's statement might lead to the opinion that the U. S. was planning an early withdrawal from the Pacific, leaving the Japanese to largely manage their own affairs.

On the whole, MacArthur's action tended to stir up further discussion over his alleged easy treatment of the Japanese. While some critics charged that he was being too soft with the defeated enemy, other sources declared that his policy of working through Japanese officials committed to carrying out his dictates not only prevented chaos but also averted the necessity for installing an extensive military government in the home islands.



Whereas, it was first estimated that 900,000 men might be required for occupying Japan, the figure later was shaved to 400,000 after American troops began moving into the country without encountering any opposition. MacArthur's latest forecast of only 200,000 further reflected the smoothness of the operation.

From the beginning, the Japanese, led by Premier Prince Higashi-Kuni of the imperial family, have co-operated wholeheartedly with MacArthur. With only a skeletal American occupation force on the islands, hundreds of thousands of Nipponese troops have been disarmed, while important cities and military installations have been taken over.

While MacArthur's handling of the Korean occupation drew the fire of critics flaying his retention of Japanese in key governmental and administrative positions, U. S. army officials on the spot pointed to the necessity of maintaining trained personnel for the present to maintain essential services. Further, they said, the superfluity of political faction made present unity difficult.

LABOR:
Big Stake

With continued speedy progress of the whole reconversion program with its promise of early full employment at stake, the administration set to work to settle disputes over the wage demands of four major CIO unions.

Secretary Schwellenbach

Tied up with the progress of reconversion was the administration's transitional stabilization policy, designed to curb inflationary forces before the natural law of supply and demand can be re-established to keep prices within balance.

As Secretary of Labor Schwellenbach, backed by President Harry S. Truman, set himself to settle the differences cropping up between labor and management, members of the Oil Workers union already had walked out in midwestern refineries over company refusal to grant 30 per cent wage boosts designed to bring 40-hour-per-week pay up to the same figure as the 52-hour-per-week wartime level. In striking, the oil workers turned down an offer for a 15 per cent increase.

While the oil workers' walkout menaced gas and oil stocks, the United Automobile Workers' dispute with the Big Three—General Motors, Chrysler and Ford—threatened to retard the industry's reconversion program, already well under way.

In demanding a 30 per cent wage boost, the UAW was said to be prepared to strike against one big company and imperil its market by maintaining full production in competing plants. Because General Motors is considered the pace-setter for the industry, it reportedly was singled out as the UAW's first target.

Concluding their 77th congress in Blackpool, England, British trade unions called for a 40-hour week and vacations with pay throughout industry.

A 30 per cent wage boost also figured in the United Farm Equipment and Metal Workers' demands on International Harvester, Oliver, John Deere and Allis-Chalmers, while a $2 per day raise was asked by the United Steel Workers of the great United States Steel corporation and 86 other major producers.

In pressing for the higher wage demands, all four CIO unions cited the wartime earnings of the companies involved, declaring they were sufficient to absorb larger wages until production was again stepped up to a volume basis. In this respect, the farm equipment union stated that it had appealed to the companies to produce machinery suitable for smaller tracts so as to open up a vast postwar market.

GOVERNMENT:
Changes Made

In seeking settlement of the troubled labor situation, Secretary Schwellenbach moved in with a reorganized labor department, streamlined to enable him to act with emergency power.

Modernized along lines Schwellenbach himself had recommended, the department now includes the War Labor board for arbitrating disputes; the war manpower commission for regulating employment, and the United States Employment service for guiding the jobless. In assuming control over these agencies, however, the new department chieftain said he would use them only as a last resort after ordinary procedures for settlements had bogged.

President Truman's announcement of the long-awaited labor department reorganization came at the same time that the chief executive revealed the appointments of Sen. Harold Burton (Rep., Ohio) to the Supreme court and Robert Patterson to head the war department. Considered a masterful political stroke, Burton's elevation to the nation's highest tribunal not only satisfied Republican clamor for selection of a GOP man to succeed Justice Roberts, but also left the way open for the naming of a Democratic senator from Ohio.

FARM LABOR:

Three million men, women and children will be needed during October and November to harvest the nation's 1945 bumper crops, the department of agriculture reports. Although about 2½ million farm labor placements were made during the first seven months of this year, the department's extension service stated that the shortage of farm labor is now at its tightest point of the war years.

POLITICS:
Fight's On!

With one eye on the 1946 congressional elections, Robert E. Hannegan, national chairman of the Democratic party, declared that the wartime political truce was off and his party would now square off for the President's policies with vigor.

Hannegan's promise of a resumption of knockout and drag down tactics came shortly after Republicans themselves had promised an end to the wartime love feast following the President's message to congress, which they described as bearing the old New Deal stamp.

In sounding the battle alarm, Hannegan jumped on the Republicans' criticism of the address, declaring the big issue was the President's reconversion program with its aid for the jobless or . . . "reaction and a sweep back into the economic chaos that brought upon us the boom of the '20s and its tragic aftermath."

EUROPE:
U. S. Food

Reaffirming his belief that the U. S. is morally bound to relieve as much suffering in Europe as possible, President Harry S. Truman revealed a program of extensive food, fuel and material shipments abroad during the last quarter of this year. Except for supplies received from the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration (UNRRA), recipients will be expected to pay for deliveries.

At 70 million bushels, wheat tops the list of exportable items, followed by 200 million pounds of evaporated milk; 150 million pounds of meat; 90 million pounds of dried peas and beans; 80 million pounds of dried skim milk; 60 million pounds of cheese; 25 million pounds of dry whole milk powder; 15 million pounds of condensed milk; 13 million pounds of lard, and 28,000 tons of raw sugar.

Despite extensive shipments to Europe, civilian meat supplies in the U. S. in October will increase to an annual rate of 140 lbs. per person, compared with 132 lbs. at present and 115 lbs. this spring.

In addition, Mr. Truman revealed, Europe needs hides, leather, cotton, wool, textiles, soap, farm equipment, fertilizer, seed, repair parts and machinery and medical supplies. With coal being shipped at the rate of 1,400,000 tons monthly, the U. S. expects to lay down eight million tons by the end of the year.

RUSSIA:
Seeks Loan

Declaring Russia faced extensive reconstruction to repair war damages and raise the standard of living, Premier Josef Stalin met with touring U. S. congressmen in Moscow and expressed a desire for negotiating a six billion dollar loan.

Coming on top of Britain's request of from three to six billion dollars in financial aid, Stalin's proposal was received coolly in Washington, D. C., where Senator Russell (Dem., Ga.) said that such propositions will require due deliberation rather than snap judgment to determine whether they will contribute to world peace and stability.

At the same time, it was reported that Russia had asked 600 million dollars of reparations in goods from Italy at the parley of the Big Five council of foreign ministers in London. Neither the U. S., Britain nor France advanced claims against Rome. The Russian demand came in the midst of discussion over revision of the northeastern Italian border, with Red-backed Yugoslavia asking for extensive readjustments plus the great commercial port of Trieste.

ALUMINUM:
Ask Competition

Declaring that the Aluminum Corporation of America's virtual monopoly over the metal in the U. S. retarded wartime expansion of the industry, and also slowed development of peacetime markets, the department of justice called for the split-up of the huge enterprise into a number of companies to permit freer competition.

Because Alcoa, as the corporation is known, was the only organization in the country experienced in aluminum production, wartime expansion of the industry to supply the important light metal for aircraft and other uses was seriously hampered, the department asserted. And because potential peacetime industrial users of aluminum are hesitating to utilize it at monopolist's prices, wide postwar employment of the metal is jeopardized.

In bucking the department's proposal to split up Alcoa and permit freer competition in aluminum, corporation officials declared it would destroy property value running into millions of dollars owned by thousands of small investors and religious, charitable and educational institutions and insurance companies.

ARMY SURPLUS:

Commanders in the European and Mediterranean theaters have been directed to declare 112,042 motor-powered vehicles and 11,000 trailers surplus to the army following a redeployment survey by a committee of automotive experts.

From the total number, the war department authorized the European theater to turn over 13,000 vehicles to Federal Economic administration and 3,022 in the Mediterranean to United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation.

Aid Farm Communities

Rural communities desiring medical equipment and supplies from stocks of surplus war property will soon be able to secure such items.

The surplus property act specifies that these supplies be used for the public good, and the policy of the surplus property board is to make them available to communities at prices based on need rather than on original cost.

Draft Touchy Issue For Nation's Politicoes

Fear Strong Reaction Against Military Service Even as Occupation Needs Point Up Requirement for Large Army.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, 1616 Eye Street NW, Washington, D. C.

One of the administration's hottest political potatoes is a matter that nobody likes to talk about—even the opposition. It is military service. Not universal military service next month or next year but any old kind of military service today and tomorrow, right up to election day, 1948.

The problem has many facets but it has one, awesome nub — the veteran vote. There are several danger signals which the Democratic administration is watching with some trepidation: the criticism over continuation of the draft which the President has given his complete and unqualified support; recurring complaints of discontented soldiers and their families appearing in radio, congressional, national committee and other Washington fan mail, which add up to a resounding demand for more and quicker discharges, and finally, a growing fear that the feeling which used to be called isolationism is cropping up in a new form—"anti-militarism."

The administration doesn't dare make any move to permit a drastic reduction in the armed forces now. Military experts think it will be the middle of October before any such move can be contemplated. By that time they think the danger of any serious outbreak in Japan will be over, or there will be evidence that one is coming.

Await Jap Reaction To Occupation

The full impact of the occupation of Japan will not be felt until American soldiers are deep in the heart of the country. Before that, the reaction of the Japanese people and the influence of the military leaders as opposed to the influence of the emperor, cannot be gauged. Suffice it to say that the surrender terms as well as the surrender itself came as a shock to the Japanese people.

Many Americans fail to realize that a relatively small American army landed in Japan in an area in which there were no Japanese except those permitted to be there by the authorities who arranged the surrender. There was no contact with the general population or the military. Scattered over the rest of the country is a powerful Japanese army, as yet fully armed, in defense positions, strengthened when the Japs completely reorganized their home defense against invasion after the capture of Okinawa. Disregarding the thousands of Japanese sailors now on shore, the air force, the supply troops and others, it is known that on Hokkaido there were two full divisions. (A Jap division is between 15,000 and 20,000 men.) On Honshu there were 44 divisions and 7 brigades (a brigade is roughly half a division). On Kyushu 14 divisions and 7 brigades.

It is estimated that we would have 500,000 men in the islands by the middle of September. That is against a Japanese army (not counting the sailors, airmen and others) of well over a million. That is why there can be no sharp reduction in American troops until we know what, if anything, is cooking under the cherry trees.

And then when that question is answered we have the question of occupation. It has been estimated that to police Germany, Japan and Korea and perhaps parts of China it will take 1,200,0000 men.

Where will they come from? Where will 300,000 come from for that matter? Already a sharp reversion against military service has begun and if it follows the curve after the last war recruitment on a basis of voluntary enlistment is hopeless. At its low point the army after World War I numbered 130,000 men. I well recall the story of one of my officer friends whose regiment, stationed in the middle west, dropped so low that men themselves voted to spend their post exchange funds for a recruiting campaign. With a band and a company he paraded the countryside for a week. He got just three recruits and two of those were rejected as physically unfit.

As one officer remarked bitterly to me: "How are you going to get a man to join the army for $21 a month (the basic peacetime pay) when Uncle Sam will pay him $25 a week for not working at all?" (He referred to the unemployment compensation called for in pending legislation.)

That's the position the administration is in when the cry to end the draft arises.

Vets' Attitude Bears Watching

The complaints from the veterans is another matter. They are not so much concerned over who gets into the army as who gets out. A lot of them are marking time right now, later a lot will be sent overseas in the boresome jobs of policemen.

Why shouldn't I get out now and get a start in business?

Why shouldn't my husband come back and support me in the manner to which I have been unaccustomed since he joined up?

Why shouldn't my boy get back to school where he belongs?

Why shouldn't my sweetheart be allowed to come home and marry me like he said he would?

And some day sonny and daddy and lover will come back. And they'll join a veteran's organization and they will vote at the polls; ah, there's the rub!

Now we come to the third point which is really the most insidious, the one which has to be handled the most delicately. We may have learned in this country that an ocean is no longer a barrier against the enemy. But we know there is another barrier which separates our maritime states from the heartland of the nation bordering the Mississippi flood plain. That part of the country forgot its so-called isolationism and threw its whole heart into the war. But the war is over — on paper anyhow. It is time to put the hand back to the plough again. There is need of stout arms and strong backs in the fields, and though Japs and the Germans may require watching, why not let George do it?

That is a natural feeling and clever politicans would have little trouble in turning it to account, by raising the cry of militarism, of imperialism and all the other isms which men whose beans are their castles and whose meadows are their empires, dislike. Such a sentiment could be turned against one administration as well as another but it so happens that the middle west is naturally somewhat Republican in its leanings normally and the Democrats are now in the saddle.

One very keen political observer who has watched the way of the voter for many years said to me the other day: "If there were a Presidential election tomorrow Truman would win it." And when you consider the matter coldly there are good reasons for the statement. The Republicans have had one healthy issue after another knocked out from under them. Truman has given business its head, he has sat on the OPA, he has released one control after another, he has most solicitously deferred to congress, he is on the way to break up the war agencies and get the business of government back into the old line departments.

Such is the picture as of today—all clear except for one little cloud in the sky, not much bigger than a serviceman's hand, but there is thunder and lightning in that cloud and if the circumstances were such that its bolts of wrath were directed at the administration it would not even take, say a Stassen, to win the Presidential race in a walk.

By next February—barring unexpected developments—all soldiers in Europe except those in the army of occupation and the minimum required to dispose of the army's surplus property will have been returned to the United States, Maj. Gen. C. P. Gross, chief of transportation, said in an announcement by the war department.

Return of American forces in the Pacific will be completed next June, according to present estimates. More than 1,750,000 men are scheduled for return from the Pacific theaters, while approximately 2,000,000 remain to be returned from Europe. Some 150,000 other troops also are to be returned from other overseas theaters.

T-Sgt. Lonza Williams from the European Theatre of Operations returned home last week after receiving his discharge from the Army. He is now with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Williams of Route Three, and his wife, the former Maxine Thompson and their little son of Columbus, Ga.

Herbert Poole F 2-C is now with the Spdc Distribution Center on Guam, where he has been for three months. Friends who wish to write him may secure his address from his mother. Mrs. W. M. Poole, Clanton, Ala.

Maurice Wyatt F C 3-C is now in the South Pacific serving on the USS KENNEBAGO He has been in the service 18 months, this is his second trip to sea, and without a doubt he hopes that it is his last one. We hope that he will be home for good soon.

S-Sgt. Claude Coppedge, husband of the former Kathryn Tyus of Billingsley, has been awarded the Bronze Star for outstanding services. He wears the good Conduct Ribbon with two battle stars.

Sgt. Coppedge is with the Fourth Emergency Rescue Squadron on Iwo Jima.

AWARDED THE PURPLE HEART FOR WOUNDS RECEIVED IN ACTION

In appropriate ceremonies at the Naval Repair Base, New Orleans, La., Odis R. Smith, seaman second class, Route Two, was awarded the Purple Heart Medal for wounds received in action aboard the USS INTREPIR at Okinawa, the Navy announced recently.

Smith was at his battle station manning a .20 millimeter anti-aircraft gun when he saw the suicide plane coming at the ship.

"It looked like it was going right down my throat," said Smith.

"Actually, it hit about thirty feet from where I was working. I was knocked out by the explosion and was wounded by shrapnel or flying debris," he stated further.

This was not the first time the USS INTREPID had been a victim of suicide planes. She was hit twice by the Kamikezes while operating near Formosa. At Okinawa she was hit by a suicide plane and a bomb.

LOCAL BOY WRITES FROM TOKYO BAY

Mr. Joe Smith recently received a very interesting letter from his brother, Ernest G. Smith, WT 2-C, which he passed on to us for reading.

Ernest is with Admiral William F. Halsey's Third Fleet, and serving on the USS SAINT PAUL, under the command of Captain E. H. von Heimburg, anchored in Toyko Bay on the second of September, where they were present at the time of the peace signing.

The SAINT PAUL has made quite a record for itself and the men who serve on it are just regular guys and proud of it.

Smith says, "We joined the Third Fleet on July 1st and have been laying off the coast of Japan ever since The Fleet raided the Japanese homeland twice after we joined it. The SAINT PAUL was the last ship to fire on the homeland before the Japs surrendered."

The ship has a grand record, which will go down in history, and the men have some exciting experiences, some of which they will be anxious to relate to their families and friends, and some they will probably want to forget. At any rate, we hope the members of thi crew will be home soon and have a chance to tell all they know, personally, to their friends, if they choose to do so.

Horace Baker, Pharmacist Mate second class, USNR, aboard the USS WAUKESH, in Tokyo Bay, landed Marines from that ship to occupy the strategic Yokosuka naval base at the entrance to Tokyo Bay.

This ship and five other vessels were the first to land seaborne troops in the Japanese homeland.

Sgt. James S. Patterson of this city, has recently been assigned to the 529th Air Service Group which has been named as part of the European Occupational Air Force.

In addition to the Good Conduct Medal, Sgt. Patterson has been awarded the EAME Campaign Ribbon with One Battle Participation Star. He has been overseas since January, 1944.

His wife, Mrs. Reeva Lee Smith Patterson resides at 507 So. Lawrence Street, Mobile, Ala.

It's easy to build a menu around potatoes, which are plentiful now. Try them in a casserole dish with a little sausage or cheese. Use plenty of salt, and perhaps a dash celery salt for variety.

HOW STATE FARMERS CAN INCREASE COTTON INCOME

There is a good chance for Alabama cotton growers to make more money this fall when they pick their cotton than they might otherwise. If they'll do a good job of picking they'll be paid for it. For example, economists point out that if cotton is 15-16ths then the growers will get $12.50 for keeping the grade up to strict low middling instead of low middling. Likewise, on cotton with a staple of an inch, the premium he would get for strict low middling over low middling would amount to $13.50 a bale and if it were 1 and 1-16 inch, he would get $15.25.

Much Water Needed For Milk, Egg

Water is so commonplace that its importance is frequently overlooked, say C. [illegible] Teague and John Ivey, Extension Dairy and Poultry Specialists, declaring that "water is required for proper growth and maintenance of all animal bodies and for the production of milk and eggs."

Providing an adequate supply of fresh, clean water is an important step in keeping livestock and poultry healthy and in securing increased production of milk and eggs.

"A dairy cow will drink from 10 to 15 gallons of water a day if the water is fresh and she can get it when she wants it," declares Mr. Teague.

"Many dairymen only provide their milking herds with water twice a day and often the cows do not have time to drink all they want," he said. "Providing milking herds with enough good drinking water has actually increased production of milk as much as ten per cent."

Laying hens and growing chickens need plenty of clean water which should be placed near the mash hoppers, Mr. Ivey points out. Fresh water should be supplied at least twice each day and the water container should be scrubbed thoroughly each day.

COUNTY HEALTH OFFICER URGES PROTECTION AGAINST DIPHTHERIA

Most diseases occur in cycles and most of them have a habit of coming at certain times and this is the time that we expect a high incidence in diphtheria, measles, mumps and scarlet fever for the reason that people are thrown together more closely and unfound carries go to the school possibly for the first time and although they are not ill themselves, they give the infection germ to their associates.

The peoples in this county have had good fortune so far in not having a real epidemic of the above mentioned diseases and where these diseases have failed to occur, carelessness has crept in, in not having the children protected.

To remove stains on bathtubs and sinks moisten a good cleansing powder with a commercial bleaching agent. Rub this over the darkened surface and let stand until the stain is removed. Then wash off with water.

Your Health Department feels that it is justified in saying the occurence of diphtheria is at its peak around the third year of life, so let us urge that you have your child under school age between six months and six years of age protected against diphtheria An ounce of prevention is equal to a pound of cure or disappointment.

Diphtheria shots will be given every Thursday afternoon and Saturday morning at the Chilton County Health Department and every Friday afternoon at the Maplesville office. In rural districts where there are fifteen or more children to be protected, if the community will communicate with us we will be glad to give them this service.

Sincerely,
E. M. MOORE, M. D.,
County Health Dept

COOKING CABBAGE LOSE VITAMIN "C"

Tests at several state experiment stations show that cooked cabbage, held over hot water an hour to keep it warm for serving, loses 70 to 80 per cent of the Vitamin C it had when freshly cooked, and in 2 hours loses 90 per cent. As freshly cooked cabbage contains only about half the Vitamin C of raw cabbage, the man who kept dinner waiting got very little C when he finally ate his cabbage.

Cooked cabbage held in the refrigerator 2 or 3 days and then re-heated does not lose as much C as that kept standing on the stove for an hour or two. When warmed up after refrigeration, it contains 24 to 32 per cent of the vitamin C it had when fresh and raw.

Spading in grass and weeds while they are in vigorous and green growth will add organic material to the garden soil and enrich it. Green material decomposes and is incorporated in the soil more rapidly than dry, dead grass

ONE year ago Darryl Zanuck, of 20th Century-Fox, selected five comparatively unknown young players and predicted that within 12 months each would be a star. He was right. Jeanne Crain, Dick Haymes and Vivian Blaine are currently starring in the new technicolor musical, "State Fair" — though they don't seem exactly stellar material. June Haver is seen in "Where Do We Go From Here?" with Fred MacMurray, will be seen with Betty Grable in "The Dolly Sisters." William Eythe played opposite Tallulah Bankhead in "A Royal Scandal," and will be seen in a starring role in "The House on Ninety-Second Street," the F. B. I.-atomic bomb news-drama.

Why the Dancing Bear Clawed His Pal, the Keeper

Weird Tale Emanates From Underground; Puts on Act to Fool Nazis.

AMSTERDAM.—The true story of why the famous dancing bear at the Rotterdam zoo suddenly turned on his keeper, threw him to the ground and clawed and bit him has just been told. One of the weirdest tales yet to emanate from the underground.

The director of the Rotterdam zoo was Erie Klant who took the name of Hagenbeck when his mother, after the death of his father, married into the famous circus family.

Because he had lived in Germany since childhood the Nazis in 1940 ordered Klant into the German army. Twice he was saved by city officials who said his services were essential. But they warned him that if the Germans asked a third time they would probably have to release him.

Klant had a daring idea.

He arranged a special matinee at the zoo. Everything went smoothly until the famous act of the dancing bear. Klant had worked with the bear for years. It was his favorite performing animal.

Something Happened.

But this time something happened. The tame, usually affectionate bear turned on Klant. It threw him to the ground, clawed him fiercely and bit him on the foot.

"It was the most difficult act I ever performed," Klant said. "The bear did not want to bite me. I had to make him. I also had to make him stop at the right moment. That could have been difficult but my bear was well-trained. An actor could not have done better."

On his way to the hospital Klant deliberately dug into his wounds with an indelible pencil. The lacerations became infected and for months he remained in the hospital. Finally the Germans sent him to a military hospital in Amsterdam.

He managed to stay there for several months more by another ruse.

Butts Against Wall.

He wrapped his head in a towel and beat it against a wall until he lapsed into unconsciousness. The Germans were unable to figure out the strange high fever and apparent concussion.

Finally, he escaped from the hospital. For eight months he hid with his wife Mia in the attic of a house. Because it would have been dangerous if the neighbors had heard a man's voice he spoke only in whispers. When he finally got out, his voice was almost too hoarse to be understood.

Now he is going back into animal training—but as Erie Klant, rather than Erie Hagenbeck.

Woman's Call Gets State Police in Another State

COLUMBUS, N. J. — Mrs. Alfreda Heck, a farmer's wife, said she had quite a time getting state police at Columbus to report a heifer missing from her farm in nearby Springfield township.

Trooper Joseph Lyons said Mrs. Heck told him she asked the operator to get her state police at Columbus. She got a sergeant who asked her where she lived. Mrs. Heck told him at Chambers corner and Hancock road on route 29.

"I've been in Columbus a long time and I never heard of those streets," the sergeant said. "What police do you want, anyhow?"

"State police at Columbus," she told him.

"Lady," the sergeant asked, "where are you calling from?"

"Springfield township, New Jersey," Mrs. Heck answered.

"This is state police at Columbus, Ohio," he said.

Boy Hung by Toes, Tied Naked, Brutally Beaten

DUNDEE, SCOTLAND. — Twelve-year-old Norman Wilson testified in High court that his foster parents hung his 10-year-old brother, Harry, by his toes from a clothes wringer, pulled his lips with pliers, tied him naked to a chair and beat him, and locked him in a dark cupboard.

The foster parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Walton, are charged with cruelty to the two boys, who were put in their care last year by the Fife county council. Both deny the charge.

Norman said that on one occasion both boys were beaten "for saying the same prayer over and over again."

"We only knew one prayer," he told the court.

3 Choose Death To Imprisonment

They Were Caught When the Japs Invaded Moro.

NEW YORK. — Three American civilians chose death to imprisonment when the Japanese invaded the rich Moro island citadel of Jolo on Christmas eve, 1941.

Most prominent perhaps was J. Scott McCormick, an American educator who spent many years in the Philippines and played an important role in establishing American educational methods there. In 1941 McCormick gave up his government post in Manila and came to Jolo to help educate the Moros. He was made superintendent of schools. The Boy Scout movement was a pet interest of his and McCormick became Boy Scout commissioner for Sulu and Mindanao.

When it was plain the Japs intended landing a strong force on Jolo, Moro teachers implored their American "superintendent" to run away. They promised to sail him to a distant island where he could hide among friends.

But McCormick refused. On the day of the Japanese landing he dressed himself in full Scout regalia. Then he went to Jolo high school and set his papers in order. Again teachers begged him to leave but the superintendent said he would not desert his post.

He left the schoolhouse with a few Moro friends and returned to his home. It was there that the Japanese soldiers found him.

When they broke in the door they found McCormick standing proud and erect, without a weapon. His khaki Boy Scout uniform which he had chosen for his last hours proved a death warrant. The Japanese riddled him with bullets.

Perry Macklan, an American planter, met death quite differently.

When invasion became imminent, Macklan provided his wife and children with food, and sent them to an old Moro stronghold in the mountains. He stayed behind.

Two days later the Japanese sent two small landing craft loaded with soldiers to Macklan's place. As they streamed ashore they were met with a fusillade of small arms fire. Six Nipponese died before Macklan was killed.

The third American, Antoni Frakian, also a planter, never left the streets of Jolo. When the first Japanese soldier approached him, Frakian spit in his eye. He was immediately shot.

Heroic Pup Gives Life To Save Two From Fire

CHICAGO. — Edwin Lederer, 27, of 4245 Augusta blvd., owes his life and that of his 17-month-old daughter, Alvaline, to their pet collie puppy, Doo-doo.

When fire spread through the rear of the three-story brick building, Lederer was awakened by the dog's barking and smelled smoke. He snatched the child from her crib and ran down the front stairway to safety from his top-floor apartment. Eight other persons escaped from the building.

Lederer then attempted to re-enter the burning building and rescue Doo-doo, but was restrained by firemen.

Later the dog's body was found among charred debris on the back porch. He apparently died of suffocation.

Lederer, whose wife Laverne, 22, gave birth to a girl recently at the Illinois Masonic hospital, said:

"We're sure going to miss that puppy. He was only three months old, but he saved our lives."

Hires Taxi to Take Him To River Bank for Suicide

NEW YORK. — A man who identified himself as Elmer Sayre, 21, a discharged veteran, was held for observation at Bellevue hospital recently after hiring a cab to take him to the East river so he could jump in.

Cabbie William Donegan said Sayre hopped into his taxi and said:

"Drive me to the East river. I want to jump in." Then his fare asked him, Donegan said, "Is the East river good and deep?"

Donegan said, "Sure," as he pulled up in front of a police station.

Wave of Nazi Suicides Follows Potsdam Decree

NEW YORK. — The French radio, quoting the Stockholm Tidningen, said publication of the Potsdam communique in Germany has been followed by an "enormous wave" of suicides.

The broadcast said 1,200 persons took their lives in Berlin in one week.

Leipzig had 600 suicides, Hamburg 458, Frankfurt "a larger figure" and Cologne 300.

THE ISRAELITES IN A FOREIGN LAND

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 47:1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT—Lord, thou hast been our dwelling-place in all generations.—Psalm 90:1.

Preparation of a great nation takes time. God wanted Israel to have opportunity to develop from a family to a nation so He arranged for them to have a place of refuge and of abundant provision while they grew. He had already made ready for them by sending Joseph into Egypt, and now the whole family of Jacob moved down.

Jacob's fears had been overcome by the vision of God (Gen. 46:1-4), in which he was assured that this was the outworking of God's purpose to make of him a "great nation." The promises to him and his forefathers were now in process of fulfillment. The man who believes God is privileged to see His work. We find the family of Jacob

I. In Egypt, but Separated (vv. 1-6).

As he presented the representatives of his brethren to Pharaoh, Joseph made known that he had settled them in the land of Goshen, a favored spot well suited to their life as shepherds.

It is worthy of observation that while they were now in Egypt there was no thought of mingling with the Egyptians. They were to be a separated people living in a strange land. Only thus could the purity of the nation be maintained and a people suited for God's service be kept and made ready.

The application to the life of the Christian lies right at hand. In Scripture Egypt is a type of the world, where fleshly appetites are satisfied and where strange gods are worshiped. The Christian is to "come out from among them" and to be separate (II Cor. 6:14-18).

The tendency in our time is to minimize the importance of separation from worldliness and to regard those who preach and practice it as being narrow and old-fashioned. Say what you will, it is a fact that worldliness has robbed the Church of its spiritual power and of its real testimony for Christ.

As a matter of fact, the Christian is not narrow. He is as broad as the counsels of God, and the worldling who boasts of his broad-mindedness has often mistaken superficial flatness for real broadness.

II. Blessed, but Blessing (vv. 7:10).

Jacob and his family received many mercies at the hands of Pharaoh and his people, but they were not in the land just to be blessed but also to bring a blessing. The patriarch Jacob was brought by Joseph into the presence of Pharaoh. That noble son was not ashamed to bring his aged Hebrew father into the presence of the king. There he gave witness concerning his life. But he did something else—he blessed Pharaoh.

That scene speaks volumes to us as Christians. We are not of the world but we are in the world (John 17:15-17). We are to be a separated people for the glory of God, but that does not mean that we are not to bring blessing to those round about us. We are in the world not just to enjoy ourselves, but to make Christ known to others—to touch lives that are needy and saddened and sin-sick.

It is also of interest that the blessing of Jacob was given to the man on the throne. We are apt to think of the poor and the underprivileged as needing the gospel and forget that the rich man in the house on the hill may be the most spiritually hungry in town.

III. Preserved, but Preparing (vv. 11, 12).

God sent His chosen people down into Egypt that they might not perish in the famine. He wanted them kept and nourished while they grew into the great people which He ultimately led out toward the Promised Land.

That was important, for had they not been preserved the promise of God could not have been fulfilled. But all the time they were being prepared for the great day of deliverance and blessing which was to come.

Applying the truth once again to the Christian believer, it is not enough just to be safe in Christ. That is precious but it is not enough; there must be growth in grace.

Some Christians are saved and kept all right, but it is just a matter of being "preserved" and put on a shelf. They are of no earthly use unless it is to be exhibited, and that kind of a Christian is not really worth showing off.

Then, too, some of the saints are preserved but not in sweetness. They are evidently preserved by pickling, sour, unpleasant people sometimes called "vinegar saints." God deliver us from that kind of preservation! May we be kept in such a way that we are ready to witness for God!

What One Language Do All Speak?

YOU KNOW the answer to that one. They all speak the silent language of earth and weather—of crops and stock—of planting time and harvest. For they are farmers — blood brothers the world over.

Today, many of the farmers of other lands aren't doing so well. Their lands have been mined, fought over, ravaged. Their stock has been butchered. Their farm buildings burned. They have no seed to plant the soil.

They desperately need your help.

And you can give your help—through the dollars you give to your Community War Fund.

Those dollars you wring from the soil, and give to a great and worthy cause, help more than the farmers of other lands. They help farmers' sons — and other men's sons—endure the tedium of prison camps. They help provide the blessing of entertainment to service people throughout the world. And they help solve war problems right here in your own community.

The dollars you give to your Community War Fund go farther than any dollars you're apt to put anywhere else. And this year—they need to go farther than ever before. So give again—and generously—won't you?

FOLKS & THINGS

ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

The Mayor was on our coat tail bright and early last Thursday morning as soon as he had seen the column. He wanted to know if we were smart enough to suggest a remedy for the traffic congestion in our fair city. And of course, the Mayor was right. What is the solution? Is it a one-hour parking limit? Thereby giving the other fellow a chance to stop for an hour and attend to his business. Is it parking lots around the business section—and, by-the-way, where are we going to get the parking lots? Or maybe its parking meters. Now listen to the howls go up. Well, its the sixty-four dollar question—you answer it.

What's the matter with the County property adoining Mr. Jess Motes? That would make an ideal parking lot and take quite a load off the streets. No time at all hardly would be required to transpose this property into a parking lot. If later the county got ready to build it would be a simple matter to stop parking and start construction. Another lot very convenient if it could be rented by the City is the lot across the street from the Baptist Church. It is not so large but still it would accomodate quite a few cars and trucks and help the situation that much.

Anyway, what the City Fathers want is constructive criticism—not just criticism. If you think you have a solution talk to the Mayor. He is always ready to listen to suggestions.

When is squirrel season open, anyway? We were talking to a prominent business man the other day and beyond a doubt he was eating squirrel dumplings, or should we say squirrel with dumplings. The season we believe opens on October first and when he told us it was chicken we believe he was either pulling our leg or the squirrel's. Come to think of it, he was pulling both our legs at the same time.

One of the most, if not the most, impressive funerals ever held was held last Friday afternoon when the last remains of Mr. J. Mell Martin was laid to rest in the local cemetery. Rev. S. J. Ezell, long time friend of the deceased, paid last homage to a dear friend. He chose his scripture from the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew: "And he shall set the sheep on His right hand, put the goats on the left. Then shall the King say unto them on His right, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. For I was hungry and you gave me meat; I was thirsty and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger and ye took me in; naked and ye clothed me; I was sick and ye visited me. And the King answered and said unto them: Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as you have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, you have done it unto me." Truly, that was the life of J. Mell Martin. Flowers lined the isles and overflowed the corridor—tokens of last respect to a lovable character. To our certain knowledge, Mr. Martin has given away a fortune. In all his life he never considered the cost if in the end a human being was better served in his giving. Accumulating money, or a love for material things, was not one of his weaknesses. He loved life and he loved his fellowman. Peace and rest be to the ashes of our good friend, J. Mell Martin.

Seen while strolling — Judge Victor (Vic) Heard leaning on the post at the Big Four corner. Looking, for some reason, mad as a wet hen. . . . Another Judge. This time Mr. Middleton and that fancy gold-handled walking cane. . . .Now that Tom Johnston has fixed that Standard Sign and Millard has fixed his sign at the Greyhound Station, wonder why Pat Hamilton don't put the needed bulbs in that sign of his at The E. L. Klinner Company. . . .believe the City Grill is doing the biggest business we ever saw it do Crowded all the time. . . .Greely Powell and Hughie Carroll are doing themselves a nice business also at Tom Burdette's old stand. . . . better stop and get the mail. Yep, just as we thought, there's that "request for payment" again. Wonder what those people do with all the money they try to collect. . . .Wonder how Sunset Polk is? Hope she's resting now. She's suffered lots. Wish for her the best. . . .Mr. Polk ought to be getting some new cars in right away. . . .Wonder what the Mayor is doing in the Laundry, working late? We didn't know a Mayor had any work to do. . . .(Boy, are we kidding'. . . .Bet Clanton Cash Store is the prettiest store in town. Come on "Chick," Cecil, Adolph and Paul, Clyde and all the rest of you guys and gals, wanta bet?. . . .Think Joe Minshew and Mr. Farley did a good thing when they advertised these Sunday closings. Gives their help a needed rest. Wish newspapermen got to rest sometimes. . . .We rest like Bankers. Close the front doors and get in the back and work up a storm. 'Course Bankers get paid for theirs. . . .Guess we better cross the street and go down by Dock Levines and Julian Evans and the Yellow Front Store and S. A. Jones. . . .Can you imagine Hardware stores not having a pocket knife? We didn't know there was a war on. . . . Well, back to the office. Think we made the rounds. Which reminds us of an incident at a local Cafe: The Patron went in and seated himself at the table and got all fixed for a nice, hot breakfast. The waiter stopped at his table and asked if he liked sausage and eggs. He replied that he did not, he wanted this and that, and some more of that. Well, then, said the waiter, "If you don't like sausage and eggs, for you, breakfast is over." And about that Dixie Cafe, we think we mentioned last week that from now on they're open all night; Foshee and Son operating.

BRIDE ELECT HONORED

Miss Betty Brown of Thorsby was honoree on Wednesday afternoon, September 19th, at a miscellaneous shower, given at the home of Mrs. A. N. Laurell with Mrs. Agnes L. Abrams as joint hostess.

The guests were received by Misses Mary Evelyn Vines and Billy Ann Parrish, bridesmaids, and Miss Naomi Turnquist. Misses Sara Dean Smith and Melba Studdard, bridesmaids, were in charge of the gifts. Miss Marjorie Bentley, maid of honor, kept the bride's book. Mrs. Imogene L. Ray furnished piano selections throughout the afternoon.

The hostesses were assisted in serving by Misses Eloise Piper, Loretta Petersen and Jewel Rollins, former school mates of the honoree, and Mrs. Marie Reagan.

Standards of gladioli and vases of asters with fern and garden flowers were used throughout the rooms.

The lace-covered table was centered with a reflected center piece of garden flowers and lighted with yellow tapers in silver holders.

A salad plate was served to the fifty guests who called

JEMISON HIGH SCHOOL NEWS

BILLIE OAKES REPORTER

The second week of school went by very successfully with an attendance record of a high percentage.

The need of learning to treat his fellowman as he himself would like to be treated, and learning to do things the easier and better way, is being emphasized in the Jemison FFA. They are learning to put everyone on an equal basis among themselves and to be great tillers of the soil. The FFA members haven't elected their officers for this term, but have had a meeting and planned to buy a new desk and chair for the teacher. The initiation committee has set Wednesday night, September 26, the date for initiating the new members. We are expecting a large number of new members this term.

There were fifteen teachers and three students of our school who attended the Recreation Institute in Clanton last week. School was dismissed forty minutes early so they would have plenty of time to get there.

Barbara Hayman, a student of the senior class of nineteen hundred forty-four, now a student of Auburn, visited the school Tuesday of last week. All of her friends and teachers were very proud to see her and they are glad to know she is making a good record at Auburn.

We had a very interesting chapel program Friday of last week. Mary Catherine McNill playd a piano solo "Polonais in A Flat Major," and Mary Edna Reynolds played a piano solo "Song of India." A quartet of four students: Betty Gothard, Hanson Leach, Norris Vickery and Gwendolyn Vickery with Audrey Gothard as pianist sang a beautiful number called, "I Live In Glory." We are proud of these students.

The P.-T. A. will hold its first meeting Wednesday afternoon at four o'clock. Provisions have been made so buses can bring parents to the meeting. We hope to have a large crowd present.

The principal reports that before any boy can play on the ball teams he must pass on three subjects, as required in all schools. Remember, boys, school work comes before athletics.

We hope to keep our school going in a successful way, so let each student help by doing his part.

Alabama is one of the 18 states represented in an agricultural photographic exhibit on display at the Smithsonian Institute. The photographs were made by George Ackerman, United States Extension Service, Wash.

Farmers have produced another record crop of turkeys this year in an attempt to meet the increased demand for turkey meat — 44,150,000 birds or 22 per cent more than the previous record crop of last year and 44 per cent larger than the (1937-41) average.

FACTS

about the

INCOME TAX AMENDMENT

to be voted on October 2

Two questions only will be decided by the outcome of the vote October 2 on the Income Tax Amendment:

1 "SHALL THE OLD BONDED DEBT (CARPET BAG BONDS) BE PAID FROM THE PRESENT SURPLUS?"

2 "WHAT SHALL BE DONE WITH FUTURE REVENUES FROM THE STATE INCOME TAX, AMOUNTING TO ABOUT $6,500,000 YEARLY?"

A "YES" Vote for the Amendment Will Do These Things That Benefit All Citizens of Alabama

1 Continue present Homestead Exemptions and lock them into the State Constitution, where they can't be repealed without a vote of the people.

2 Pay the State's old $8,500,000 Carpet-Bag debt that has been running for 107 years at a total cost in interest of $60,000,000 — for which the State has received nothing back.

3 Give our children better educational advantages — and our teachers a deserved raise in pay. $1,750,000 goes for this.

4 Provide an increase of $1,750,000 to State Welfare — for Old Age Assistance, family relief, etc. This will be nearly doubled by Federal matching, making the total sum approximately $3,000,000.

5 Permit better care of our insane, increase Public Health Service — vitally important to every Alabama family.

A "NO" Vote on the Amendment Means

That future income tax revenues will pile up and lie idle while State needs keep on growing, until the next legislature decides what to do with them.

More Ad Valorem Tax Reductions Will Give No Benefit to Average Citizen

If two years hence, the legislature should decide to use income tax revenues to extend homestead exemptions, this won't help the average citizen—the small property owner, the small farmer. Only big property-owners could benefit. Why? Because more then 95% of all farm home owners and almost 90% of city home owners assess their homesteads at less than the $2,000 homestead exemption now allowed. The exemption applies only to the State (65c) tax, not to county or district millages.

Let's get the benefits of taxes we now pay. Let's don't put off until tomorrow what should be done today. The voters passed the income tax—they have every right to amend it and order those benefits the "Yes" votes will bring.

Kathleen Norris Says:

When a Serviceman Wants a Divorce

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

If he comes home greet him affectionately, with the usual home meals and friendly gatherings, and as soon as you are alone, ask him in so many words, "What is this about a divorce, Joe?"

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

WHEN your service husband writes you from some far-away place that he wants a divorce, the best thing to do is to ignore his request. Or, if you want casually to mention it, tell him you wish to wait until he comes home. Then go on with letters as usual. When he comes home greet him affectionately, with the usual home-cooked meals and friendly gatherings, and as soon as you are alone ask him in so many words, "what is this about a divorce, Joe?"

If you keep it simple and friendly you'll get the truth out of him easily. He'll either mumble in embarrassment that gosh, he doesn't know why he wrote that letter, or he'll tell you: there is a girl in Belgium; French, English, Russian—perhaps American. She is pretty and sweet and 19 and gee, is she in love with him!

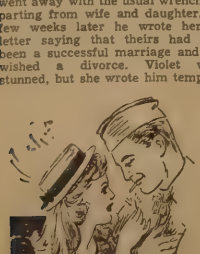
Your part now is maternal and calm. Is she coming to America, Joe? Well, eventually, of course. And you'll be married here? Well, you see, they haven't gotten that far.

Perhaps they are going to send Joe to the Pacific for occupation duty, in which case your argument must be that it would be folly to get a divorce, send for Vera and undertake the maintenance of you, your child, and his new wife, to say nothing of her traveling expenses. Ask him to write her that everything must wait until Joe comes back for good.

Joy of Getting Home.

This reasonable attitude must win, for Joe won't be too anxious, especially in the pleasantness of getting home, to break off all his old associations and friendships, as well as his relations with you. After all, it isn't likely that Vera is going to offer him a good job in some other city, and support him until he is self-supporting again.

If, on the other hand, he is discharged from service, then help him in every way you can to get re-established, without dwelling on his proposed change. Be as cheerful and natural as you can. Remember that thousands of these men come back whole in body, but sadly twisted in mind, and that only time can cure them. A few months — perhaps even a few weeks of home life, of good meals, of movies and malted milks and swims and contacts with old friends, will be all the cure Joe needs. He will suddenly come to his senses, and although he may never apologize, never say that he feels himself a fool to have written that letter, he will be only too glad to sink back into his old normal, happy, American ways.



Violet's case is a little different. Her husband, in the service two years, has only recently left America. He came home after about six months and told her he was tired of her, he did not think that theirs was a successful marriage. He stayed home a few days, grew affectionate and kindly again, and went away with the usual wrench of parting from wife and daughter. A few weeks later he wrote her a letter saying that theirs had not been a successful marriage and he wished a divorce. Violet was stunned, but she wrote him temperately, saying she was sorry he felt so, and including the usual news of herself and the baby.

Kent then began to send her long analytical letters explaining in just what psychological and physiological ways she had failed him. He said he had never in their six years together been really happy. He looked upon the whole thing as a failure. There was no other woman; he would always send Violet money; but he would stop every cent of allowance right now if she did not at once start for Reno.

Don't Pay Much Attention.

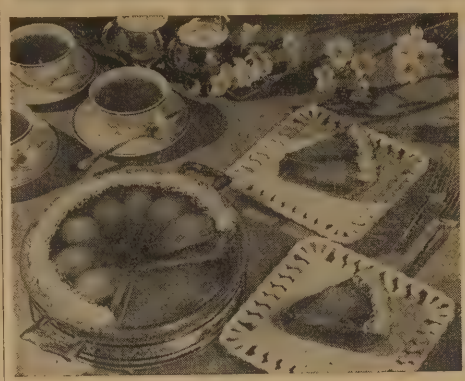
Instead, Violet wrote to me, and I advised her, as I advise all women in this fix, to go steadily on without paying much attention to such letters. I suggested that she write less often, but keep her occasional letters pleasant and ordinary.

War is the real trouble, not these difficulties ending in "logical," and yet without a trace of logic about them! Perhaps Kent was being bitten from head to foot by tiny, penetrating gnats. Perhaps his company had a bad cook, and he was having indigestion. Perhaps his top sergeant or young first lieutenant was puffed up with power — arrogant, inexperienced, unreasonable. Perhaps he had blisters on his feet or prickly heat on his neck. Perhaps he's just bitterly homesick, bitterly lonely, feeling bitterly that Violet was having it pretty soft, in a cool clean fresh house, with good books, clear skies, plenty of ice and watermelon and the right to go to a movie or a dance whenever she wants to. There's a touch of the sadist in us all; lonely, a dreary barracks life sometimes brings it out.

"She is pretty and sweet and 19. . ."

HE'LL GET OVER IT

The misery and loneliness of war do strange things to a man. Many happily married soldiers and sailors who have been away for two or three years somehow decide that the wives they once thought were the loveliest women on earth are no longer satisfactory. Frequently they have met some younger girl while on occupation duty in Europe or the Pacific area. She is flattered by attention, not used to luxuries, so she makes a big hit with the lonely serviceman.



Presently he is persuading himself that his wife at home is not so much, compared with this foreign woman. He eventually gets up nerve to ask his wife for a divorce so that he can marry this new love. He has to think up some arguments to justify his actions, so he tells his wife how "unhappy" his married life was, and that she never really understood him.

Miss Norris tells wives who receive these heart-breaking letters to try to ignore them, or at least to take them as lightly as possible. A weary serviceman, far away, enduring discomfort and abuse, can easily convince himself that he wants a divorce. It isn't that he actually has stopped loving his wife, but that the girl at hand is so sweet, so comforting, and his wife is so far away.

BRING YOUR OWN SILVER

There was a time when table silver was so precious that even the wealthy did well if they had enough to go around for the family. People of fashion who were invited out to dine sent an attendant ahead with a knife, fork and spoon, and their position at the table was determined by the quality of their table utensils. If your flatware was pewter you would have been seated below the salt containers — which meant in no uncertain terms that you were of low position or modest means!

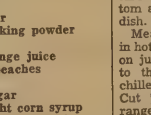
Colorful Fruit Desserts

We may like meat and vegetables prepared the same way day after day, but there's at least one type of food in which we like plenty of variety. Yes, desserts, of course!



Now that the war is over and we can go back to many of our favorite foods, with rationing permitting, we'll still have to hold off on desserts that still take it easy on the sugar canister.

My advice to you, in this matter of desserts, is to concentrate on fruits, both fresh and canned. They contain sweetening and will not require too much extra sugar. Then, too, there are lots of time-saving tricks you can apply to dessert makings, like chilling them or using biscuit mixtures.

Select several of these desserts and do try them on your family. Serve them and be proud:

Peach Crunch Cake.
(Makes 1 cake, 7 by 11 inches)
¼ cup shortening
¼ cup light corn syrup
1 egg, beaten
1 cup sifted flour
1½ teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon orange juice
1½ cups sliced peaches
Sugar Glaze:
2 tablespoons sugar
2 tablespoons light corn syrup
1 teaspoon grated orange rind
¼ teaspoon salt

Cream together shortening and syrup. Add egg and mix well. Sift together flour, baking powder and salt. Add flour mixture to creamed mixture alternately with orange juice. Spread in paper-lined pan. Lay sliced peaches in diagonal rows over batter, letting slices overlap slightly. Drizzle sugar glaze over peaches. Bake in a moderate oven (350-degree) about 55 minutes.

Note: Mix ingredients for sugar glaze in order given.

Peach Puff Pudding.
(Serves 4)
1½ cups milk
1½ cups bread cubes
1½ tablespoons melted butter or substitute
1 egg beaten
¼ cup honey
¼ teaspoon salt
1½ teaspoons grated orange rind
1 cup diced peaches

Scald milk and pour over bread cubes. Let stand for 10 minutes. Add melted butter or substitute, egg, honey, salt and peaches. Pour into individual greased casseroles. Bake in a moderate oven (350-degree) about 45 minutes. Serve with milk or coffee cream.

Economy Tips: Ask for the trimmings and bones when you buy your meat. The fat can be rendered and used as shortening. The bones do well when simmered with vegetables to be used as soup.

Save leftover gravy and use it as stock for soup. You'll be delighted with the rich flavor.

Mustard mixed with butter makes a nice spread for sandwiches. It's especially good with meat and cheese "wiches."

Leftover cereals can be molded and served as dessert with fruit or custard sauce. Or, they can be combined with ground meat for loaves or meat balls.

Keep leftover "dabs" of butter in a covered container in the refrigerator and use for seasoning vegetables or sauces.

Leftover meat and vegetables are good when creamed and served with waffles, toast, rusk or toasted noodles.

If you're looking for something different and colorful in fruit desserts, you'll find this lime-pear pie just the thing. It uses a cookie crumb crust, which is fat-saving, lime gelatin and bottled gingerale. Only five pear halves are needed:

Lime-Pear Pie.
(Makes 1 8-inch pie)
1¼ cups finely crushed cookies (vanilla wafers or gingersnaps)
4 tablespoons melted fat
1 package lime-flavored gelatin
½ cup hot water
1½ cups gingerale
1 tablespoon lemon juice
5 pear halves
¼ cup shredded coconut or nut meats, if desired

Combine cookie crumbs with melted fat and mix well. Press mixture firmly in an even layer on bottom and sides of a well-greased pie dish. Chill.

Meanwhile, dissolve lime gelatin in hot water. Add gingerale and lemon juice. Chill until mixture begins to thicken. Pour a layer of the chilled gelatin mixture into the shell. Cut pear halves in two and arrange, pit side down, in star shape. Cover with remaining gelatin mixture. Sprinkle edges of pie with coconut or nut-meats. Chill in refrigerator until firm.

There's no need to try commando tactics to get the family to go for these fruit desserts. This apple dessert is made all the more nourishing because it uses both oatmeal and peanut butter and has a delightful nut-like flavor.

Apple Crisp
(Serves 4 to 6)
5 medium-sized apples
½ cup water
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ teaspoon nutmeg
¼ teaspoon allspice
3 tablespoons flour
¾ cup rolled oats
½ cup brown sugar
½ cup peanut butter
2 tablespoons melted butter or substitute

Pare and core apples; slice. Arrange in baking dish. Add water and lemon juice. Sprinkle with spice. Blend together flour, rolled oats, brown sugar and peanut butter. Add butter. Spread over apples. Bake in a moderate (350-degree) oven for 40 minutes. Serve hot with milk or cream.

Pears coming into season right now will make a delectable dessert when baked and served with a sour cream mixture:

Toasted Pears.
(Serves 4 to 6)
6 large fresh pears
3 tablespoons lemon juice
¼ cup sugar
¼ cup melted butter or substitute
2½ cups corn flakes
1 teaspoon grated lemon rind
½ cup powdered sugar
1 cup sour cream
2 tablespoons lemon juice

Peel, halve and core pears; remove stem strings. Dip at once into lemon juice to which sugar has been added. Dip in melted butter. Roll in crushed cereal flakes. Arrange cut side down in a shallow baking pan. Bake in a moderately hot (375-degree) oven for 20 to 25 minutes or until pears are tender but not soft.

To make the lemon cream sauce, beat powdered sugar into the sour cream and flavor with the lemon juice.

Peaches may be used in place of pears, if desired.

Veterans' SERVICE BUREAU

EDITOR'S NOTE: This newspaper, through special arrangement with the Washington Bureau of Western Newspaper Union at 1616 Eye Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., is able to bring readers this weekly column on problems of the veteran and serviceman and his family. Questions may be addressed to the above Bureau and they will be answered in a subsequent column. No replies can be made direct by mail, but only in the column which will appear in this newspaper regularly.

Veterans Bill of Rights

It is virtually certain that this session of the congress will liberalize many provisions of the G.I. Bill of Rights, particularly since President Truman and the Veterans administration have now given added impetus to needed clarification and liberalization.

In his message to the congress, the President urged that prompt consideration be given for more liberal hospitalization and veterans care, more vocational training under the vocational rehabilitation act and to education and training under the serviceman's readjustment act (G.I. bill). The President further urged more specific language for re-employment of veterans under the selective service act, so there can be no doubt about the right of a veteran to get back his old job should he desire it.

The Veterans administration itself will take the lead and spearhead the fight for these clarifying and liberalizing amendments and the administration will have the backing of such organizations as the American Bar association, the American Institute of Banking, the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

At this time 22,349 veterans, out of more than two million demobilized thus far, are taking advantage of the education features of the bill of rights. Some of the proposed amendments would include "adequate subsistence and travel allowances for veterans taking intensive refresher courses away from home; permit instruction by correspondence, particularly from approved educational institutions which have not hitherto conducted correspondence courses."

Questions and Answers

Q.—My husband was given an honorable medical discharge March 9, 1943. At that time they did not receive a discharge button. Where can he obtain one? Mrs. R. R., Marshalltown, Iowa.

A.—At any army separation center, probably at your local draft board, or one may be purchased at almost any army store.

Q.—Has an army officer the right to cut off the allotment to his wife and child without any reason? Has he no obligation to meet concerning his family? Wife, Stilacoom, Wash.

A.—Yes, he has the right to discontinue his allotment. He has the same obligations concerning his family as any other honorable husband.

Q.—I am making an application for a one-ton truck. I have a farm of 200 acres and need a truck very much. I am an honorably discharged soldier, with two years service. I would like to get a government - owned truck if possible. J. F., Schenectady, N. Y.

A.—If you are referring to a surplus war property truck, would suggest that you contact your local AAA county committee or your county agent for information where these surplus trucks are available from a bona fide dealer in your community. You are entitled to an A-1 priority without red tape if there are surplus war trucks for sale at any of your local dealers.

Q.—I want to know if a man that has been in the navy 16 months, is 26 years old and has a wife and two children, will get a discharge soon? Wife, Vida, Okla.

A.—Not necessarily. The navy man will be subject to the discharge system of rating adopted by the navy.

Q.—I am a World War I veteran and have a job. Will I have to give up my job for a veteran of World War II? Does a veteran of World War I have as much right as a World War II veteran? W. L., Mora, Minn.

A.—If you are holding a job now which was given up by a veteran of this war, then the honorably discharged veteran of World War II has a right to that job back under the provisions of the selective service act. A veteran of World War I has all the rights of a citizen of the U. S. A. and as much right as a veteran of this war except for the express benefits enacted for veterans of World War II.

Q.—A serviceman owed his father some money before he entered the service. Then the father became suddenly ill and was unable to work. The serviceman then provided the father a family allowance from the government. Should the serviceman get credit on what he owed his father for the amount the government sent? Reader, Hayden, Colo.

A.—That question obviously is a matter for private settlement between the serviceman and his father.

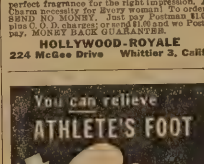
MRS. DYE MAKES OVERALLS LAST

PITCHER, OKLAHOMA.—Mrs. L. E. Dye has had a lot of experience in washing overalls for five boys and her husband. She has found out how to make them last longer. Here is what she says in a letter to Faultless Starch,

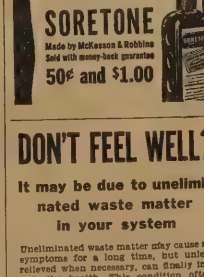
"I cannot wash without Faultless Starch. You bet I think it will make overalls last longer and look ten times better. I know. We raised five boys, so I know what Faultless Starch means to overalls. Have used it as far back as I can remember and my mother used it, too. I can't say enough for Faultless Starch."

Now there is an important message for anyone who has overalls in her wash. Mrs. Dye says that Faultless Starch makes overalls wear longer (that's mighty important, today) and look "ten times better" (and that's important, too).



HOW TO STARCH OVERALLS

Overalls, work pants, wash shirts —and children's play clothes usually get very, very dirty. Sometimes it takes a lot of rubbing on a scrubboard to take the dirt out. And everyone knows that rubbing wears out clothes as much as washing them does. But when you give them a LIGHT starching with Faultless Starch you save a lot of that rubbing. You see—Faultless Starch penetrates the fabric—so dirt can't grind in so easily. And Faultless Starch dissolves instantly in water and carries most of the dirt right out with it. So when you starch other things, be sure to give overalls, work pants, children's clothes, etc., a very light starching at the same time. You'll notice the difference when you wash them!



SO SMOOTH TO WEAR

The men will really like it, too. The fabric feels smooth and slick —not scratchy and rough. They won't chafe as much around the neck and the arms. It's a wonderful relief to wear smooth, slick work clothes! Try it, this washday. And be sure to use Faultless Starch!—Adv.

Vote No - Tuesday, Oct. 2

WHERE WILL THE MONEY GO?
A $6,500,000 Question

Five main reasons why the Sparks income tax diversion amendment to the State Constitution of Alabama should be defeated at the polls October 2 next are:

1. The amendment channels revenue from the income tax into the State treasury and gives no assurance whatever as to how the money will be spent.

2. The amendmen breaks the second part of the contract made with property-owners of Alabama in 1933, which says that the proceeds of the income tax will be used to reduce property taxes.

3. The income of the State is at an all-time high and this is no time to make either a direct or indirect increase in taxes.

4. Schools and welfare work will get big increases in funds regardless of action on the amendment.

5. The 1945 Legislature provided for a mandatory increase in the salaries of classroom teachers and they will get this increase regardless of what takes place on October 2.

Proposed Constitutional Amendment

Here is the Amendment — Read it — Study it — See for yourself if Education, Health, or Welfare are guaranteed a dime. Vote "NO" on the tw[illegible]r 2nd and pass this thick "baloney" back to the fat spendthrift politician that is trying to take you for a sucker — VOTE "NO."

"Shall the following be [illegible]cted as an amendment to Article XXII of the Constitution of Alabama?"

"Article XXII. The Leg[illegible]ature shall have the power to levy and collect taxes for state purposes on net incomes from whatever source derived within this state, including the incomes derived from salaries, fees and compensation paid from the State, county, municipality, and any agency or creature thereof, for the calendar year, 1933, and thereafter, and to designate and define the incomes to be taxed and to fix the rates of taxes provided that the rate shall not exceed 5 per cent nor 3 per cent on corporations. Income shall not be deemed property for purposes of ad valorem taxes. From net income an exemption of not less than fifteen hundred dollars ($1,500.00) shall be allowed to unmarried persons and an exemption of not less than three thousand dollars ($3,000.00) shall be allowed to the head of a family, provided that only one exemption shall be allowed to husband and wife where they are living together and make separate returns for income tax. An exemption of not less than three hundred dollars ($300.00) shall be allowed for each dependent member of the family of an income taxpayer under the age of 18 years. Such tax must be levied upon the salaries, income, fees, or other compensation of state, county and municipal officers and employees, on the same basis as such income taxes are levied upon other persons. The proceeds of such tax, after provision has been made for the payment of administrative expenses and the next two maturing installments of interest on the warrant refunding bonds issued to fund the floating debt existing October 1, 1932, must be used only in the manner and the order following:

1) to create a trust fund for the payment of the principal of all outstanding warrant refunding bonds issued under the authority of Act. No. 14, approved February 5, 1935, and Act No. 50, approved February 8, 1935, to fund the floating debt existing October 1, 1932;

2) to become a part of and to supplement the sinking fund heretofore created for the payment of the "Old Bonded Debt," as evidenced by Class A Renewal Bonds, Class C Renewal Bonds, and Funding Renewal Bonds, to the extent that the fund, which hereafter shall be an irrevocable trust fund, when invested and the earnings thereon calculated to the maturities of the outstanding bonds, will equal the principal of the unpaid debt;

3) to replace revenues lost to the several funds by reason of exemption of homesteads from the state ad valorem tax;

4) the residue shall be paid into the state treasury.

The corpus of any fund hereby created, and the income from the trust fund for the payment of the "Old Bonded Debt," may be invested by the governor in the bonds or other obligations of the United States or the State of Alabama. Any earnings on the investment of the trust fund for the payment of the "Old Bonded Debt" shall be payable into and become a part of the fund, and all earnings and income from the investment of the trust fund for the payment of warrant refunding bonds shall be deposited with and become a part of, the fund into which the proceeds of the income tax are paid. After a sufficient amount is accumulated in any fund to equal the principal of the outstanding bonds against the payment of which the fund is created, (except as to interest which shall be an annual charge or may be included in the trust fund) the debt shall be considered paid. All laws relating to the income tax, not in conflict herewith and valid on the date of the ratification of this amendment are hereby validated and confirmed. The provisions hereof with respect to the creation of funds and the use thereof are declared to be self-executing."

THE EMBARRASED PACK

On the afternoon of September 15, Mr. A. L. Atchley, Carl McKenney, one of our good colored friends, and I, loaded ten of Mr. Atchley's best hounds in my automobile and drove to the home of Mr. Alf Norrell, Verbena, Ala. At 6 o'clock, with Mrs. Burkhalter, Mr. Norrell's aunt, as hostess, a most enjoyable barbecue, with all the accessories was served to some 75 guests. We all smoked our usual after supper cigarette, then decided that we would turn loose at Mt. Creek.

There were 35 dogs, and it was not long before they struck a young red that ran about 30 minutes. This same thing happened three times before 12 o'clock. We were never lucky enough to strike the old one, or maybe I should say unlucky after what happened later on in the morning.

The wind blew steadily until around three o'clock in the morning, and the dogs hunted the entire country out but no trace of "Old Red." We agreed to drive over about two miles and try to hit the old man in that vicinity. We struck at once, but not the red. It was a fine Tennessee Red Leg that ran almost as well as a good running red. The race had not been going long until the pack split and ran some two to three miles apart. We were in the center of it all. The pack to the north made a catch at day break. Mr. Atchley was in some 60 yards of them when this happened, so he brought the fox and pack up to the road where we were sitting. It was a beautiful sight, as the sun climbed above the horizon to see the 20 black and white hounds coming up the long hill following Mr. Atchley. The pack to the south was still a mile or more away. Several people that lived near by had gathered, one of which I am about to describe at length. At the suggestion of sending the dogs to the other pack, a young boy, Clyde Mann, removed his overcoat and said that he knew the country well, being a native of Mountain Creek, and would be glad to go with the dogs. This was something unusual for a man to agree to carry dogs to a moving pack, but he said it would not be any trouble. Later on to our surprise we not only found what little trouble he could have getting to the pack, but how easy it was for him to run with it. The pack kept driving to the west through cut-over land and pastures with a new dog opening up almost each second until there were 31 dogs present. The fox, without making any right angle turns, began to move in a northern direction and crossed the road within 250 yards of us. There came the dogs: 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and down to 15; then to our surprise instead of number 16 being a dog it was the boy. He seemed to run the woods as well as the field the fox proceeded through. At the edge of the field some 200 yards from the road, he gained some on the pack with a short step and a deer-like leap that caused him to clear the 4-strand fence at least a foot and a half, and disappeared with the pack into the woods again.

I would say the race must have lasted 30 minutes from the time the new dogs and the boy were turned after the running fox until the catch was made by the boy in a road two miles away. He was seen and admits running the fox a sight race 50 yards down the hill and into a road, then down the road a quarter of a mile to where the fox was caught. After about 15 minutes, without any word from boy or dog, he came up the road with the live fox under his arm, and the most embarrassed pack of 28 hounds walking behind him I have ever seen in all my 26 years of hunting experience. Neither the boy or his father-in-law seemed to be elated at all and spoke in casual terms about the boy's success in out running the dogs. When asked how far behind the nearest dog was, he pointed to my car which was in the road about 50 yards away, and said, "About as far as from here to that car." I asked the boy what he intended to do with the fox, and to my astonishment he replied, "I'm going to keep this one. I caught one last Sunday morning but he got out of the box I had him in and got away." By this time I had found out that the boy was married. I was thinking what a wonderful half-back a son of his might be, since I have coached in the past and will possibly coach in the future. I asked Mr. Oates, Clyde's father-in-law, if he had any children. To this he replied that he had a son seven months old. A. L. Atchley, the most let-down hunter of the bunch with 10 dogs in the pack, replied, "The baby has not run any fox yet, but has caught several young rabbits." This is where I almost passed out with laughter because I did not have a dog in the race and was very glad then that I did not have. Mr. Atchley also inquired as to the type of feed the boy ate, whether it be "Jazz" or "Full-Of-Pep," saying that whatever Clyde Mann ate was what he intended putting his dogs on at once. Mr. Jim Parrish, on being asked why only five of his dogs were in the race, said, "The two old dogs won't run a covered track."

As soon as Clyde tied his fox, he began to pull off his shoes saying they hurt his feet. He also made the remark that the race would have been short if it had not been Sunday when he wore his shoes.

It was time for us to leave the hunting ground, so we bade goodbye to our hunting friends from Chilton, Elmore and Autauga counties. Since they served as witnesses to this unusual catch, I want to give names. They are: Mr. and Mrs. Henry Williams, Frank Champion, A. L. Atchley, John Oates, John Mullins, John Williams, Pinson Glenn, Cecil Courtney, Jim Parrish, Reese Rollan, Garfield Dobson, Walt Jones, Alf Norrell and Calvin McKenney.

Mr. Atchley left after saying that he enjoyed the friendship of the above mentioned, but he never intended to bring his dogs back to that section again and have them embarrassed as they had been by the lad.—Lt. James R. Porch, Maxwell Field, Ala.

STATE OF ALABAMA

A PROCLAMATION

BY THE GOVERNOR

WHEREAS, the Legislature of Alabama, at the Regular Session 1945, ordered an election to be held by the qualified electors of the State of Alabama upon a certain proposed amendment to the Constitution of Alabama, which said amendment is herein set out, and ordered that said election be held on the first Tuesday following the expiration of three months after the final adjournment of the regular session of the 1945 Legislature; and

WHEREAS, the first Tuesday following the expiration of three months after the final adjournment of the regular session of the Legislature will be and occur Tuesday, October 2, 1945; and

WHEREAS, notice of such election, together with the proposed amendment is required by law to be given by the provisions of the Act submitting the amendment, to be given by a proclamation of the Governor to be published in each county in the State of Alabama once a week for four successive weeks next preceding the said 2nd day of October:

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Chauncey Sparks, as Governor of the State of Alabama, do hereby give notice, direct and proclaim that on Tuesday, the 2nd day of October, 1945, an election will be held at the several polling places within the State of Alabama, in the manner and form provided by law, upon the following proposed amendment to the Constitution of the State of Alabama of 1901:

"Article XXII. The Legislature shall have the power to levy and collect taxes for state purposes on net incomes from whatever source derived within this state, including the incomes derived from salaries, fees and compensation paid from the state, county, municipality, and any agency or creature thereof, for the calendar year, 1933, and thereafter, and to designate and define the incomes to be taxed and to fix the rates of taxes provided that the rate shall not exceed 5 per cent nor 3 per cent on corporations. Income shall not be deemed property for purposes of ad valorem taxes. From net income an exemption of not less than fifteen hundred dollars ($1,500.00) shall be allowed to unmarried persons and an exemption of not less than three thousand dollars ($3,000.00) shall be allowed to the head of a family, provided that only one exemption shall be allowed to husband and wife where they are living together and make separate returns for income tax. An exemption of not less than three hundred dollars ($300.00) shall be allowed for each dependent member of the family of an income tax payer under the age of 18 years. Such tax must be levied upon the salaries, income, fees, or other compensation of state, county and municipal officers and employees, on the same basis as such income taxes are levied upon other persons. The proceeds of such tax, after provision has been made for the payment of administrative expenses and the next two maturing instalments of interest on the warrant refunding bonds issued to fund the floating debt existing October 1, 1932, must be used only in the manner and the order following: 1) to create a trust fund for the payment of the principal of all outstanding warrant refunding bonds issued under the authority of Act No. 14, approved February 5, 1935, and Act No. 30, approved February 8, 1935, to fund the floating debt existing October 1, 1932; 2) to become a part of and to supplement the sinking fund heretofore created for the payment of the "Old Bonded Debt", as evidenced by Class A Renewal Bonds, Class C Renewal Bonds, and Funding Renewal Bonds, to the extent that the fund, which hereafter shall be an irrevocable trust fund, when invested and the earnings thereon calculated to the maturities of the outstanding bonds, will equal the principal of the unpaid debt; 3) to replace revenues lost to the several funds by reason of exemption of homesteads from the state ad valorem tax; 4) the residue shall be paid into in the state treasury. The corpus of any fund hereby created, and the income from the trust fund for the payment of the "Old Bonded Debt" may be invested by the Governor in the bonds or other obligations of the United States or the State of Alabama. Any earnings on the investment of the trust fund for the payment of the "Old Bonded Debt" shall be payable into and become a part of the fund, and all earnings and income from the investment of the trust fund for the payment of warrant refunding bonds shall be deposited with, and become a part of, the fund into which the proceeds of the income tax are paid. After a sufficient amount is accumulated in any fund to equal the principal of the outstanding bonds against the payment of which the fund is created, (except as to interest which shall be an annual charge or may be included in the trust fund) the debt shall be considered paid. All laws relating to the income tax, not in conflict herewith and valid on the date of the ratification of this amendment, are hereby validated and confirmed. The provisions hereof with respect to the creation of funds and the use thereof are declared to be self-executing."

I further direct and proclaim that notice of this election upon Tuesday, the 2nd day of October, 1945, upon the above set forth amendment to the Constitution of the State of Alabama of 1901, be given by publishing the same once a week for four successive weeks next preceding Tuesday the 2nd day of October, 1945, in each county in the State of Alabama in a newspaper published in said county.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and have caused the Great Seal of the State of Alabama to be affixed by the Secretary of State at the Capitol in the City of Montgomery, on this the 26th day of July, 1945.

SNAPPY FACTS about RUBBER

Now it can be told: Workers proudly tell of their sabotage work when rubber plants in France were under Nazi control. They spread soapstone on the plies as they built a tire. Finished product looked perfect, but in use plies would break, leaving the Nazis flat.

"Rubber made in the U. S. A." has been developed to such a high degree that the war-born synthetic rubber industry will probably continue long after the war.

As of December 31, 1944, the average age of all passenger cars on the road was seven years.

Have You Tried PINEHURST CIGARETTES

Made with Gin-Seng Extract?

Treat yourself to the pleasure of this fine smoke—a smooth, mellow, mild cigarette—made of selected tobaccos, especially blended to the popular American taste. Pinehurst is truly one of America's standard cigarettes—not a shortage substitute—enjoyed for years by smokers who demand satisfaction from their cigarettes. Pinehurst's exclusive Patented Pana-Process employs extract of Gin-Seng root for modern moisture conditioning—the only cigarette permitted to do so.

The use of Gin-Seng Extract as a hygroscopic agent is an exclusive, patented process of this Company. The mollifying features of Gin-Seng Extract may help to relieve dry throat, cigarette cough, and other irritations due to smoking. These cigarettes may be found much more pleasant and safe for those with ordinary colds and other respiratory difficulties such as hay fever, asthma, etc.

THE STORY THUS FAR: Spratt Herlong, motion picture producer, had married Elizabeth after her first husband, Arthur Kittredge, had been reported killed in World War I. Elizabeth had been orphaned when a baby and raised by her aunt and uncle in Tulsa, where she met and married Arthur. Within a year after their marriage he enlisted, and soon afterwards was reported killed. Elizabeth moved to Los Angeles, where she met and married Spratt. He knew of her present feeling toward Arthur. Elizabeth one day overheard the children reading and laughing at the editorials and advertising matter appearing in print during World War I.

CHAPTER IX

Indoors the children came across some new monstrosity and broke into laughter again. Cherry finally gasped, "I tell you, my ribs hurt. I haven't had so much fun for ages."

"Oh boy," exclaimed Pudge, "here's another of these things. 'Today, filled with hope and trust, we proudly look upon our great army and our noble allies. Through their sacrifices we are moving toward the victory that will bring triumphant peace to all the world. Bring this glorious day nearer! Work for victory as you never worked before! America is destined to be—' "

"—the prize sucker of all time," Dick finished the sentence for him, with sudden disgust. "Did you ever hear such tripe? Couldn't you throw up?"

"Well—we really ought not to laugh," Julia admitted. "The poor things, they took it so seriously."

"If we don't laugh," said Dick, "we'll all sit down and cry. We've got the mess they made."

"Oh Dick," Julia admonished him, "but really, this war is different!"

"Different? Tell that to the Marines. Sure, the Marines who got stuck on Wake Island with a lot of popguns because the Japs were such good customers and they might have got their feelings hurt if we'd fortified it."

"We're a swell bunch of suckers, aren't we?" said Cherry. "To get ourselves born in these times!"

"Well, we couldn't help it," Dick remarked. "But I guess nobody who had anything to say about it would have picked out the twentieth century, any of it."

Cherry gave a low ironic chuckle. "They'll have an easy time remembering the twentieth century when they study it in the history books. A pre-war period, a war, an inter-war period, another war, a post-war period—"

"Don't say post-war too soon, you wishful thinker," Pudge admonished her lazily. "How do you know it won't be just the second inter-war period?"

There was a shuffling sound as they began to restack the magazines, evidently concluding that these had provided as much amusement as they could afford. "This is a fine way for two fellows to be talking," advised Julia, "who'll probably be in the army this time next year."

"No, you don't get it, Julia," said Dick. "I'm not as pessimistic as Pudge, I think the next inter-war period is going to be a lot longer than this last one, why it's got to; by the time this war is over everything will be blown to powder and there'll be nothing left to fight with. But we're a lot better off than those moony-faced laddies who went marching off full of molasses about the brotherhood of man and all that. We won't be disillusioned when it's over because we haven't got any illusions. We know it's all a bloody mess and we're in it because our elders didn't have sense enough to keep us out of it. We'll go into the army and they'll train us to be killers whose business it is to shoot other killers before they have a chance to shoot us first. And that's that."

"But gosh, Dick!" Julia exclaimed in a shocked voice. "We've got to fight! Don't you hate the Japs?"

"Of course I hate them. I'd like to wipe every one of their monkey faces off the earth. Oh, that's okay by me, I'll shoot 'em and be glad to do it. But that's not the idea. I mean the difference between this war and the last one is that this time we know what we're doing. We're fighting to stay alive, period. We don't expect any brand-new world."

"Lucky we don't expect it," observed Pudge, "because it's a cinch we're not going to get one."

"Mr. Wallace," Cherry said wisely, "thinks we're fighting to provide milk for the Chinese coolies."

Pudge chuckled at her. "Without even asking the coolies if they want any milk."

"You know," said Cherry, "it's really pathetic the way some of the propaganda leaders are trying to sell us on that idea of a brand-new world. Just get this over, and the Russians will love the Chinese and the Chinese will love the British and the British will love the Italians—"

Pudge interrupted, still chuckling, "Just picture anybody actually loving the Italians."

"Oh, but they will," Cherry assured him cynically. "Haven't you read some of these post-war planners? Everybody is going to get along with everybody else, even the Spaniards."

"The State Department," Dick reminded her, "gets along beautifully with the Spaniards."

"Now that Chamberlain is dead," said Cherry, "somebody really ought to send the State Department a lot of umbrellas for Christmas. Oh, it really does make you tired, doesn't it? Ever since I can remember, people have been talking about the next war, and nobody did anything about it except to go on selling the Japs and Germans things to blow us up with. And now that we're in it they're trying to hand us that same old fluff."

"I guess you're right," Julia admitted. "It's—shivery, isn't it?"

Dick retorted, "It doesn't make sense except the way I said it the first time. The Japs and Germans say, 'We're going to kill you and take what you've got.' We say, 'Like hell you are.' So we get up and bang it out. We keep banging till they're so slugnutty they have to let us alone."

"That's not the way it turned out last time," Julia reminded him.

"No it didn't," Dick agreed, "because last time everybody was so

"Oh, what have I told him?"

full of phony ideals and doubletalk. Why, to read this stuff we've been reading, you'd think the army was a lot of social workers sent out to uplift the community. Those fellows didn't know what they were fighting for. No wonder they left everything in such a muddle. Nobody ever fought a war for any ideals."

"Why Dick, there are some ideals in this war!" Julia protested. "You know, the Four Freedoms and all that."

Dick was too polite to contradict her at once, but Cherry was not. "Oh Julia," she said, "don't be so sentimental. You don't really believe anybody in the United States cares whether the Croatians and people like that have any Four Freedoms, any more than they care about us. Nobody fights for anything like that. They just pretend they do while it's going on."

"She's right, Julia," Dick argued. "What they really fight about is property and power. They always talk pretty while it's going on, and then when it's over they get realistic. But as soon as a new war starts they say, 'Oh yes, we know, all the other wars were fought for crass reasons, but this one's different, boys, this one's different.' " He became vehement. "Well, this one's not different and I'm thankful we know it. I'm plenty tired of everybody pretending to believe what everybody knows isn't true."

"I wonder what your mother and father would say," Julia suggested, "if they could hear you talk like that."

"Oh, they wouldn't mind," said Cherry. "They're very intelligent people, really."

"They've got some old-fashioned ideas," said Dick, "like everybody their age, but generally speaking they're very liberal for older people. They don't go around being always shocked about things."

Outside on the balcony, Elizabeth stood with her hands gripping the rail. She was thinking, "Every word they are saying is my fault, mine and Spratt's. They're our children and we taught them to think this way. Or at least, if we didn't teach them to be cynics, we didn't do anything to stop it. We ran away from the last war as fast as we could. In what Spratt called the world's hangover, we didn't say anything but 'never again.' And now there's another war, and Dick will have to fight it—and listen to him! Is that how they all feel? If it is, their children will have to do it again. Oh, what have I told him? What can I tell him now?"

Little as she liked to admit it, she knew she had been a coward and that she was still a coward. She had refused to face what was there, and she still lacked the courage to face it. Could she go into the house right now and say to Dick, "This war is a glorious crusade, and you must get into it now. Why wait till next year? They will take you at seventeen. Oh yes, I know, thousands of men have already been killed, but go ahead. What are you waiting for? It's worth it."

No, she could not say it. If she believed this war was worth winning, that was what she ought to say, but the truth was that she simply did not believe it that much. That was what had held them all back during the accumulating horrors of the past twenty years. They knew what war was like, they could let anything happen in the world if only they could keep out of another. She need not blame herself, Elizabeth thought, as though she was the only one. She stood there on the balcony, epitomizing her country.

Turning around, she walked into the house, entering through a hall so as to avoid meeting the children in the den. With the disappearance of the sun the air had grown chilly. A fire might be welcome. She stood by a window in the living room, looking at the darkness as it gathered swiftly over the lawn. A maid came in to turn on the lights.

"Don't you want me to draw those curtains too, Mrs. Herlong?" she asked.

Elizabeth turned. "Why yes, I'd forgotten them. I'll do this window." She pulled the cord that drew the curtains together, and as the maid went out she turned from the window. How well-ordered everything looked, and was. Nothing had happened this afternoon. Nothing had happened except within herself. Everything that had made her feel so strong and happy as she drove home through the canyon was still there. A voice in the doorway startled her.

"Say, mother, we're getting famished. Isn't the boss home yet?"

"Not yet, Dick. He's very busy these days, you know, on the new picture."

"I know, but I'm starving."

"If the boss isn't here by seven-thirty, we'll sit down without him," she promised. "It's getting cold, Dick, will you light the fire?"

"Sure will." Dick knelt down and applied a match to the gas rod under the logs. He glanced at the cocktail tray. "Want me to mix the Martinis?"

"I wish you would."

"Okay." He went first to the door and called the others. "Want to come in here? Fire going."

"In a minute," Cherry called back. "Got to wash our hands first—those magazines were so awfully dusty. Is the boss in?"

"Not yet, but mother says we can have dinner at seven-thirty anyway. So hurry up."

The gas flame sparkled up to ignite the logs piled in the grate. Dick swished the gin and vermouth. Though he was not allowed to drink cocktails himself, he enjoyed the feeling of adulthood it gave him to play bartender. What a nice boy he was, Elizabeth thought as she watched him. Dick asked,

"Like a drink now?"

"I believe I would. I'm a bit tired."

He poured it out for her, and watched while she tasted it. "How's that?"

"Very good. You could get a job."

"I'll be needing one if that physics guy gets much tougher. Oh hello there," he said as Cherry and the two others came in. They greeted Elizabeth, and Julia said,

"That fire looks wonderful. I wish we had those gas lighters at our house, they start the fire with no trouble at all. You have just everything here, Mrs. Herlong."

"Why thank you, Julia."

"This is the most comfortable house I was ever in. We've been having such fun all afternoon."

"I'm getting weak in the middle," said Dick. "I wish you'd ordered some crackers or something."

"I'll have hors d'oeuvres tomorrow night. We're having a guest for dinner—I mean an older guest, from the studio."

"We were all going to ride down to the beach tomorrow night," said Dick. "It'll be all right if Cherry and I leave right after dinner, won't it?"

"For Cherry, but I'm afraid there's another prospect for you."

"For me? What?" he asked in alarm.

Elizabeth gave him an urgent smile. It was a relief to turn her attention to her ordinary day-by-day affairs, to observe her children as normal healthy youngsters hungry for their dinner, to reach for a cigarette and have both Dick and Pudge strike matches for her. She accepted the light from Pudge, and smiled across it at Dick as he blew out the match he had struck.

"Dick, our guest tomorrow night is a Mr. Kessler, from Germany. I've never met him, but he's working on the picture."

"Another refugee?" inquired Cherry.

"Yes, but you'll both please remember not to call him that. Simply say, 'German,' if you have to call him anything."

"I get it," said Dick, "but what have I got to do about him?"

"He has a daughter—"

"Oh my gosh!"

LET'S talk about the future. We want every Alabamian to know our plans, for Alabama and the Telephone Company have been working closely together for many years.

"What's coming up?" Quite a lot — the greatest expansion program in the history of the telephone in Alabama as soon as materials are available. It means the spending of millions of dollars to provide for — (1) Telephones for all who have been waiting for them — filling as quickly as humanly possible all applications for telephones. This is one of our first and biggest jobs. (2) Telephones for the farmers — expanding and improving rural telephone service to a greater extent than ever before. (3) Expansion of Long Distance Service, including — (a.) the installation of coaxial cables to handle more calls with greater speed and convenience to you, and (b.) providing increased facilities for that new and exciting visual art — television. (4) Construction and installation — catching up with plant shortages to provide for present and future requirements. (5) Service to motor vehicles — amazing plans are in the offing for this service and extension of service to other new fields.

What does it all add up to? For one thing, it means more opportunity all around, for the returning veteran, for all Alabamians. It insures an adequate telephone communication system so vitally essential to our state's over-all industrial and agricultural expansion. Each gives impetus to the other, as our friendly relationship has in the past.

Work hours for the future, and a future for work hours. That's what it means, when you analyze it, and Alabamians have a knack for getting at the heart of things. They like to see the marshalling of prosperity's big three — Men, Money and Materials, that American combination which put Alabama out in front, and keeps it there.

Yes, there's prosperity in work. And prosperity means happiness for everybody. As for the 3700 men and women of the Telephone Company in Alabama, we face the future with confidence!

Sincerely,

State Manager

Chilton County Defeats Sparks Income Tax Amendment Six-To-One

EVERY BOX IN COUNTY CARRIED BY NO'S; STATE VOTES AGAINST IT

In an election that showed only about 25 percent of the voting strength of the county, the Income Tax Amendment election, sponsored by Governor Chauncey Sparks and the Administration, was defeated Tuesday. The people of Chilton County, in no uncertain terms, said No.

Every Beat in the county defeated the Amendment by a large majority. The total vote was 224 for, and 1,215 against.

Complete returns had not been received Wednesday morning, but of more than two-thirds of the boxes in the State already counted the vote was nearly two to one against the Amendment with no hope at all of the proponents to overtake the big margin.

The proposed amendment, sponsored by Gov. Sparks, would channel revenue from the income tax into the State Treasury to be appropriated by the Legislature.

The proponents were fooled in their defeat in the industrial centers of the state. While it was expected that the rural areas would defeat the amendment, backers expected that these heavy industrial centers would produce the needed votes to put it over. Jefferson County, the largest voting district in the state, voted 3 to 1 against it. Montgomery and Mobile counties likewise defeated the amendment.

NEWS FROM THE COUNTY AGENT'S OFFICE

Farmers that have been carrying out conservation practices in their forests and fields have not only protected soil but have produced an abundance of quail and other wild game.

Many farmers are cashing in on this farm production by selling exclusive hunting rights to city sportsmen.

The animal hunting rights sell at prices ranging from 10c to 25c per acre.

Fertilizing farm ponds should be discontinued during October. During this dry weather period it is a good practice to repair dams, enlarge spillways, excavate and clean shore lines and make general pond improvements.

Now that some labor is returning to farms and heavy machinery is being released from emergency jobs many farmers are planning to build farm ponds. If you are among this group and are not familiar with the mosquito control measures that must be carried out it will be a good idea to contact your County Health Department before carrying out your plans.

Don't forget that 500 pounds of 6-8-4 your acre of strawberries should have by early October. It will stimulate fruit-bud development for next year's crop.

Also, if you haven't thinned your strawberry matted row it will pay you to do so before applying this fertilizer. A scooter down the center of the mat, followed by hoeing or raking across the bed is a practical way of getting this job done.

Sweet Potatoes Intended For Storage Should Be Dug During October

Sweet potatoes dug while the weather is still warm and the ground is still dry have much better keeping qualities than later dug potatoes. Sort potatoes in the field before storage and store only the uncut disease free potatoes. Avoid handling the newly dug potatoes roughly as they are easily bruised and skinned.

A light seeding of crimson clover in with oats or oats and vetch will supply a fair amount of grazing and soil cover and will inoculate the soil for future crops of crimson clover.

From all reports cotton creeder seed supplies will be below 1946 demands. Many Chilton County farmers were disappointed in 1945 because they failed to place their order on time. It is not too early to let your dealer know your intentions for next year. Place your order now and your dealer can place his before the supply is tied up.

Plant vetch now on land to be seeded to alfalfa in Fall of 1946.

Pre - School Study Course To Be Held October 4th

Beginning this Thursday, October 4th, at 3 o'clock, there will be a Pre-School Study Course. The purpose of this group meeting will be to help those mothers who have children of pre-school age. The meetings will be held once a month and will be in charge of Mrs. Clifford Manning.

Mrs. George Jester, who is President of the Grammar School P.-T. A., is very anxious to help Mrs. Manning get this group organized. She urges every mother who will have a child entering school next year to attend this meeting.

All mothers are invited, but she especially wishes to have these pre-school mothers. Remember the first meeting is THIS THURSDAY, OCTOBER 4TH, AT 3 O'CLOCK, AT THE GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

QUARTERLY MEETING OF UNITY ASSOCIATION

The third quarterly meeting of Unity Association will be held with the Samaria Woman's Missionary Society as hostess on October 2nd, beginning at ten o'clock. Miss Lucy Smith, one of our missionaries to China, and a friend of our beloved Miss Willie Kelly, will be our guest speaker. This is your meeting, ladies of every Woman's Missionary Society in Unity Association, and we want you and your pastors to come worship and have fellowship with us.

The theme of our program is taken from that great need and stirring song, "Lead On, O King Eternal," which is our year's song. We will spend much time in discussing the lead we have taken in our community for the upbuilding of God's Kingdom and the things we can do for Him during the next quarter.—Mrs. Alvin T. Clapp, President Unity Asso.

VERBENA HOME DEMONSTRATION CLUB

The regular meeting of the Verbena Home Demonstration Club will be at the Club room Thursday, October 4th, at 3 o'clock. Every one invited to attend.

BAPTIST ASSOCIATIONAL MEETING TO BE HELD

The Unity Baptist Association will convene with Billingsley Baptist Church, October 9th and 10th, at 10:00 a.m.

A full and interesting program is promised to all who attend. — W. J. Billingsley, Mod.; G. C. Harris, Sec

COTTON GINNING REPORT

Census report shows that 1,747 bales of cotton were ginned in Chilton County from the crop of 1945 prior to September 16th, as compared with 2,527 bales for the crop of 1944.

Fifth District Will Meet In Auburn

Fall meeting of the Fifth District of Alabama Federation of Women's Clubs will meet in Auburn, Friday October 12th, at 10:00 a.m. in Duncan Hall.

The Director, Mrs. J. C. Grimes will preside.

Many State Officers will be in attendance and all County and District Officers are urged to be present. A unique program has been planned in the form of a Club Institute, by the Auburn Club Women.

Music will be furnished by the College School of Music Faculty.

The President of A.F.W.C., Mrs. S. D. Suggs, of Montgomery, will be honored at the luncheon hour, and her address will be the feature of the one-day session. Mrs. Suggs's theme for her regime is, "Thine is the Power," and she hopes to arouse all Club women to their potentialities in this new Post War World.

GRAMMAR SCHOOL P.-T. A.

The Grammar School P.-T. A. held their regular monthly meeting on Tuesday afternoon in Mrs. Martin's room.

The meeting was called to order by the President, Mrs. George Jester.

Mrs. Curry Thomas, the Program Chairman, presented a very interesting program, which included prayer and familiar Bible verses, given by the Fourth Grade pupils. A forum, directed by Mrs. W. C. Golden, assisted by a group of the teachers and parents and a most interesting discussion "What A Parent's Study Group Offers You," led by Mrs. A. B. Foshee and assisted by a group of the parents.

The meeting was adjourned after much discussion and the room count went to Mrs. Warr's Sixth Grade.

HALLOWE'EN PARTY

Don't forget there will be a Hallowe'en Party at the Grammar School on Hallowe'en night. Watch for the time! Be prepared to bring the children and have lots of fun.

PILOT CLUB HOLDS INTERESTING MEETING

During the month of September the Clanton Pilot Club held two meetings. First one—the second Tuesday—was held at the home of Pilot Mae Vinson. This was entirely a business one, with the director's meeting taking place just before opening of meeting. International and local affairs were discussed and decided on.

On the fourth Tuesday night a program meeting was held at the home of Pilot Ila Mae Bean. The program committee presented Mrs. O'Neer and Miss Stinson who gave interesting and enlighting talks of health work and cripple children clinic.

Both of these meetings were well attended. Appetizing salad plates served were very refreshing.

Next meeting will be business with Pilot Ruth S. Waters as hostess, second Tuesday night in October at 7 o'clock.

RESIDENTS ARE VISITED BY ROBBERS

The past week has seen an outbreak of robberies in and around Clanton unequaled in many years.

Two teen-age girls and two boys are held in the County jail, charged with robbery of the home of A. L. Watson last Friday. All are from California, where they stole an automobile on September 2nd. They were caught last Saturday night by Highway Patrolman at Homewood, just outside of Birmingham, where they had rented a cabin for the night. All the loot taken from the local residence was recovered and many other items stolen elsewhere on their long trip across country.

Sunday night while they were at the picture show, thieves entered the store and apartment adjoining of J. S. Williams in South Clanton. Both cash registers were opened and one completely demolished. Forty dollars in cash were taken, along with a .32 automatic pistol, dress, cigarettes and several other items.

The apartment was completely wrecked in their effort to find more money. Bed cover was ripped to pieces, dresser drawers were pulled out and their contents scattered over the floor. A watch belonging to Mrs. Williams was left untouched on the dresser. No arrests have been reported.

JAMES P. THRASH DIED

Mr. James Paton Thrash, age 73, of Jemison Route 2, died Sunday at 2:10 p.m. Funeral was held Monday at 2:30 p.m. from Rocky Mount Church, conducted by the Revs. Wiley Davis and Clyde Davis. Burial was in Rocky Mount Cemetery.

He is survived by [illegible] son, A. D. Thrash of [illegible] daughters—Mrs. Inez [illegible] Bingham, Mrs. Odelle Roberson of Jemison, Mrs. Clara Northcutt of Jemison, and Mrs. Wilmer Ellison of Jemison; four brothers—M. E. Thrash, A. N. Thrash, Ward Thrash and Amos Thrash; two sisters, Mrs. Melissa Wilson, Miss Lena Mae Thrash, of Jemison, Ala., Routes. Twelve [illegible] grandchildren and one great grandchild.

Pallbearers: Hollis Ellison, Leonard Martin, Willie Brasher, Alton Davis, Cleo Cofer and Brasher Northcutt.

Flower girls: Mrs. Berneice Vinzant, Mrs. Marie Glass, Mrs. Letha Littleton, Mrs. Cleo Cofer and Mrs. Edna Ellison.

Spigener Funeral Home in charge.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank the many friends who, during the death of our father and grandfather, N. J. Madox, rendered so many expressions of sympathy and kindness. The many friends who were so helpful during our loss, are too numerous to mention here, but we pray that the Lord will bless each and every one of you.—Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Mullins and Family.

Kathleen Norris Says:

The Wonder-Women of Long Island

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

"Certainly there are baby toys about, but the place is neat and clean, and I myself am always dressed in a clean, cheerful costume."

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

SOME months ago I wrote an article filled with sympathy for today's young mothers. I dwelt upon the difficulties they encounter in marketing, washing, cleaning, cooking, baby-tending, with so little help. I recalled the fact that we, who are mothers, in our young days could always secure the assistance of some competent woman, who managed kitchen and nursery, stood by us in all domestic crises, and left us plenty of time for occasional evening amusements, for theater, dancing, dinner parties.

The drudgery of today's mothers, their struggles in the markets, the steady care of restless, exacting children, the monotonous round of preparing meals and clearing them away, washing and ironing clothes, only to have them thrown into the tubs to repeat the process, — well, altogether it summed up what seemed to me pretty strenuous living.

But a certain young wife of Seaford, L. I., vigorously disagrees with me. She writes me a scathing letter about it.

"I am 22," she says. "Before my marriage I was a show girl, and I am more supple and better looking now than I was then. I have two babies, 22 and 7 months old. I do all the housework, cooking, washing, cleaning, mending, ironing, baking, cutting the lawn and shopping, with stores five miles away. I help in the garden, do all my own preserving and canning, and make all mine and the children's clothes, from hats to winter coats and bathing suits. I keep up my acrobatics, reading and organ playing.

Time to Go Out With Husband.

"Certainly there are baby toys about, but the place is neat and clean, and I myself am always dressed in a clean, cheerful costume, with costume jewelry and hair bows and so on. I am always willing to dance, at home, with my husband in the evenings, go for long walks with him and the children on his days off, and dance the night away when we can get someone to mind the babies.

"I also," the letter continues, "make all our rag rugs, curtains, afghans, quilts, blankets and pillows, and still have plenty of time left over. I am not bragging, for my neighbor on the left does all this with eight children, from 6 months to 16 years, and all my neighbors have from four to six children, and are still beautiful women, wearing sizes 12 and 14.

"The women you quote," the letter ends, "must be slatterns and idiots."

One can only respectfully agree with this fiery little housewife, and warmly congratulate her husband and the husbands of her clean, capable, cheerful — yet undersized — neighbors. They must have some secret that many other women have not yet mastered. Preserves, dancing, long walks and the making of pillows take time, and eight children mean 30 meals a day, and 30 meals mean at least 60 cups, 180 plates, 60 spoons to wash every day, 50 little garments to wash and iron every week — to say nothing of the babies' pin-ups and the bath towels, the boys' jeans and some 70 pairs of socks. No, the imagination staggers at it, and one can only bow respectfully to such efficiency.

Modern Devices Help.

Our own nursery was well filled, half a century ago, and the older members did help, and were expected to help. We peeled potatoes, set tables, tended the younger children, ran errands, made ourselves useful in dozens of ways.

But the woman who wrote this letter has no such help. Her children are babies; her daily baby wash runs to 50 articles. Her children spatter mush on their high chairs, demand daily baths, wake her at unearthly hours, need complete changes of crib bedding and their play aprons every day or twice a day, and still she has "plenty of time left over."

Certainly she has a thousand helps earlier generations of women didn't have. She can get codfish cakes and biscuits all ready to cook, ready-made bread and cakes; she doesn't have to fill lamps or stoke coal stoves; hot water runs in her bathroom; vacuum cleaner works miracles; she doesn't have to walk that five miles to the store as her grandmother would have done.

But just the same — those must be wonder-women down in that little Long Island town.

"We dance the night away."

IDEAL HOME-MAKERS

Many young mothers have been complaining bitterly about the difficulties of caring for one or two children during the last four years. Scarcities of almost every necessity, slow laundry service, and a hundred other vexations made the always trying tasks doubly hard. Besides that, it has been almost impossible to hire any household help. To add to all this, many servicemen's wives have had to work when they could, to add to their small income from the government.

Even with peace again over the land, these war-born problems are still here for the most part, and will be for many months. Some women, however, have such courage, energy and pride that they refuse to be downcast by hardships. Today's article contains a letter from a group of New York mothers who take everything in stride, and seem to have a good time doing it.

These young women have from two to eight children. They do practically all their own work, including a lot of sewing and gardening. Yet they somehow have time for dances and parties occasionally. Except for such mechanical helps as vacuum cleaners and washing machines they have no assistance in their daily chores. Miss Norris calls them "wonder-women."

HOUSEHOLD MEMOS

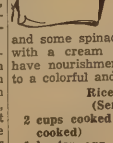
Tomatoes, Mushrooms, Eggs and Rice Cakes Make Good Lunch

A tomato treat that's hard to beat is this one in which cottage cheese is used for stuffing. Frilly sandwiches can be made by spreading thinly sliced bread with mayonnaise, seasoning the lettuce and rolling up the bread.

Lunch is often one of the most neglected meals of the day because the whole family is not at home to eat it. Then, too, many homemakers feel they just don't want to bother fixing something palatable and attractive.

But, let's look at it this way. Lunch, according to nutritionists, should contain at least one-third to one-half the day's calories, and the proper balance of proteins, carbohydrates, vitamins and minerals. This doesn't mean that you have to spend a lot of time preparing this noon-day snack, because, chances are, there are plenty of things in the refrigerator, ready to be made into satisfying, nourishing lunches.

Now that food rationing has eased, it might be a good idea to invite friends in for a quick lunch; or, better still, have a plan whereby you invite four to six people over for noon-time, and then have everyone take turns having each other to luncheon. It's a neighborly way, and you will be sure to get into better luncheon habits this way.



Here is a colorful salad plate that makes a quick and easy lunch. It looks pretty, too, on gay, informal plates.

Stuffed Tomato Salad Plate.
(Serves 6)

6 large tomatoes
½ pound cottage cheese
1 cup chopped cucumber
3 tablespoons real mayonnaise
Parsley
Scallions
Lettuce rolls

Section tomatoes to within ¼ inch from bottom. Mix cottage cheese, cucumber and real mayonnaise. Fill tomatoes. Serve with scallions and lettuce rolls. The rolls are made by spreading thinly sliced white bread with mayonnaise and then placing a lettuce leaf on each slice. Sprinkle this with salt and pepper. Roll up and fasten with a toothpick.

Occasionally we all have some leftover rice in the refrigerator, possibly after a chop suey dinner the night before. What about crispy, golden brown rice cakes for lunch, served with apricot jam or marmalade, and some spinach made delectable with a cream sauce. There you have nourishment plus in addition to a colorful and contrasting menu.

Rice Cakes.
(Serves 6)

2 cups cooked rice (½ cup uncooked)
1 beaten egg
2 tablespoons flour
1 tablespoon melted butter
1 teaspoon salt
Dash of pepper
1 teaspoon sugar

Mix all ingredients together in order given. Drop by spoonfuls onto hot, greased griddle. Saute until golden brown on each side, turning only once.

Swiss Spinach.

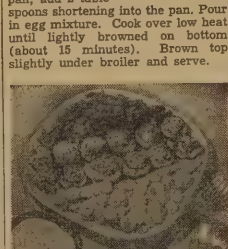
Into 2 cups of finely chopped spinach, blend ½ cup very thick, well-seasoned white sauce (flavored with onion and a dash of nutmeg), just enough to hold spinach together.

Eggs can always pack a nutritional punch into lunch and still keep a meal on an economical plane. You'll like both of these suggestions, one served hot, the other crispy cold!

Sunshine Egg Salad.
(Serves 6)

8 hard-cooked eggs
1 cup finely diced celery
¼ cup salad dressing
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 teaspoon scraped onion
Salt and pepper
Celery curls
6 thick slices of tomato
Salad greens



Chop eggs, but not too fine. Add celery, dressing and seasonings. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Press into molds, and chill before serving. Unmold each on a slice of tomato in a bed of salad greens. Garnish with celery curls, paprika and additional salad dressing, if desired.

Country Omelet.
(Serves 5)

2 cups diced, cooked potatoes
3 slices bacon
¼ cup minced onion
4 eggs, separated
2 tablespoons top milk
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
1 tablespoon chopped parsley

Brown potatoes, bacon and onion together in a frying pan. Cool. Beat egg yolks slightly, add milk, salt, pepper and chopped parsley. Beat whites until stiff and fold into egg yolk mixture. Heat frying pan, add 2 tablespoons shortening into the pan. Pour in egg mixture. Cook over low heat until lightly browned on bottom (about 15 minutes). Brown top slightly under broiler and serve.

There's a surprise in store with mushrooms de luxe that will make guests ask for more. An all vegetable luncheon like this is served with a smooth, creamy mayonnaise sauce made by mixing mayonnaise and milk and heating together.

An easy, point-free luncheon is made with mushrooms and served with vegetables. It takes only about 20 minutes to bake.

Mushrooms De Luxe.
(Serves 6)

12 large mushrooms
¾ cup dry bread crumbs
1 tablespoon chopped green pepper
1½ tablespoons chopped onion
1 teaspoon chopped parsley
1½ teaspoons salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
½ cup real mayonnaise
½ cup milk

Wash mushrooms, remove stems and chop. Mix chopped stems, bread crumbs, green pepper, onion, parsley and seasonings. Brown in 2 tablespoons of the mayonnaise. Fill mushroom caps. Bake in a moderately hot (400-degree) oven 20 minutes, or until tender. Serve with vegetables and mayonnaise sauce, made by heating remaining mayonnaise with ½ cup milk and cooking until smooth. This is cooked over low heat, stirring constantly, 5 minutes or until hot.

A dressing for tomatoes, equal to none, is made by merely sieving well ripened avocado and seasoning with lemon juice and garlic salt. This will reduce the pressure on hard-to-get salad oil, ordinarily used for dressings.

Hints for the Home: Sugar bags make good dishcloths. Cut, hem and launder before using.

A dishwashing apron is easy to make out of oil cloth. Cut to pattern, bind the edges and you will have a water-resistant apron.

Old pillow cases are excellent for protecting the tops of clothes while they hang in the closet. Use this tip for putting away out-of-season clothes.

Odd bits of linoleum make nice covers for kitchen or laundry table and may even be used as shelf covering.

Old socks are excellent for applying wax to furniture; they may be used for cleaning silverware, too.

If you are crowded for space, build a blanket bin across the narrow end of a hall, underneath the windows. This is good to use in storing clothes, too. Fold the latter in clean tissue paper to prevent wrinkling.

Ready-Made Dresses

Shop with an eye on possible alterations when buying ready-made garments. Some ready-made dresses are difficult to alter, and clothing is still too scarce to warrant gambling on a misfit.

Whether a garment is to be altered at the store or at home, you are advised against buying one that requires complicated changes. If a dress that fits throughout cannot be found, buy one that fits the upper part of the body, as the skirt is less difficult to alter.

Veterans' SERVICE BUREAU

EDITOR'S NOTE: This newspaper, through special arrangement with the Washington Bureau of Western Newspaper Union at 1616 Eye Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., is able to bring readers this weekly column on problems of the veteran and serviceman and his family. Questions may be addressed to the above Bureau and they will be answered in a subsequent column. No replies can be made direct by mail, but only in the column which will appear in this newspaper regularly.

Speed Up Discharge

With the rate of discharges from the armed forces soon expected to exceed 500,000 per month, several organizations, among them the American Red Cross, are taking steps to expand services to the veterans to make easier the path from uniform to civilian clothes.

The latest move of the Red Cross is the enlargement of the field directors' staffs in hospitals and the installation of full-time paid field directors in veterans administration hospitals to work with Red Cross volunteers now serving in these hospitals.

Many veterans in their haste to get home often pass up the service available at hospitals and separation centers and often regret their haste, for the army and navy and other organizations have provided trained personnel to inform the veteran of all his rights, to help him plan his future and to advise him in many fields. He should take advantage of these facilities.

Questions and Answers

Q. What members of an army man's family are eligible for medical care? Mrs. I. C., Downsville, La.

A. The war department says that the wife and children are normally eligible for medical care, but if a mother, father, or minor sisters or brothers are living within the soldier's immediate household and are dependent upon him for support they too may be eligible for medical care.

Q. My son was killed in action and I sent in a claim for a pension several months ago and haven't heard yet. I am sick and not able to work and I need some help. What can I do? Mother, Dalton, Ga.

A. If your son was unmarried and you were his beneficiary and dependent upon him you are entitled to compensation. If he was married, his widow is entitled to the pension. Suggest that you write again to the Regional Office of the Veterans Administration at Atlanta, Ga., and explain your case. Sometimes action is slow, but if you are entitled to a pension it will be retroactive from the time you made application.

Q.—My son enlisted in the air corps in June, 1944. He was called in January, 1945, and passed all the exams at the induction center. When he received all his "shots" he was sent to a hospital and he was given an honorable discharge March 8, 1945, due to his heart. Is he eligible for G.I. benefits?

A.—If the injury or ailment of your son was received or aggravated by his service, he is eligible for G.I. benefits. You may determine this by having him apply for a certificate of eligibility. Generally speaking a person must have served in the armed forces at least 90 days in order to qualify for benefits under the G.I. Bill.

Q. As I understand it, all World War II veterans who have been honorably discharged from the services are to receive a bonus or payment of $1,040. They are to receive this in $20 a week payments or $520 a year. As I am writing this I am serving time in prison, but I was given a medical discharge from the service in 1942. Will veterans who are serving time in any institution receive this money if they were honorably discharged from the service? No. 18850, Illinois State Penitentiary, Menard, Ill.

A. You have been misinformed, since no veterans receive a bonus. They receive mustering-out pay up to $300 and if they do not obtain employment after applying to the United States Employment Service they may receive unemployment compensation up to $20 per week for a maximum of 52 weeks. If you received a medical discharge, it may be possible that you are entitled to draw service connected disability payments. Suggest you take the matter up with your prison physician for application to the nearest regional office of the Veterans Administration. If you have an honorable discharge, the fact that you are in prison will not make any difference in obtaining any compensation to which you are entitled.

Q. Is a veteran's dependent child, living separately, entitled to a part of his mustering-out pay? B. S., Geneva, Ala.

A. Mustering-out pay is given directly to the honorably discharged veteran, $100 at time of discharge, if he has served less than 60 days; $100 in 30 days if he has served 60 days and no foreign service, and an additional $100 in 60 days if he has had foreign service, a total of $300.

Q.—Can you tell me what fuel is used to power the new jet-propelled P-30 called the "Shooting Star"?

A.—Kerosene.

SNAPPY FACTS about RUBBER

A U. S. Senator traveling in the West stopped to help a young lady change a flat tire. The flat developed a friendship that blossomed into marriage.

Soap is one of the important manufacturing agents of synthetic rubber. B. F. Goodrich has developed a synthetic rubber using a rosin soap derived from Southern pine trees that is a great improvement over ordinary synthetic.

Demand for passenger car tires will total about 70,000,000 casings in the first year after the war—for both new cars and replacements.

THE STORY THUS FAR: Spratt Herlong, motion picture producer, married Elizabeth after her first husband, Arthur Kittredge, had been reported killed in World War I. Elizabeth had been orphaned when a baby and raised by her aunt and uncle in Tulsa, where she met and married Arthur. Shortly after their marriage, Arthur enlisted, and soon afterwards was reported killed. Elizabeth moved to Los Angeles, where she met and married Spratt. Elizabeth overheard her children reading about and laughing at the World War I days. Kessler, a German refugee working on a motion picture script, and his daughter were coming to dinner. Dick was to stay and entertain the daughter.

CHAPTER X

"I'm sorry, Dick," Elizabeth continued with sympathy. "But the boss wants to talk pictures with Mr. Kessler after dinner, and you'll have to take care of the girl."

Cherry and the two guests were already beginning to laugh at Dick's woebegone face. Dick groaned.

"Can she talk?"

"I don't know, Dick, but there's a musical show downtown—"

"Mother, please! Honestly, I—what does she look like?"

Elizabeth started to say, "I've never seen her," when Cherry put in,

"I bet I know. Two yellow braids around her head—"

The others joined,

"Maybe you could play some Wagner records for her."

"What about Faust?"

"Silly, Faust is sung in French."

"I bet she's fat and has applecheeks."

"She's probably intellectual. Lots of refugees are."

"Talk to her about food. They all like to eat."

"I can't talk to her about anything," stormed Dick. "Mother, I've got a date! Why can't the boss tell Mr. Thingum to leave his daughter at home? Why do I have to—and shut up, all of you. I think you're being unsympathetic and awful."

"Dick, please be a good sport," Elizabeth urged. "This doesn't happen often."

"It does too. You remember that horrible girl from New York who was all teeth that I had to take out when her family had dinner here? But this is worse. A foreigner who can't even talk except to say glub-glub!"

"How do you know she can't talk? Her father speaks English."

Dick groaned.

"Be nice about it, Dick," pled Elizabeth. "She'll probably have a very good time if you'll let her. Remember she's in a strange country, and most of those refugees have had some very unpleasant experiences. Can't you be sorry for them at all?"

"It's easy to be sorry for refugees," said Dick, "when you don't have to put up with them."

Torn between a desire to laugh and tell him he needn't do it, and a realization that Mr. Kessler's daughter must be taken care of somehow if he and Spratt were to have a chance to talk business, Elizabeth did not answer immediately. She was glad to hear the sound of a key in the front door.

"There's the boss," said Cherry, getting up.

"Now we can eat!" Dick exclaimed as though glad to have something to rejoice about. He got up to pour a cocktail for his father.

Spratt came in and greeted them all. "You've no idea what a comfortable picture you make around the fire," he remarked as Elizabeth took his coat and Dick gave him a Martini. "Where's Brian?"

"Having dinner with Peter Stern. Cherry, go to the kitchen and tell them the boss is here."

"What have you been doing?" asked Spratt. "Listening to the radio?"

"No, what's going on?"

"The same, only worse. All hell's loose in Russia. Come on upstairs with me while I get cleaned up," he invited Elizabeth. "Cherry, tell them I'll be ready in fifteen minutes."

"Wait a minute, boss," exclaimed Dick. "I've got something important to ask you. Do I have to take that refugee girl on a date tomorrow night?"

"What refugee girl?"

"The one who's coming here to dinner with her old man. Can't she possibly—"

Spratt drew a long breath and started to laugh. "I forgot to tell you. Kessler's daughter," he said, "is eight years old."

The four youngsters gave long simultaneous whistles. "Oh joy, oh rapture unconfined!" sang Dick. "My life is renewed. I don't have to! Did you hear, everybody? She's eight years old! Why didn't you tell me? What were you doing talking about Russia when all the time you knew that girl was eight years old? Me sitting up here dying and you've got to bring up Russia!"

Elizabeth got out of the room ahead of Spratt and ran up the stairs. He followed her. When he came into his bedroom he found her crumpled up in his reading chair. She was laughing uncontrollably.

Spratt stood watching her in amazement. "Elizabeth, what in the world is the matter with you?"

For a moment she could not answer. With an effort she caught her breath, saying, "N—nothing. Only I think—I think that for the first time in my life I've nearly had hysterics."

"Elizabeth, what—"

"Please don't pay any attention to me. I'm behaving like a moron. But it is funny, Spratt. We're sitting on the edge of a volcano dangling our legs over the crater, and Dick knows it—I've just heard him talking, so grim and hard he frightened me, and in fifteen minutes nothing was important to him except that that German girl was eight years old and he didn't have to take her out. Oh, that resilience! Did I ever have it, I wonder?" She began to laugh again, this time more softly. Spratt shrugged, went into the bathroom and turned on the water. When he came out Elizabeth, having made herself be quiet, was wiping her eyes.

Spratt stood over her, shaking his head in confusion. "Did anything happen this afternoon, Elizabeth? You can tell me."

"Not a thing. I came home and got dressed for dinner and lay on the chaise-longue in my room till it was time to get out the cocktails." She stood up. "I'm sorry for being so foolish, Spratt. But every now and then—well, maybe sometimes you've got to laugh so you won't scream."

"Do I have to take that refugee girl on a date tomorrow night?"

"All right," said Spratt, "leave it at that." He never pressed her for explanations, knowing if there was anything she intended to explain he would get it eventually without asking. "You'd better go and do something to your face. You've laughed and cried it streaky."

"All right, I will." Slipping her hands into his, she stood up. "And thank you for being such a calm person. Most men would either have called me a fool or asked a thousand questions."

With an expression of mingled sympathy and amusement, Spratt kissed her. "You're not a fool. Incidentally, you look mighty well in that outfit."

"It's the hostess gown you gave me," Elizabeth reminded him as she went into her room to obliterate the tracks on her face.

Spratt was waiting at the head of the stairs. She smiled at him reassuringly and they started down, and he smiled back. They went in to dinner with the others.

"Oh boy," said Dick as they sat down. "Shrimps to start with. I love 'em."

"So do I," said Spratt, and ate the first one. "Quite a sauce, Elizabeth," he observed. "A decent writer on that picture for a change, and a good dinner—" He grinned at his offspring. "What have the millionaires got that we haven't got?"

"Dyspepsia," said Dick.

At half-past four the following afternoon, Spratt was winding up another conference with the new writer who had come from Germany. Spratt pushed his chair back from his desk and grinned at his colleague.

"That's all for the present, Kessler. We can go into more detail tonight after dinner. And you'll start writing the story-treatment in the morning?"

"Yes, Mr. Herlong." The new writer smiled back, and though his heavy dark beard emphasized his foreignness to this American office and his customary dignity was such that his smile, unlike Spratt's, could hardly be called a grin, he conveyed his acknowledgment of the comradeship that springs up swiftly when two workers discover they can work together. "When you will read the synopsis—I am sorry, the treatment—you will forgive my awkwardness with the language?"

Spratt chuckled. "In the first place, your language is very rarely awkward, and in the second place I can get a dozen writers who know English grammar for one who can tell a story. I don't mind saying, Kessler, you took a load off my shoulders in our conference yesterday. You understand stories—I wish you could tell me how to make all these English grammar writers understand them."

"Perhaps it is only sometimes viewing situations as other people would view them, and not entirely from the unchanging viewpoint of one's self."

"Am I supposed to tell that to the inhabitants of this ego-ridden capital?" Spratt laughed ruefully and shook his head. "Yes, Lydia?" he said as his secretary came in.

Spratt's visitor answered for him. "He wants to see the sketches, and we are no longer in conference, Miss Fraser." He moved forward in his chair, placed his heavy hand on the head of his heavy cane, and pushed himself into a standing position. It was not an easy movement, but he accomplished it with the skill of long practice. Lydia opened the door for him. A clever girl, she managed to make it look like a gesture of deference instead of necessary aid. Their new writer could not stand without the support of his cane, and since he had only his right hand this made it impossible for him to open a door without pushing a chair toward it so he could sit down. Spratt had risen too, and walked over to the entrance.

"Then I'll pick you up at your office this evening, as close to six-thirty as I can, and we'll go to my home for dinner."

"Thank you, Mr. Herlong." He smiled courteously at Lydia. "And thank you, Miss Fraser."

Lydia went with him to the outer door of the bungalow, then returned to Spratt's inner office with the set sketches in her hand. "A remarkable man, Kessler," Spratt observed as he took the sketches.

"Isn't he? To sink into that script forty-eight hours and come up with a solution. And him half dead, too. Did the Nazis beat him up, or was he in the war, or what?"

"I've no idea. You don't ask about those things, though you can't help wondering. Maybe nothing but an auto accident."

"He does manage to bow from the waist in spite of it. Do you suppose he's going to continue forever calling everybody around here Mr. and Miss?"

Spratt laughed a little, and shrugged. "Probably Germans are very formal. Never mind, I like him."

"So do I," said Lydia.

Meanwhile the subject of their conversation walked to his own bungalow, which was conveniently located next door, since his power of walking was limited to very short distances. Explaining to his secretary that Mr. Herlong was to call for him later, he went through the reception room into his private office beyond.

He went over to the mirror on the wall and stood there looking at his reflection. It was not possible that she could recognize him. Between them lay not merely twenty-four years, but the wreckage made by that shell at Chateau-Thierry, which had destroyed him so terribly that it had taken one of the greatest surgeons in Germany five years to put together the semblance of a body that he now possessed. A makeshift that had been uncertain enough in normal times, this frame of his could hardly, after the effort to which it had been forced when he had to get out of Germany, be expected to last much longer. It was only because he was sure he could not last much longer that he was willing now to let himself see Elizabeth. He had never expected to see her again. In those frightful days in the German hospital, he had not wanted to. He had wanted her to be rid of him, as desperately as he had wanted to be rid of himself. Even now he trembled when he remembered that slow, tortured rebuilding, insertion of metal strips to replace shattered bones, stretching of shrunken muscles, inadequate food and inadequate anesthetics, his own screams and curses at the man who persisted in keeping him alive when he wanted to die.

How that doctor had kept at him, with implacable hands that he himself could see only as instruments of horror, forcing into him the life he did not want, and slowly, through all of it, giving him against his will life that was really life—not mere physical existence, but a personality and a will, a re-creation so profound that it seemed quite natural, when he began to realize what was being given him, that along with all the rest he had a new name. Kessler—thank heaven, he had thought then, it was easy to say, for in those days the new language had seemed very difficult, though now it was so much his own that when he first came back to the United States he found that he had half forgotten the old. The doctor's name was not so easy. Jacoby. How he had dreaded that man at first!

He remembered Jacoby, in the days when he himself did not know a word of German, struggling through a scanty knowledge of English to make him understand what was being done to him, which he did not understand and hated Jacoby for doing, never dreaming then that he was meeting the greatest man he was ever to know in his life.

FOLKS & THINGS ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

We knew some wit would come up with the quotation, "Turn backward, turn backward, oh time in your flight," just about the time the clocks were turned back last Sunday morning.

SEEN AND HEARD AT THE FOOTBALL GAME: Tops was Judge Victor Heard's remark when a friend asked where his wife was, he replied, "She couldn't come. She didn't have seventy cents." . . .We know a football coach doesn't like to have a "one-man team" and we know that it takes all eleven of the men to win a game, but if he keeps up the brand of football that he displayed last Friday night they'll have a hard time convincing the fans that Charles (Buckie) Cox isn't the Star Player at Chilton County High this year. The statement is made with no intention of taking one bit of credit from any one of the other players. They all did well in stopping a team that had them outmatched in weight and experience. . .We believe that it was the largest crowd we have ever seen attend a game at the local field. There were easily more than 1,500 fans attending . . . "Gabby" Tiffin, former player and coach at C.C.H.S., was there. He was home on a three-day pass and luck was with him. He got to see a mighty good football game. . .Faces of a number of former players were seen in the stands. . . .Well Holt High School comes to the local field this week. Come out and root for your home team.

Pat Hamilton at The E. L. Klinner Furniture Co., says if we didn't go home in the middle of the afternoon and go to bed with the chickens that we would have known that he put the needed light bulbs in his electric sign several weeks ago. We'll have to apologize to Pat. But it isn't the going in so early. His store just happens to be across the street from a Beauty Parlor and we see no reason in looking toward a Furniture Store.

Things do change so fast. A very short while ago when going to the Bus Station just about everything you saw was in khaki. Had you noticed the crowds lately? Course they are not all getting back into civilian clothes as fast as they would like but you sure can tell a great difference. And once out of uniform it seems alright with the former soldier if he never dons khaki colored clothes again as long as he lives.

CANE CREEK

The singing last Sunday was real good. The old Harp and Harmony Books were used. It was a rainy day for the old people to come out, but a number came and really enjoyed the singing. It made them think of their childhood days and the singing they had then. There was a good number of singers present from different places. We were glad to have them all and invite them back again at any time they can arrange to come.

It was mentioned to make an annual singing once a year here and was voted to have another old book singing here about this time next year. We have a new book singing in June each year, so we will have two annual singings a year.

Mr. Oscar Mims from Sand Mountain, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Miller, Dr. and Mrs. Lonnie Parrish attended the singing here Sunday and many more we didn't know from different places.

The W.M.U. met here Wednesday, October 3rd. The W.M.U. is a good work We had it here once and need another one again. We are glad to welcome anything in the way of helping the Cause of Christ here.

We have a good Sunday School here and meet each Sunday at 10 o'clock. W have our new books. The lessons this quarter are from the New Testament. They are all interesting if we study them right.

Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Bailey and Mary Ella attended the meeting at Robinson Springs Sunday morning. They said that they heard some good Gospel preaching from the Georgia preachers—Bro. Hucklehy and another preacher.

Come to church next Sunday. Sunday School at 10 o'clock; preaching following. There is some business of the church to be attended to and all the members are asked to come and be present. The delegates have all been appointed to go to the Association.

CHILTON ASSOCIATION S. S. TO MEET

All Sunday Schools in Chilton County Association are urged to be present at the Mulberry Baptist Church the first Sunday evening in October which will be October 7th, at two o'clock. We want every Sunday School to be present. Please come; come with your interest.—C. L. Wilkins, Asso., S. S. Secretary.

MUSIC APPRECIATION CLUB

The Clanton Music Appreciation Club will meet on the second Tuesday of October at 4:15 in the home of Mrs. J. C. Jones. Members will please note the change from the third to the second Tuesday.

At this regular meeting we are to have a special program of vocal music presented by Mrs. J. A. Alexander, State President of the Alabama Federation of Music Clubs. This is the first time we have had a state president to visit us. All members are urged to be present.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Bean from Daytona Beach, Fla., visited relatives here recently.

Where they are and How they are

Wm. Fred Bolton Cox, son of Grover and Ethel Bolton of Clanton, was with the first boats to land troops at Tokyo.

He writes that he has more than enough points to get out, but doesn't know how long it will be before they get to him. He has been in the Navy for 35 months, spent part of the time on the Aleutians, taking part in the invasion of Kiska and Attu.

Lucky, so far, Cox has had the pleasure of spending all three Christmas at home, and he, as well as his parents, are hoping that he can be home this Christmas also.

He wishes all his friends, young and old, to write him. His address: William F. Bolton Cox, Yokusuka Navy Base, in care Port Direction, Yokusuka, Japan.

Charles Messer, EM 3-C of this city, who is serving on the heavy cruiser, USS PORTLAND, off Truk witnessed the surrender of by-passed Marianna and Caroline Island Groups.

The Japanese signatories of the Imperial Japanese Fourth Fleet boarded the USS PORTLAND at 0925, Tokyo time, from their motor launch that sailed out of a cove from the mysterious once powerful Truk. The launch was flying a white surrender flag.

Aboard the USS PORTLAND for 20 months, Messer has participated in many operations against the enemy and has earned nine battle stars.

Engagements participated in while aboard this ship are: Marshall Islands, Asiatic- Pacific Raids, Western New Guinea, Western Caroline Islands, Layte, Luzon and Okinawa Shima Assault.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Messer of Clanton.

1st Lt. Oscar Excell Howard of Verbena, Ala., who served 11½ months in the ETO as a Pilot, has arrived at the San Antonio District, AAF Personnel Distribution Command.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Lee Howard and the husband of Mrs. Maggie Dennis Howard.

Lt. Howard recently was liberated from a Prisoner of War Camp in Germany.

James Franklin Clark, S 1-C son of Mrs. B. F. Clark of this city, has been returned to civilian life after serving 37 months in the United States Navy, 30 months sea duty.

He participated in the invasions of France, Sicily and Okinawa.

Henry T. Gregg, Boatswain's mate first class, of Route Two, Stanton, Alabama, served aboard the U S S XANTHUS, which assisted in the occupation of Ominato, Honshu, in Japan.

Ottis E. Grant of Verbena, Ala., has received an honorable discharge from the Army for medical reasons and has returned to his home.

Former Pfc. Grant is the son of Mrs. Mina Grant, of Route Two, Verbena, Ala.

First Lieutenant Elvie M. Kelley of Route Two, Clanton, has arrived at the Oliver General Hospital, Augusta, Ga., as a member of the nursing staff.

Andrew Hickman S 2-C from Great Lakes, Ill., has been spending a 9-day leave here with his mother and father, Rev. and Mrs. A. T. Hickman.

S-Sgt. Harry Margolis, USA, is spending a furlough here with relatives and friends.

Sgt. Robert W. Sumner, who served 24 months in the European (Africa, Italy) theatre of operations as an Armored Gunner, has arrived at the San Antonio District AAF Personnel Distribution Command, after spending a long furlough here with relatives.

Sgt. Sumner wears the Air Medal European Theatre of Operations Ribbon and was a Prisoner of War in Germany.

Th F.F.A. initiated 41 new members last Wednesday night. The officers for the year are: John Rogers, President; Royce Chandler, Vice-President; Bobby Brown, Secretary; Douglas Smith, Treasurer; Mr. L. C. Shields, Adviser; and Bobby Franklin, Reporter. The boys are getting along nicely on painting the shop room. They have applied a first coat of paint and have started on the second.

The Senior Class is going to buy a duplicating machine. They are getting the money to do so by selling candy, and they are also planning a Stunt Night to be given at the school auditorium on October 19th, as announced elsewhere in this paper.

Chilton 4-H Club Boys And Girls Feeding Calves

Chilton County 4-H Club boys and girls are well on the way toward feeding out the best and largest number of club calves that have ever been exhibited in the county. This fourteen unusually good hereford calves were brought into the county and placed with club members. These additional animals will add greatly to the County Show in that the better type animals of the major breeds will be exhibited and every one will have the opportunity to judge the merits of the respective breed.

Of the seventy-eight feeder calves now being fed by Club members there are sixty-one Angus, sixteen herefords and one shorthorn. If these animals are properly fed and fitted Chilton County should have one of the best County Shows in the State.

Very few of the animals now being fed are Chilton County grown calves. In the interest of better bred and managed beef herds, we feel that those who have beef cattle and have a boy or girl of club age should select one of the better animals for their boy or girl to feed. Nothing can do more to create a greater interest and sense of price in good cattle than the feeding of ownership of a good animal, particularly on the part of a boy or girl of club age. Better breeding and management can come only as the result of keen interest in good cattle and a desire to have better cattle. Through allowing a boy or girl to own and feed a beef calf it is almost a certainty that he or she will show a genuine interest that might never grow out of the routine chores of helping care for a beef herd. By allowing a boy or girl to feed an animal many of the things that go to build a sounder livestock program may be learned since the principles of feeding and management are basicly true in any livestock undertaking. Along with invaluable experience that grows out of a project of this nature a boy or girl has the opportunity to recognize a cash return for his work.

Most of the club boys and girls in the county are doing an unusually good job of feeding. Knowing Chilton County Beef Club members as we do, we feel sure that any county in the State will meet stiff competition in any show ring that Chilton County Club members show beef calves.

Below are listed the names of boys and girls who received one or more of the fourteen Herefords that were recently placed:

James Deason, Hollis Deason, Dan Deason, Frances Chambers, Kenneth McGee, E. J. Klinner, Helen Mitchell, Ben Mitchell, Claudie Paul Gentry, Nancy Jane Daniels, Joseph Daniels, Raymond Watley and James E. Coggins.

Thorsby Civic Club Holds Banquet

The Thorsby Civic Club held its semi-annual banquet in the high school auditorium last night, with the town fathers, Boy Scouts, girls' chorus and visitors furnishing the program.

Rev. Ashley Chappell of Birmingham, as guest speaker, provided uproarous laughter by his continuous chain of jokes and caricatures. He was presented by Mr. Vincent Sutlive, a former teacher in Thorsby.

Miss Lillian McKee, vice president of the Club, was the toast mistress. The Thorsby Institute girls' chorus sang several folk songs. The troop flag, purchased by the Civic Club was presented by the Boy Scouts.

Mayor Rascoe Maddox called on members of the town council for reports. Last all, soon after their election, the town fathers had outlined their plans in the Civic Club Banquet looking forward to an annual accounting. Attendance has been nearly perfect in all of the 26 regular meetings.

President, Edwin Culp; Vice-President, Marietta Hamilton; Secretary elected were as follows:

many town improvements have been made, all meetings and records have been kept open to the public. A detailed, printed, financial statement was presented last night to members of the Civic Club.

The Club voted to hold a Community Fair on November 10th.

Agricultural products and rural life values will be featured. Leaders in Thorsby want to develop a farm life center rather than immitate city ways.

W. C. White and L. C. Nixon, Sumter County, constructed a farm fish pond for $200.00 and then rented the fishing rights for five years at $40.00 per year, enough to cover the cost of construction. In addition to paying the rent, the sportsmen fertilized the pond.

Weiner Roast

The Juniors and Intermediates of the Baptist Church who won a recent attendance contest were entertained with a weiner roast by the Sunday School September 25th, at five-thirty on the school grounds. After games and contests over thirty Sunday School members enjoyed the "hot dogs" and "cokes" of the occasion.

P.-T. A.

The P.-T. A. had its first meeting of the year September 26th at four o'clock in the High School auditorium with Mrs Leo Langston, the president, presiding. A cordial welcome was extended to the parents and teachers by the president and the program outline and plans for the year were discussed. The organization desires to strive this year for improved school - community relationships, particularly in the field of recreation. Several proposed projects were discussed and undertaken, including purchase of library books and recreation pamphlets, lighting of the grammar school building, purchase of a record player. Over thirty parents were present at the meeting, and there was a spirit of enthusiasm and optimism that bodes well for the success of the organization this year.

The next meeting of the group will be October 10 at 7 p.m., when Parents' Night will be observed. All parents and patrons of the school are most cordially invited to all P.-T. A. meetings. Miss Henson's 7th grade won the attendance pennant.

Quest Club

The September meeting of the Quest Club was held at the home of Mrs. Seymour Reynolds with Miss Hilda Smith co-hostess on Friday, September 28th, at 8 o'clock. Members answered roll call with the names of contemporary Russians — the program subject being Russia. The resignation of Mrs. Sidney Reynolds as treasurer was accepted. Mrs. Preston was welcomed as a new member.

Mrs. Joyce Howard, program chairman, briefly reviewed William White's "Report on the Russians," and presented the other members on program. Miss Miriam Harvey talked on "Russian Women." Miss Charlotte Nichols reviewed Tolstoi's "War and Peace," and Mrs. Leo Langston raised some pertinent questions about what has taken place in Russia since the Communistic regime.

After the program a delicious salad plate was served by the hostesses, assisted by Annette and Mary Edna Reynold, to the following members: Mesdames John Adams, Sr., John Adams, Jr., George Naish, Silsbee McNeill, Cecil Martin, Joyce Howard Jack Lenoir, Bill DuBose, Leo Langston, Lake Thompson; Misses Melba Patton, Ola Rodgers, Paralee Henson, Flora Mae Robinson, Charlotte Nichols, Miriam Harvey, Sybil Langston, Elizabeth McNeill and Mary Clements.

Stunt Night

The Senior Class is sponsoring a Stunt Night to be presented in the High School Auditorium on October 19th. The meeting of the Quest Club has been changed to October 26th, so as not to conflict with this date. Each of the high school classes will present a stunt in competition for a prize. This should be a delightful occasion and everyone who likes a good time should be present. Proceeds will go toward a duplicator to be purchased by the class for the school.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

CIO Strives to Maintain High Pay Level in Postwar Industry; Act to Spur Building Activity

Released by Western Newspaper Union.
Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)
(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Facing tough winter in war-torn Austria, Viennese scratch for future provisions. At left, woman is shown picking up stray grain in harvested field, while at right another woman is pictured carrying home wood found in shelled forest.

LABOR:
Seek Peace

Armed with emergency powers, Secretary of Labor Lewis Schwellenbach moved into the troubled industrial front, where CIO demands for appreciable wage boosts threatened to retard the reconversion program and jeopardize stabilization policy.

Schwellenbach faced no easy task, what with the strategic oil, automobile, farm equipment and steel unions striving for wage readjustments to bring 40-hour-a-week pay up to wartime overtime levels, and major producers bucking the demands in the face of rigid price control.

In all instances, CIO demands for substantial wage boosts were predicated on the claim that the big companies had made sizable wartime profits and could use the money to defray part of the increases until peacetime production could be re-established on a volume basis.

While oil workers already had walked out of midwest refineries in a strike that threatened to spread and imperil the national fuel supply, principal interest continued to center in the troubled automobile situation, where the United Automobile Workers headed by R. J. Thomas laid plans for enforcing their demands for a 30 per cent wage increase by walking out on individual companies and leaving their competitors free to invade their markets.

R. J. Thomas

In assuming command of a labor department strengthened by the inclusion of the War Labor board, war manpower commission and United States employment service, Secretary Schwellenbach planned to proceed slowly before exerting emergency powers, first exhausting ordinary procedure.

PACIFIC:
MacArthur Disputed

Taking sharp difference with Gen. Douglas MacArthur's declaration in Tokyo that only 200,000 American troops may be needed for the Japanese occupation, Pres. Harry S. Truman feared for its effect on army demobilization plans and Acting Secretary of State Dean Acheson said that at this time it was difficult to forecast the eventual size of the force.

Basing his estimate upon the Japs' wholehearted effort at co-operation with his command, MacArthur's latest figure of 200,000 was a sharp reduction from the 400,000 recently projected and the 900,000 at first thought necessary. In making his statement, MacArthur said that the Japs' execution of his dictates through their governmental framework relieved the U. S. of establishing an elaborate military authority to perform the same tasks.

In seeking to offset expectations that MacArthur's announcement might lead to speedier demobilization, President Truman declared the program was not dependent upon occupation needs.

Speaking for the state department, Acting Secretary Acheson asserted that the ultimate size of the occupation force will depend upon the scope of the job of eradicating the whole Jap war-making economy.

DEMOBILIZATION:
Point Cut

Asserting that no man would be kept just to maintain a big army, Gen. George C. Marshall revealed a stepped-up demobilization program providing for a further decrease of discharge points to 60 on November 1 following the October 1 slash to 70. At the same time, the total necessary for officers was to be cut to 75.

Marshall reviewed demobilization plans at a meeting with 300 congressmen at which he also affirmed receipt of General MacArthur's estimate of an occupation force of only 200,000 for Japan by next summer. Though MacArthur had reduced his estimate, Marshall said, General Eisenhower's figure of 400,000 for Germany remains the same.

Declaring that the present rate of releases has been determined solely by the availability of discharge facilities, Marshall said that all G.I.s without useful army work would be freed within three to four weeks. With the exhaustion of high point men by late winter, the army may further alter its demobilization program by releasing all men with two years of service.

POSTWAR BUILDING:
Lid Off

With removal of all building controls, government agencies bent themselves to the task of speeding up construction and at the same time keeping costs within bounds to head off an inflationary boom during the reconversion period.

As experts looked for the erection of 500,000 private dwellings next year and a peak of 800,000 in 1948, officials sought to increase the supply of scarce building materials, permitting wage and price boosts and priorities to break bottlenecks, if necessary. Inventory controls also were to be strengthened to prevent hoarding and creation of artificial shortages.

At the same time, OPA announced that it would tighten price control over building materials to counteract heavy demand, while federal credit agencies prepared to discourage loose financing in a market booming with home needs and prospects for high postwar employment.

RETAIL PRICING:
Absorb Increases

Declaring that up to now retailers have not been squeezed by price control, OPAdministrator Chester Bowles reiterated government policy that dealers would have to absorb any increases in manufacturing costs in the reconversion period.

Rejecting a plea of a retailer group that such absorption would be uneconomic and unfair, Bowles said that dealers' markups were not reduced during the war, and records show that profits soared under increased volume and lower operating costs. Whereas the profit margin of department stores stood at 1½ during the 1936-'39 period, it reached 12 per cent in 1944, he said.

Under OPA's pricing policy for manufacturers for the reconversion period, some increases will be permitted to allow for higher labor and material costs. Profit margins will be held to half the industry-wide average for larger businesses or prewar levels for smaller firms, however.

Industry Takes Kindlier View of Oldsters

Because of their generally fine performance while "pinch-hitting" during the wartime labor shortage, older workers will find employment opportunities much broader in the postwar era than in prewar years, Northwestern National Life Insurance company found in a survey.

Hard-and-fast age limitations existing in the prewar era were pretty thoroughly broken down during the war and will stay broken in many fields, although most large concerns will conduct their most intensive recruiting in the 20 to 30 age group.

Many employers who have had unsatisfactory experiences with irresponsible young employees during the wartime labor shortage express a definite preference for older workers, who are loyal and very dependable.

NAVY:
Two-Ocean Dimension

A two-ocean fleet almost five times the size of the pre-Pearl Harbor force was proposed by naval chiefs at a hearing of the house naval committee.

Under the proposal advanced by Secretary of the Navy Forrestal and Fleet Admiral King, 300 ships would remain in active duty and another 100 would be kept in ready reserve. The remaining 680 vessels would be laid up but maintained in sea-going condition. A total of 500,000 enlisted men and 58,000 officers would be needed for the 300 active ships and planes and 815,000 to man the entire fleet.

For implementation of U. S. defenses, the navy recommended establishment or retention of major naval bases for the Pacific in the Aleutians, Hawaii, Canal Zone, Guam, Saipan, Tinian, the Bonin-Volcano island group, the Admiralties and Philippines. Atlantic posts would include Argentina in Newfoundland, Bermuda and Trinidad.

ATOMIC TEST:
On Battleship

Even while plans were being mapped in Washington, D. C., for the postwar fleet, naval officials prepared to carry out a test of the atomic bomb's effect on surface vessels 500 miles off conquered Japanese shores.

Target for the experiment, which might eventually lead to a redesign of surface vessels as followed Billy Mitchell's test bombardment of the Virginia in 1923, will be the Jap battleship Nagato, with its 14-inch steel armor plate.

Although the restyling of warships after Mitchell's successful experiments led to their strengthening against air attack, they have remained vulnerable to underwater attack. So far, reports on atomic bombings have indicated the main force of the explosion is up and out, but naval chieftains also would like to determine any underwater effect.

16th Child Her Biggest

The mother of 15 children, Mrs. Francis Strohl's 16th child was an 18 lb. baby girl. The infant was one of the heaviest delivered, with a 25 pounder born in 1916 topping the record. 38 years old, Mrs. Strohl is a resident of Lawton, Pa.

LONG FLIGHT:
Across Great Circle

Approximately 25 hours and 43 minutes after taking off from northern Japan, the first of three giant B-29 bombers glided onto the sprawling Chicago airport, to be shortly followed by the remaining two after a 5,995 mile experimental run.

With three top U. S. air force commanders in the planes, the original plans called for a non-stop run to Washington, D. C., to test the great circle route and attendant weather in the far north. Because of strong headwinds during the early stages of the flight necessitating increased use of gas, however, the B-29s decided to land in the Windy City for refueling.

Though traveling 5,995 miles in a long journey which took them over Kamchatka, Alaska and Canada before reaching the U. S., the American airmen led by Maj. Gen. Curtis E. Le May fell 1,100 miles short of the record non-stop flight set by two Britons flying from Egypt to Australia in 1938.

WAR CRIMES:
Try Nazis

Charged with systematic starvation and neglect of internees at the notorious Belsen concentration camp, 45 Nazi men and women tried to fight back at their war crimes trial conducted at a British military court in Lueneburg, Germany.

In seeking to defend themselves, the accused followed the line that most of the 40,000 prisoners in the camp were all habitual criminals, felons and homo-sexuals. Britons taking over the camp upon the Nazi collapse claimed that their experience showed it was not necessary to use force to govern the internees.

In first seizing the camp, the British counted 13,000 dead, and another 13,000 died later because their condition was beyond treatment, medical officers charged. Though supplies were obtainable in the immediate vicinity of the camp, no effort was made to procure provisions.

U. S. INCOME:
1944 Peak

Figures compiled by the department of commerce show that total income payments to individuals in the United States in 1944 rose to a new high record of $148,090,000,000. The largest percentage of this total, or $19,345,000,000, went to individuals in New York state while the smallest percentage, or $196,000,000 went to people in Nevada. The amounts differed among the various states because of the size of the population per capita income.

Nation Can Head Off Postwar Crime Wave

Quick Reconversion Can Prevent Era of Lawlessness, FBI Chief Says; Expects Vets to Demand Order.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, 1616 Eye Street NW, Washington, D. C.

Will there be a postwar crime wave in the United States?

That question was put to the man who will have to deal with it if there is one—FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover. He threw the answer back on me—and on a lot of other people in these United States. Here it is:

Whether we have a postwar crime wave in the United States depends on how well we as a nation can reconvert. If we do have a period of lawlessness, it will in all probability be led by teen-agers. The returning veteran has it in his power to make or break such a crime wave.

That's not beating around the bush. Let's look at the facts, disturbing though they may be, as the FBI director laid them before me.

After the last war, he said, there grew up a lawlessness from which the United States has never been entirely free since. When the gangster era of the 20s and 30s was finally broken up there was some decline in criminal tendencies. Nevertheless, just before World War II began in Europe crime was still very much with us—in fact, the United States had 11 times more cases of murder and manslaughter than England and Wales.

With our entry into the war, crimes increased, the emphasis on type changing from crimes against property to crimes against the person—murder, assault, rape and the like. On V-J Day a major crime was being committed every 23 seconds in the United States. One person in every 22 in this country had been arrested at some time or other.

New Crop of Criminals Teen-Agers

Perhaps the most ominous single factor about the picture with which we start the postwar years is that the most frequent criminals in the United States today are boys and girls 17 years of age.

Director Hoover explained why this has come about. These teenagers have been maturing in a period of great political, economic and social upheaval. As they were entering the critically formative years for them in the beginning teens, fathers and big brothers, to whom they might have looked for guidance, left home to enter the armed services. Mothers frequently had to take jobs which kept them away from home, leaving boys and girls to their own social and recreational devices.

Frequently, families pulled up roots and moved to teeming industrial centers in other parts of the country where jobs could be had in war plants. Normal living was impossible under such overcrowded conditions. There was a general spirit of wartime abandon which impressionable youth was not long in catching—lack of discipline, lack of personal responsibility, became the accepted thing. A "war hero" attitude developed in many of those too young to "join up."

Then teen-age boys and girls found that because of the manpower shortage they could stop school and take jobs where they would make more money than some of their elders did before the war. Coming accidently onto what seemed sudden wealth, and of their own making, found them unprepared to use it wisely.

"We have been developing a generation of money-rich and character-poor Americans."

While we had our attention on the far-flung battlefronts the foundation was being laid for one of our major postwar problems on the home front.

There is another condition that has been a breeding ground for lawlessness during the war, according to Hoover, and which may spread if crime detection and law enforcement do not keep ahead of it.

"Gangsterism has been showing signs of revival during the war," he said. "There have been gang wars in places where they used to thrive. Hijacking, shakedown rackets, black markets and bootleg have been on the increase."

Therefore, the groundwork has been laid for a new era of Dillingers.

Then there are the returning veterans. Because of their peculiar training, will they present a new band of criminals efficiently trained in taking life and appropriating property that does not belong to them?

Vets Desire Orderly Community

On this subject, Director Hoover issued an emphatic "No!" Here is his reasoning:

"Of course, soldiers are trained to kill—but so are we of the FBI and so are police officers. But no man of the FBI has ever been arrested for a crime of violence. There will be criminals among the returning veterans, it is true—criminals who will operate more efficiently than they would have if they hadn't had army training. But these are the men who probably would have been criminals anyway if they had remained civilians. After all, the army is only a cross-section of the American people. Of course, the real criminals never got into the army—their records were too bad.

"I expect the returning veteran to be a big help to us in combatting crime," Hoover went on. "The boys who are returning from the battlefields have seen so much of destruction, horror, disease, the dangers of dictatorship that they are anxious to see their communities get back to normal, peaceful ways. They are more interested in their homes and civil affairs. They want law and order over here."

The FBI expects the veterans to be a major influence on the criminal tendencies of the teen-agers.

"If the big brothers and fathers coming back settle down into jobs or go back to school, they can show the younger boys and girls how to be good citizens. The youngsters look up to these men as heroes—they can be a strong influence on them."

But the responsibility for leading the teen-agers aright does not rest solely on the veterans—nor alone on the agencies of law enforcement.

"The question of crime among our youth cannot be pawned off on a few juvenile courts, overburdened juvenile bureaus, and the local police," Director Hoover declared. "These agencies can help materially, but the big job is getting every parent, business man, school teacher, salesman, farmer, mechanic, housewife, and every other forward-looking citizen to knuckle down to the two-fisted realization that this is their job and it is up to them to do something about it."

But no matter what is done to try to meet a crime situation that now has a potentiality for great evil in this country, there is one thing which Hoover believes will determine in the long run whether it will be law or lawlessness from here on.

"Whether or not we have a postwar crime wave will depend in the last analysis on how we as a nation convert to a peacetime basis," Director Hoover announced emphatically. "You can't divorce economics from crime. Although it is true that having money does not necessarily prevent a person from committing a crime, not having money is a definite cause of it. When people are out of work, there is a greater chance for them to get into trouble than when they are employed."

"If the Republicans don't look out, this guy Truman is going to pick up some votes right out from under their noses, he's so darned human," a political wiseacre whispered to me at the Press Club party for Byron Price.

We were watching the President mingle with the guests, obviously enjoying himself.

Just then a colleague of mine on the weekly press came up. His face was wreathed in smiles.

"Guess what," he exclaimed. "I just said to the President 'I'm from Kansas City' and what do you think he said? 'That's a suburb of a certain city, isn't it?' "

And my friend, who has been a Republican since he can remember and especially so in the last 12 years, is beginning to think that "this guy Truman" is all right.

When the party was breaking up the President was heard to observe with a broad Missouri grin that he was having as good a time as he did when he was at the Press Club last. That time he was still vice president and his picture was taken playing the piano with movie star Lauren Bacall perched atop it.

In 1940 this country had less than 13½ million men in what is considered the productive age group of 45 to 64. It is estimated that in 1970 there will be over 18½ million.

When the German armies left Holland each soldier was permitted to carry 75 pounds only. Any more was confiscated by the Hollanders. But they wouldn't have had much chance to loot anyhow because the German civilians left the Netherlands ahead of them and left very little behind that wasn't nailed down.

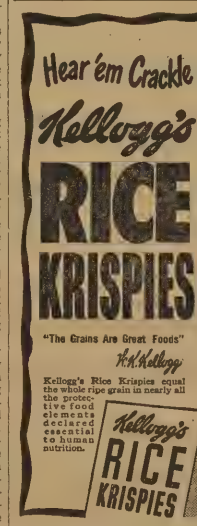
WORKS WONDERS FOR MRS. WILLIAMS

NASHVILLE, TENN.—A recent letter from Mrs. Johnny Williams of Nashville, Tennessee, to the Faultless Starch Company reveals an important time-saving ironing secret. Here is what Mrs. Williams wrote:

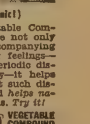
"For the past three years I have been doing my own laundering. Last week I decided to give Faultless Starch a trial. It certainly made my ironing easier and I finished in almost half the time. I shall never stop praising Faultless Starch; and I am telling all my friends about it. It sure worked wonders for me."

Would you like to save half your ironing time, like Mrs. Williams does? We certainly can't promise it, of course, because you surely iron with a different iron and in a different way—but, you can't lose anything by trying Faultless Starch. And it may help you save time, just as it has Mrs. Johnny Williams.

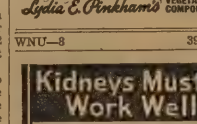


EASY, BEAUTIFUL IRONING

There is an important reason why Faultless Starch makes ironing so easy. You see, Faultless Starch contains ironing-aids, already mixed in, that keep the iron from sticking. No more fighting a "sticky" iron. No more pushing or pulling at the end of each stroke. Your iron just slides along, smoothly and beautifully. No wonder Mrs. Williams found she could save half her ironing time.



YOU DESERVE FAULTLESS



Why should you go on fighting a "sticky" iron, when Faultless Starch can make your ironing go so easy? Why tire yourself out when Faultless Starch can help save your back, your arms, your legs? Why work so hard when Faultless Starch can make it so easy to do beautiful ironing?

Just ask your grocer for Faultless Starch—and use it. Then you'll know why Mrs. Williams says it "works wonders" for her. —Adv.

Kidneys Must Work Well—

For You To Feel Well

24 hours every day, 7 days every week, never stopping, the kidneys filter waste matter from the blood.

If more people were aware of how the kidneys must constantly remove surplus fluid, excess acids and other waste matter that cannot stay in the blood without injury to health, there would be better understanding of why the whole system is upset when kidneys fail to function properly.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination sometimes warns that something is wrong. You may suffer nagging backache, headaches, dizziness, rheumatic pains, getting up at nights, swelling.

Why not try Doan's Pills? You will be using a medicine recommended the country over. Doan's stimulate the function of the kidneys and help them to flush out poisonous waste from the blood. They contain nothing harmful. Get Doan's today. Use with confidence. At all drug stores.

OPPORTUNITY FOR YOUNG MEN WHO WANT TO ENLIST IN THE NAVY

M. H. Potter, Petty Officer in charge of the Montgomery Navy Recruiting Station, has announced that Lieut. Commander Fred M. Sloss, Director of Naval Officer Procurement, New Orleans, will be in Montgomery on Monday, October 8th, to interview and test young men who wish to become Aviation Officers in the Navy.

Commander Sloss will conduct the interviews and examinations at the Navy Recruiting Station, 501 New Post Office Building, Montgomery.

To be eligible for this program, the applicant may be 17 or 18 years of age, but not yet have reached his 19th birthday by November 1, 1945. He must be a high school graduate and have a strong desire to fly.

Those passing the preliminary examinations will be furnished transportation to New Orleans for final consideration. If successful there, they will be enlisted and ordered to a Navy V-12 school on or about November 1 for approximately a year's college training. They will then be given another year's training in flying, and upon graduation will be commissioned as Ensigns. In addition to all expenses, those enlisted will receive pay as apprentice seaman in college and pay as Aviation Cadets in flight training.

WHAT FARMERS WANT IN POST - WAR MARKET

About one farmer in four is looking forward to the time when he can buy a tractor or some other piece of farm machinery after the war, according to answers of representative farmers in a recent survey made by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Almost as many expect to buy automobiles or trucks with some of their wartime savings.

Next to new machinery, the farmers said they want new home furnishings, improvements to the farm home and other farm buildings, and electric current and equipment. Some who do not own farms said they intend to buy land after the war.

MORAL ECHOES

Rev. D. W. Haskew, D.D.

Recently a prominent church woman stood before an audience of 4,000 people at Winona Lake, and told them why she had burned up forty decks of cards out of her home. Said said, "I found myself playing cards from 10 a.m. to 11 p.m. I had no time for anything else. Our card club was undermining our church life, and the church that we all professed to love, was dying for the need of helpers. I saw, as did many others, that the card games and the card craze is the most serious competitor that the church has today. I have given up all card games and that is what I would advise that you do. Card parties are time wasters. If there be no special harm in the playing of the game. yet the game is wrong because it takes time away from things that we should be doing that is worth while." That woman stood erect and told a great truth. All card parties are time wasters.

Entering the Aegean sea the old captain threw over his anchor and went ashore. That night there was a great storm, and the captain could not hope for his anchor to hold, but the next morning his ship stood proudly out to sea. When he went to pull up his anchor it was hard to move, and when it did come up, brought with it the anchor of a man of war. The fluke of his anchor had caught in the ring of the anchor lost by the large ship as it lay deep in the mud that was below and the anchor held. Every man is a traveler on the Ocean of Life, and we should have an anchor sure and steadfast, entering into the Unseen, which is within the veil. Let your anchor of faith enter the circle of God's goodness and mercy and you will be safe.

An old shoe cobbler attended the public debates where the auguments were made in Latin. On seeing him there one of the learned professors asked the unlettered old man if he understood Latin. "No," replied the old shoe man, "But I know who is wrong in the augument." "That is strange," said the wise man. "You do not understand Latin, pray tell me how you know who is wrong in the augument?" "That is easy. Why I just watch and see who gets mad first," said the old man. That test may go wrong sometimes, but most generally it is true. When a fellow flares up and snaps and snarls when there is a difference of opinions, he is most likely to be in the wrong. Let not your passion arise if you would be a full overcomer.

Purebred Jersey Bulls Available To County Farmers

Arrangements have been worked out with one of the State's leading Jersey cattle breeders whereby Chilton County farmers can secure high quality registered Jersey bull calves without a direct cash outlay. This arrangement should make it possible for Chilton County farmers to make speedier progress with their cattle improvement program.

This arrangement is briefly as follows:

1. Chilton County farmers agrees to accept a quality Jersey calf without cost; to feed and manage animal in accordance with good dairy cattle management practices; and to maintain this animal for breeding purposes and dairy cattle improvement in their respective community. They also agree to charge $1.50 service fee which is to be kept by the Chilton County farmer.

2. The breeder agrees to furnish a Jersey Bull Calf without initial cost; to supply a copy of the animal's pedigree and registration information, and to assist the farmer in placing the animal at the time he is ready to be moved or sold.

At time animal is sold—which must be agreeable to both parties—the sale price of animal is to be divided equally between the breeder and the Chilton County farmers.

Civilian demands for farm products probably will continue high well into 1945 to maintain the prices of most farm products closest to current levels, reports the U. S. Bureau of Agricultural Economics

This is the Kind of a Company We Are

THE POLICY of ALABAMA POWER CO.

IT IS THE POLICY of Alabama Power Company to generate, transmit and distribute electricity to its customers at the lowest cost consistent with good service and sound business principles. Recognizing that the success of its industrial and business customers—and the satisfaction of all its customers—depend upon an ample and continuous supply of power, the Company places the quality of its service first among its operating objectives. It will never sacrifice its excellent service to other considerations.

Our Progress is Bound Up With Alabama's Progress

OUR PROGRESS is inseparably bound up in the progress of Alabama. Realizing the need for balancing agriculture with industry, we will always work wholeheartedly for the development of Alabama, supporting every movement to build and expand industry in the State. We will continue our efforts, which have been so productive over the years, to induce new industries to locate in Alabama. We believe that the attainment of these objectives would conserve our greatest resource—the young men and women preparing to embark on their careers—by giving them the opportunity to find suitable jobs here in Alabama. In keeping with our policy of always being ready with power for any industry which might need it, we will continue to anticipate demands by scheduling the building of modern generating plants so as always to have a reasonable capacity in reserve.

Good Service at Low Cost

WE BELIEVE that the greatest good can come to the citizens of Alabama only when the benefits of good electric service at low rates are spread as widely as possible. To this end, it has been, and will continue to be, our policy to cover completely the service areas of the Company with transmission and distribution lines so that every citizen—whether on the farm or in the city—who can economically use our service will have it at his door. We will continue to inform customers of new and better methods of using electricity and will promote the use of appliances which will benefit customers by saving labor and bringing new comforts and economies.

Our Triple Responsibility

WE WILL CONTINUE to maintain congenial working conditions and just rates of pay, with an equal opportunity for advancement to every man and woman in our employ. We recognize a triple responsibility—to the public, to our employees and to investors—and our obligation to try to maintain a just balance among these three interests. We recognize that it is a duty and a privilege to participate as a good citizen in the development of every community within our service area through the payment of taxes and otherwise, and to this end we pledge the services of the men and women of our organization.

STATE CAPITOL NEWS

Montgomery, Ala. — "Motor fuel taxes for September yielded $1,650,878, or $335,000 more than for September, 1944, when rationing was in effect," Revenue Commissioner H. G. Dowling said today. "The private cars are hitting the road again, though freight shipment by motor truck may have slowed up slightly. The greatly increased movement of private vehicle sends the gas tax soaring.

"For the entire fiscal year, gasoline tax collections will total $16,343,000 or $1,700,000 above last year. Only two years in history have shown collections in excess of current amounts. In 1940-41, the tax yielded $17,479,940, and in 1941-42, $18,583,524.

"I predict that within a year the yield will pass twenty millions for improved roads."

Studies are under way to determine whether sales tax tokens may be abolished in Alabama without working any unfairness or hardship upon the general public or the merchants.

In Mobile, the Albright Drug Stores, 15 in number, are checking cash register slips to determine the exact tax that certain bracket payments might yield. The State Legislative Reference Service is checking the laws, brackets and experience of other sales tax States.

"The State Department of Revenue is anxious to remove the nuisance of tax tokens, provided this action will not result in increased costs to the public, losses to merchants, or abnormal profits on tax collections to particular businesses," Commissioner Dowling said. "Many types of businesses in Alabama have already eliminated the use of tokens and installed an informal bracket system of tax collection."

Nearly one-fourth of all the old people in Alabama, 65 years of age and older, were being assisted by the State Department of Public Welfare at the end of the fiscal year, September 30. Number of those 65 years old or above receiving aid was 32,383, a fraction over 23 percent of the total number of Alabamians in that age group. Thousands of needy children were also receiving help — 15,684 in their own homes, in line with the policy of keeping families together wherever possible, and 347 in foster homes.

Acting at request of the American Legion, Governor Sparks has proclaimed the week beginning October 1 as a week to be devoted to employing the physically handicapped. "Public officials, civic organizations, private clubs and groups are hereby urged to aid in this program for the employment of such a worthy class of our citizens," the proclamation stated.

Provision of law for recording without charge, in probate offices, of honorable discharges from the armed forces applies also to the certificate of honorable service given to officers when they are returned to inactive status. Attorney - General Robert B. Harwood ruled recently. The attorney-general held that "for all practical purposes release to inactive duty evidenced by a certificate of honorable service constitutes a termination of military service on the part of the officer. It is therefore my opinion that the certificate of honorable service awarded to an officer who is returned to inactive status is in the same category as an honorable discharge from military service and is entitled to the same treatment, and the holder thereof is entitled to the same privileges as the holder of an honorable discharge."

A prison building program to cost an estimated $158,300 has been approved by the State Building Commission, cost to be borne by money from the prison department's building fund, Director E. P. Russell announced today. A tuberculosis hospital at the State prison for women at Wetumpka is first on the list, to cost $33,000. Other items include: At Atmore Prison, laundry and equipment, $29,000; renovation of main buildings $28,000; and construction of fertilizer storage house, $5,000. At Draper Prison, elimination of fire hazards in tobacco factory and storage buildings by construction of brick and concrete buildings, $55,000.

Many a big deal has been made possible through a small want ad.

HANDY ELLIS LEADS IN RACE FOR GOVERNOR

There are many prominent Alabamians mentioned as probable candidates for the state's highest position—among them, Shelby County's Handy Ellis now leading by a reliable state poll recently taken—Jim Folsom of Cullman, Elbert Boozer of Anniston, Albert Carmichael, former Attorney General of Alabama (recently returned from overseas with the U.S.A.) Gordon Persons of Montgomery, and Joe Poole (more recently identified as leading the opposition to the proposed Constitution - Amendment), "Buster" Lawson, a major of World War No. II and a Supreme Court Justice, and Earl McGowin of Greenville, Alabama well known legislator from Butler County.

HANDY ELLIS

Astute "political preamasticator" Hubert Baughn of Alabama Magazine has this to say regarding the Governor's race. We quote: "Of all the gubernatorial candidates Lieutenant Governor Handy Ellis continues to the most sought after speaker for county and community gatherings."

Hugh DuBose says: "Political wise folks now figure Handy Ellis has 60 per cent of the state vote if the election waa held today. My opinion is that it would run higher than that in Jefferson County." (Radio News.)

The Huntsville Times has this to say of Shelby County's favorite son—"Lieutenant Governor Handy Ellis is the most formidable candidate so far in the field to succeed Governor Sparks."

Hugh Sparrow in The Birmingham News states the following: "Lieut Governor Handy Ellis, according to political observers agree that he is as much the No. 1 candidate for Governor that he was one year ago."

"The Lieutenant Governor, who has the Bibb Graves political touch when it comes to making and retaining friends, and political ties, has been quietly busy for months. Apparently he has emerged after the 1945 Legislature in a stronger position than when the session opened."

If these keen observers of "political straws in the wind" may be relied upon to furnish correct information then Shelby County will have the honor of sending for the second time in its history, a well known statesman to the Governor's chair—and if Shelby County's voting contingent is used as a measuring rod in this calculation—then Handy Ellis will be the next Governor of Alabama and will serve efficiently, wisely and well all the people of his native state filling the highest honor his fellow Alabamians can bestow upon him, with dignity and distinction.

(Paid Pol. Adv. by Friends of Handy Ellis).

Four meetings of county home agents and assistants, together with home specialists and supervisors of Alabama Extension Service, will be held next week. The north Alabama workers will meet in Birmingham October 9; those of North Central Alabama in Birmingham October 10; those in southwest Alabama in Montgomery October 11 and those of southeast Alabama in Auburn on October 12th.

Work for 1946 will be discussed and planned.

An easy way to make sour cream dressing is simply to whip the cream until it is smooth and somewhat stiff. Then add a little salt, and if you like it, add a dash of dill or onion juice.

In appreciation of beneficial war work which was accomplished by Alabama home agents and home demonstration councils, Governor Sparks and Haygood Paterson, Montgomery, have sent to Elizabeth Forney, state home agent, a service award "in acknowledgement of meritorious services rendered in behalf of national war salvage program."

The U. S. Department of Agriculture Cold Storage Report has issued a report indicating the lowest cold storage holdings of eggs on record for September. Total holdings of shell eggs amounted to 4,721,000 cases compared with a total of 7,653,000 cases on September 1, 1944, and a 5-year average on that date of 7,061,000 cases.

Free MUFFLER INSPECTION SERVICE

Don't take chances with a leaky, clogged, worn-out exhaust system

NEW Ford MUFFLER

A New Muffler Insures Power and Economy

If the muffler on your car is clogged, it can set up an excessive back pressure which can greatly cut down the power-efficiency of your engine. Let us inspect your muffler today and if necessary install a new one. Then your car will have more pep and power; you'll save on gear-shifting and use less gas.

How long since you examined the exhaust system of your war-time car? A leaky, clogged, worn-out muffler is not only dangerous, but it saps the efficiency of your engine, wastes vital gas.

QUIETER AND SAFER

A new muffler will make your car much quieter, much safer to drive. Bring your car to us for free muffler inspection. If the tail pipe is rusty and ragged, and there's an unusually loud exhaust noise when you speed up the engine, you probably need a new muffler. We have an ample stock and they are inexpensive, completely installed.

Star Dust
STAGE—SCREEN—RADIO

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

By VIRGINIA VALE

WHEN Ann Sothern's 8-months-old daughter Patricia is old enough to aspire to fill her mother's shoes, she'll have a complete set of "Maisie" films and airshow recordings to study. Mama (who is Mrs. Robert Sterling in private life), has had each of her "Maisie" movies reduced to 16 mm. sound film for her daughter's library. And since she started the Wednesday night CBS radio series she's had special recordings made of each broadcast. Incidentally, the latest popularity rating of the "Maisie" broadcasts shows a marked increase over the previous survey—in fact, a gain of nearly 3,000,000 listeners in a single month!

• • •

Lt. Wayne Morris has returned to his screen career at Warner Bros. with a brand new contract. He enlisted in the navy immediately after Pearl Harbor, and earned his commission while in the service. A fighter pilot with seven enemy planes to his credit, he's won plenty of decorations, among them the Distinguished Flying Cross with two stars and the Air Medal.

WAYNE MORRIS

• • •

When you see Jose Iturbi dashing around on that motorcycle in "Anchors Aweigh" he's just being natural. He drives that same vehicle just that way around the studio all the time—and nobody'll ride with him, not for love, money, or even a new contract.

Una O'Connor, one of Hollywood's most versatile character actresses, makes a good bit of extra money each year by doing the crying for screen babies who refuse to wail when the director wants them to. She calls this extra-curricular profit "tear money" and invests it in war bonds. The voice of the weeping infant in "Christmas in Connecticut" is hers; she also has an on-stage role in the picture.

Those wise men of the motion picture industry, the exhibitors, voted this way in the Motion Picture Herald's annual poll to determine the stars of tomorrow: 1. Dane Clark; 2. Jeanne Crain; 3. Kennan Wynne; 4. Peggy Ann Garner; 5. Cornel Wilde; 6. Tom Drake; 7. Lon McCallister; 8. Diana Lynn; 9. Marilyn Maxwell; 10. William Eythe. That's a prophecy worth remembering.

Eleanor Parker of "Pride of the Marines," who'll have the feminine lead in "Humoresque," is regarded as the shyest star in Hollywood. Doesn't go to night clubs, doesn't show off at public functions, never attends a premiere of her own pictures unless completely disguised.

Tuesday night on NBC is dedicated to laughter. There's Amos 'n Andy at 9:00 p. m., E.P.T.; "A Date with Judy" precedes them, and a climax is reached with Fibber McGee and Molly following.

If you've ever wondered what the studio audience was laughing at, when listening to a broadcast, and felt annoyed because you couldn't share the fun, you'll agree with Kate Smith's manager, Ted Collins, who feels that too many radio stars play up to the studio audience, to the detriment of their radio performances. That's why Kate has eliminated studio audiences on her new Friday night series.

Danny O'Neil has been signed for his first network commercial series as star of the new Powder Box theater, beginning October 11, Thursday nights on CBS. The series replaces "Rhythm, Romance and Ripley." Evelyn Knight and Jim Ameche are also featured.

ODDS AND ENDS—Extras who kissed Shirley Temple in the kissing-booth sequence of Columbia's "Kiss and Tell" were paid $16.50 a day—those who merely stood in line got $10.50. . . . RKO is so enthusiastic about Frankie Carle's first picture, "Riverboat Rhythm," that he'll be starred in a bandleader story. . . . According to the latest Hooper survey, "Mr. District Attorney" ranks second in popularity among all radio programs. . . . For the next two months Ethel Barrymore will play her co-starring role in "Some Must Watch" in bed—the script, not her health, is responsible; Dorothy McGuire and George Brent share honors, on their feet.

Find That Japs Turn Cannibals On Luzon Wilds

Revolting Evidence Found Of Inhuman Acts by Jungle Stragglers.

LUZON.—Strong evidence of cannibalism among isolated Jap stragglers was reported by members of an American patrol returned from the heart of the Sierra Madre mountains.

Officers told of finding one Jap soldier's body mutilated after leaving it unwatched for an hour. They said one of two prisoners taken on their grueling six-day trek pleaded he surrendered to escape the same fate.

The revolting evidence was reported by Capt. Charles Yust of Batson, Texas, who commanded the mountain expedition of 200 38th division troops and 300 Filipinos and Lt. John Banton of Ronceverte, W. Va.

Mutilated Bodies.

"I was leading an advance patrol of 30 men moving along a river when we spotted five Japs," said Yust. "We killed four. The fifth escaped into the jungle but lost his pack and food. When we returned to the four bodies about an hour later, we found that the skin had been peeled from the thigh of one of the dead Japs—a large piece peeled downward from the thigh."

Col. William E. Lobit of Galveston, Texas, regimental commander, said: "There is no organization among scattered Jap groups, even for self-preservation. They don't even share what food they have, but hide it from their comrades."

Yust reported 62 Japs killed on the mission and said many appeared to be still in good health, although usually undernourished. Five in one group had American K rations, which he believed probably were retrieved from a misplaced parachute drop.

Wept When Given Food.

Yust disclosed that one prisoner entered camp, hands aloft, dropping to his knees and bowing. He said the man cried in gratitude after being given food and first aid, telling an interpreter he never was treated so well by his own army.

A second prisoner, English-speaking and self-confident, said Japan would win the war if it had such rations.

Actually, the Japs encountered an American group far from well-fed on this particular mission because planes were unable to penetrate clouds to drop supplies.

The patrol carried rations for only three days. On the fifth and sixth days many men had only half of one meal of canned ration for a full day. Rain and river-wading added to their discomfort.

Lt. William Gray of Jonesboro, Tenn., said: The Japs were eating bamboo roots and I was beginning to wonder how I was going to like 'em."

Crime Rose 8.4% in Year, Survey by FBI Reports

WASHINGTON. — The Federal Bureau of Investigation reported recently an increase of 8.4 per cent in crime from January to July compared with the same period last year.

A survey by the FBI based on statistics from 392 cities of more than 25,000 population showed these increases:

Murder and non-negligent homicide, 4.3 per cent; 9 per cent in rape, 10 per cent in robbery, 11.3 per cent in aggravated assault, 12.1 per cent in burglary, 7.9 per cent in larceny, and 4.6 per cent in automobile theft. On the other hand, negligent man-slaughter declined 1.6 per cent.

A comparison of records covering crime in cities of more than 100,000 population for the first six months of the prewar year, 1939, with the same period of 1945 showed an increase this year of 46.2 per cent in aggravated assault, 35.7 per cent in rape, and 14.5 per cent in automobile theft, the report added.

Nose-Gunner No More, Skunk Is Bomber Pet

PRATT, KAN.—Mascot for one B-29 bomber crew at Pratt army air base is P. U. Flyaway—a defumed skunk.

Popularly known among the crew members as "P.U."—others are inclined to view him a little doubtfully—Flyaway has 43 hours flying time.

The crew had hoped to take the little non-stinker into combat over Japan.

"We would love Flyaway even if he weren't deodorized," said Capt. John A. Maksimiuk, skipper.

His Timepiece Didn't Stand Still on Trolley

CHICAGO.—Dr. David P. Boder, a psychiatrist, reported to police the loss of a memorial watch he had had 20 years. He noticed it was missing after alighting from a crowded streetcar.

Six hours later John Kelly called the doctor at home and said he had found the timepiece, inscribed with Boder's name, hanging to his coat button. A fraternity key on the chain had looped the button, pulling the watch with it.

'Rain of Fire' Just Spanish Girl's Prank

MADRID.—The civil governor of Almeria province said a 15-year-old girl had confessed spreading petroleum on the ground near the isolated mountain village of Laroya, resulting in the mysterious "rain of fire" which caused three separate government expeditions to be sent to the area recently.

Bootleggers Take Trip Into Texas

Fantastic Experiences Are Their Portion.

AUSTIN, TEXAS.—The legendary loss of a kingdom for want of a nail for a horse's shoe was not much more fantastic than the consequences of two Mexican bootleggers' lighthearted trip into Texas with three ponies loaded with liquor and an unsuspected supercargo.

Here's what resulted from the two peons' trip across the Mexican border the night of April 28:

A total of 765,810 acres in four Texas counties are under rigid quarantine. Nearly 25,000 head of livestock must be completely dipped in an antiseptic solution every two weeks for a period of five to nine months. None of the livestock—including thousands of head of beef cattle—can be moved or sold during the quarantine. Ranchmen, the four counties, and the state have been put to a cost restrainedly described as "extremely high and most regrettable."

Among authorities concerned with the incident are the United States marshal, federal immigration officers, inspectors of the bureau of animal husbandry, the state sanitary livestock commission, and brand inspectors of the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers' association.

All this trouble stemmed, not from the bootleg liquor, but from the little stowaways on the ponies—the dread fever ticks which spread disease and are a menace to the health of livestock where they are found.

The three infested ponies dropped mature ticks wherever they went during their 10-day jaunt through the counties of Webb, Zapata, Duval, and Jim Hogg, thus exposing to infection all the livestock in that area.

The Mexicans were captured en route home by immigration men. Discovering that the ponies were infested with ticks, the immigration inspectors called in federal and state livestock sanitary officials. The Mexicans then led the officers over the route they had followed on their "little business trip" into Texas.

Under the policy of the Texas livestock sanitary commission a tick quarantine is imposed not only on all pastures traversed by tick infected animals but on all adjacent pasture lands.

Tar Travels Half Around Globe to Save Brother

HARTFORD, CONN. — A sailor who traveled nearly half-way around the world won commutation of a death sentence to life imprisonment for a brother he said he hadn't "seen in years."

In an unprecedented second hearing before the state board of pardons, Seaman 1/c Roger Peterson, 19, made an eloquent plea for the life of Royal S. Peterson, 21, who was to have died for the first degree murder of Matthew Wior, Manchester jeweler.

A previous plea by Royal Peterson for commutation was denied by the board, chairman of which is Gov. Raymond E. Baldwin, himself a naval lieutenant in the First World war.

His Barn Disappears One Piece at a Time

HOUSTON, TEXAS. — Walter C. Clifton complained to authorities, "Parties are stealing my sheet metal barn by tearing it down piece by piece. It's smaller every morning."

Deputies discovered a relative of Clifton's had sold the barn and the new owner was taking it away in chunks and reconstructing it on his own property. Clifton was managing the property where the barn stood and didn't know it had been sold.

Parents Had Forgotten Something—'Twas Baby!

LATROBE, PA. — Mrs. Joseph McLaughlin had just said good-bye to her son-in-law and daughter, Lt. and Mrs. George Blinebury, at the station. As the train was ready to pull out, they discovered they had forgotten something. Mrs. McLaughlin was still holding their nine-month-old baby. A conductor came to the rescue and got the child just in time.

Boy, 14, Admits Theft Of 17 Autos; Loots Others

CINCINNATI. — A 14-year-old boy admitted to FBI agents that he had stolen 17 autos and looted 110 others since the first of the year.

The youth was arraigned on charges of violating the national auto theft act. He was accused of taking the car to help his escape from the Starr camp, Bellevue, Mich., where he was confined on an auto theft charge.

LOVE FOR GOD AND LOVE FOR MAN

LESSON TEXT—Luke 10:25-37.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself.—Luke 10:27.

"What shall I do?" The question of the lawyer in our lesson is a query which is on the lips or in the minds of millions of men and women each day. They want to do right and want to be right, but their lives lack the direction which only faith in God can give them.

Never does the question go more deeply than when it concerns man's eternal welfare, as it does in our lesson. Always that question indicates that man is not able to decide for himself, and needs the guidance of someone greater and wiser than he. This should lead us back to God, for only He can fully answer it.

The story of the Good Samaritan tell us what we must do to show our love for God and man, and gives a demonstration of how it is to be done.

I. What to Do (vv. 25-28).

The lawyer (a student of the law of Moses, and hence a theologian rather than an attorney) was posing a question to try to entrap Jesus. He was apparently not much concerned about eternal life and assumed that it could be obtained by doing something.

We know that eternal life is a gift (John 1:12; Rom. 6:23), but if the man wanted to have it by doing, Jesus was ready to meet him. In response to Jesus' question (v. 26), the lawyer gave Him what the Jews regarded as the summary of the whole law.

The man who can perfectly keep that law will have eternal life, declares Jesus. But note that you must do it, not just talk about it. And you must keep the whole law, "for whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet stumble in one point, he is become guilty of all" (James 2:10, R.V.; see also Gal. 3:10).

Observe that the commandment, so highly commended by our Lord, concerns a true love for God which shows in an active love for one's fellowman.

Love is the only thing that can save our bruised and bleeding world. How sad it is that in such an hour of need there is so little said in the church about love and it is practiced even less. It is the forgotten fundamental of all the fundamentals of faith! Let us begin to preach it and practice it!

II. How to Do It (vv. 29-37).

It is one thing to realize that one ought to do a thing; it is quite another thing to do it. Here we have what may have been an actual incident given by our Lord as an object lesson of the right and the wrong attitude toward a fellowman in need.

1. The Wrong Attitude (vv. 29-32).

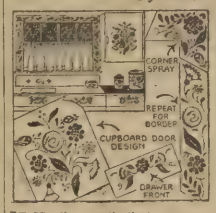
The lawyer's effort to justify himself by diverting attention to the word "neighbor," which he felt needed definition, showed that he could not do the thing expected of him.

The reason for man's failure lies primarily in his own weakness and inability to do what God requires, but is also revealed in his pitiable and futile efforts to justify himself.

The one who seeing his sinfulness and his utter inability to keep God's law casts himself on the Lord is ready to receive the gift of eternal life. But the one who tries to defend his position and justify himself has shut the door on God's grace and mercy (see Luke 18:9-14).

The parable of the Good Samaritan answers fully and finally the question, "Who is my neighbor?" by making it clear that anyone who is in need, regardless of race, social position, condition or religion, is our neighbor.

The priest and the Levite doubtless had plenty of excuses for not helping the wounded man, but let us remember that excuses, while they may count with men, mean only our condemnation in the presence of God.



2. The Right Spirit.

It was the spirit of Christ that made the Samaritan show a compassionate and sacrificial interest in the needy man. Only Christ can make you and me like that. His love in the heart is the only "good neighbor program" that will ever work.

Statesmen, philosophers — yes, and the man in the street — of our day are looking hither and yon for an answer to the world's need. They all sense that we must have something great, and tender, and powerful to unite the hearts of men, or we shall soon be in conflict again. The next time we may well write civilization off the globe. What is the answer? Love! First, a real love for God, then love for our fellowmen of all nations. The answer to the world's awful problem is a revival of Christian faith; without it we perish.

Bright Garden Flower Decorations To Make Your Kitchen Gay and Cozy

IT IS all a myth that your new kitchen must be cold and clinical. It may be as gay and cozy as you like and your modern equipment will settle right down and be perfectly at home. So, if you have ever wished that you could have bright flowers on your cupboard doors, drawer fronts and canisters, go right ahead. You can even have them twining around the window and door frames and on the furniture. What is more, you can paint them yourself with the painting pattern shown here and have a lot of fun doing it.

• • •

These garden posies are of the type used in all peasant art—simple in design, gay in color. All you have to do is to trace the outlines from the pattern and then fill them in following the color guide. The pattern may be used over and over, and there are motifs of different sizes. You may want to use them for decorating kitchen linens and gifts for Christmas too. A list of materials and full directions are included.

Ardent Bogota Sport Fans Douse Fallen Toreador

When the umpire calls a bad one at the baseball game, you could wish you were in Bogota, capital of Colombia, South America.

In Bogota the principal sport is bullfighting. If the toreador doesn't please the bootblacks—who are the most ardent bull-ring fans in the city—the boys rush into the arena and take the fallen hero to a nearby fountain where he is properly cooled off.

"STOPPED TAKING DAILY LAXATIVES"

After 15 years' dosing now eat KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN"

Constipated? Given up hope of finding lasting, gentle relief? Then read this unsolicited letter:—

"I am a rural letter carrier. For more than 15 years I used a laxative every night. About a year and a half ago a good friend suggested that I try KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN. I did so—with the result that I have not taken a pill since. I eat ALL-BRAN generously every day. I find it a great help." John H. Martin, Westminster, Maryland.

Wouldn't you like to be able to be regular without ever resorting to harsh laxatives again? You may — if your constipation is due to lack of bulk in the diet! Just eat a dish of delicious KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN every day, and drink plenty of water! If not satisfied, send empty carton to Kellogg's of Battle Creek. You'll receive double the money you paid for it! ALL-BRAN is not a purgative. It's a naturally regulating food made from the vital outer layers of wheat. It provides gentle-acting bulk that promotes normal, easy laxation.

Get this delicious food at your grocer's. Ask for KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN, the cereal that brings lasting relief to millions. Made by Kellogg's of Battle Creek and Omaha.

MACEDONIA

There was a real good crowd started to singing school Saturday night.

We did not have many at prayer service and B.T.U Sunday night, the devotional was lead by Mrs. Elizabeth Davenport.

Mr. and Mrs. Doyle Thacker and children, Peggy and Johnny, of Birmingham, visited Mr. and Mrs. Pratt Crumpton this week end.

Pfc. Paul Davenport has a discharge from the Service and is at home with his parents. He has been in service over four years and overseas two years. Everyone is glad that Paul returned safe and sound.
